HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 30, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God our Heavenly Father, we wait upon Thee for wisdom, strength, courage, fortitude; to guide, uphold, and sustain us as individuals and as a Nation in the present world-wide crisis.

To this end bless our soldiers, sailors, marines, aviators, and all the heroic men and women who are sacrificing themselves for the good of humanity.

Open the eyes, we pray Thee, of the enemies of civilization, that they may see the wrong and suffering they have thrust upon the world; that they may repent and make restitution so far as they can, cease to do evil and learn to do well; that brotherly love may prevail not only as a theory but as a reality; that the precepts which have come down to us out of the past in the "Ten Great Commandments," the "Sermon on the Mount," the "Prodigal Son," and the "Good Samaritan," may have their sway in all the earth; in His Name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, on pages 9657 and 9658 of the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, where two letters of the President and a letter of mine were printed, the letter of the President, dated August 22, which was read first and should have been printed in the RECORD first was printed last. I ask unanimous consent to transpose the letters, and that they be reprinted in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings in the order in which they were read, in the order of their date, and that the interruption occurring where my time expired while my letter was being read may be stricken out, so that the letter may be printed as a whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the correction of the RECORD in the manner he has stated. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand exactly what change the gentleman desires.

Mr. SIMS. The letter of the President of August 22, which was read first, was printed last.

Mr. GILLETT. That is not a very serious matter.

Mr. SIMS. The letter written on August 26, which was in reply to my letter, is printed before my letter, and my letter is printed between the two letters of the President. Now, I want them printed in the order in which they were read.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that that transposition could be made easily without reprinting the letters, so that they would appear in the permanent RECORD in their proper order.

Mr. SIMS. That can be done easily, but I want this correction because these letters will be used during the consideration of this bill, perhaps, but not to-day, and I would like to have them in the order in which they were actually read.

Mr. GILLETT. All the letters appear in full in the RECORD, although their order is transposed. Anybody who wishes to refer to any one of the letters can easily do so. It seems to me that when gentlemen on that side are preaching economy in the use of paper the reprint is superfluous.

Mr. SIMS. I would not ask for it if it was only my own letter, but the President's first letter was printed last, and the President's last letter was printed first.

Mr. GILLETT. They will be put in their proper order in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. But we want to use the letters during this debate.

Mr. GILLETT. If I thought it was in any way disrespectful to the President I certainly should not object, but if the House has not the intelligence to use these letters in their proper order then the House has not sufficient intelligence to debate this bill.

Mr. SIMS. The daily RECORD goes out to libraries and to thousands of people.

Mr. GILLETT. The copies of the RECORD containing these letters have already gone.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, I can accomplish this by reading the letters in my own time, but I do not wish to do that.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman may do that if he sees proper, but I shall object to a reprint.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question in relation to this matter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and that is the end of that.

Mr. SINNOTT. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. What is the date of the gentleman's letter to the President?

Mr. SIMS. The same date as the President's first letter to me, August 22. I explained it all yesterday.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand that some 2 or 3 weeks or 10 days prior to the date of the gentleman's letter the gentleman had a talk with the President about this matter.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman is misinformed.

Mr. SINNOTT. My information came from the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. From myself?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman misunderstood me. I can state the facts if the gentleman will permit me to do so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report (H. Rept. No. 764) on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has a preferential matter.

Mr. SISSON. I call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met have been unable to agree.

THOS. U. SISSON,
JAMES MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
CHAS. CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1, the half-and-half amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman, I take it, wants to move that we recede from our motion to adhere?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. And agree to the Senate amendment No. 1?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to make that motion?

Mr. SISSON. I want to make the motion that the House recede from its adherence to its disagreement on the half-and-half amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. I desire to present to the Speaker for the purpose of information the parliamentary status. On July 2, 1918, this matter was before the House on a motion by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to recede.

The SPEAKER. What was the matter before the House?

Mr. GARD. The matter before the House was the amendment to the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment?

Mr. GARD. No; the amendment made in the House, adopted in Committee of the Whole and ratified by the House. When it came on for final disposition the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] moved to recede.

The SPEAKER. To recede from what?

Mr. GARD. To recede from the action of the House in changing the status of the legislative appropriation part, in so far as it took away the principle of the so-called half-and-half method and the distribution according to taxes received and balance paid.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the status as I now understand, with the gentleman's permission, is this. When the bill was presented to the House the Gard amendment went on which put in an amendment doing away with the half and half.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to get the situation so that he can put the question.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me, I will read it to the Speaker. The Speaker said, as will be found on page 8647 of the RECORD—

The vote will be taken on the preferential motion made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. What was Senate amendment No. 1?

Mr. GARD. Amendment No. 1 was put on in the House, and to that the Senate disagreed. Then the motion of Mr. RAKER was to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. What was the Senate amendment?

Mr. GARD. Embodying again the principle of the half and half by striking out the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. And offered nothing in its place?

Mr. SISSON. Nothing.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment No. 1 was the amendment of the Senate striking out the House provision which struck out the half-and-half principle.

Mr. GARD. That is it. Now, a vote on the question was taken, and on a division and a subsequent roll call, in which the House determined not to recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was to recede, and a roll call was had upon it and the House voted his motion down?

Mr. GARD. That is it. Then on page 8648 of the RECORD this language appears. This was after the motion of the gentleman from California, Mr. RAKER, was voted down:

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I take it the question now is upon my motion to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that motion to recede and concur having been voted down, would make a vote upon the gentleman's motion unnecessary.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I think undoubtedly the voting down of the motion to concur is tantamount to insistence, but it is not tantamount to the gentleman's motion to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia is correct, upon reflection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to adhere to the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 1.

The motion was agreed to.

Then, further down, it said that—

On motion of Mr. SISSON a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House wished to adhere on the disagreement of the House the Senate amendments numbered 1, 61, and 83 were laid on the table.

I present these matters so that the Chair may be advised of the parliamentary status. I appear in nowise as an obstructionist, but I want the House to understand what has been done so that it can proceed in an orderly manner.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to speak for about two minutes? In framing up the present appropriation bill for the District of Columbia the committee adhered in all ways to the present law concerning the half-and-half principle and made no changes in the law at all. When the bill came on the floor the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] struck out the half-and-half provision, in substance, and that amendment provided another method for the payment of these expenses of the District of Columbia. That was the position when we went into conference upon the bill. The Senate struck out the Gard amendment and left the bill exactly as it came from the House Appropriations Committee. That amendment is Senate amendment No. 1. I am informed that the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], desires to make a motion to concur in the Senate amendment No. 1, which would leave the appropriation bill as it was when it came before the House originally from the Appropriations Committee of the House. Senate amendment No. 1 is what we now desire to concur in, to leave the bill exactly as it was when it was first presented to the House, without the Gard amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and agree to the same.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman having made that motion, I make the point of order that the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi, as I have disclosed the record, is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi wish to be heard?

Mr. SISSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its vote to adhere and vacate its order adhering to its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the committee met and had a conference and has reported the result of that conference. There is a disagreement. Is that right?

Mr. SISSON. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. Now, it seems to me, that being the condition, we should act upon the report of the committee; and as to the former action of the House in voting to adhere we should move to reconsider that vote and lay it on the table.

Mr. SISSON. It is upon that theory that I am making that motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 1. If that is not done, then the House finds itself in the position of having to vacate this order. Yesterday afternoon I asked unanimous consent to vacate the order, but at that time we did not have the conference report. We now have the conference report, and, having it here, I am now moving as an original proposition that the House recede from its position on amendment No. 1 and concur in the same.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think that is the proper motion, because a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the House adhered, as I understand it, and that motion was laid on the table. All that is vacated because you had this conference and failed to agree, and now the conferees make their report and that sets aside the former proceedings.

Mr. SISSON. I will state that is the theory upon which I am proceeding, that the House, having agreed to the conference, going into conference, and disagreeing, we now come back with the report of the conferees disagreeing to Senate amendment No. 1, and it is on that conference report that I am now making this motion to recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that the motion is in order.

Mr. GILLETT. And may I suggest that unless that is the fact, if the House once deciding to adhere binds itself forever, no matter what reports may be made, it would very much hamper conferences. It seems to me the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is correct, that the conference committee having reported, that practically of itself vacates the previous order to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion to adhere was carried, the Chair presumes, upon a roll call.

Mr. SISSON. It was.

The SPEAKER. And then in order to tie the thing up—that is evidently what was intended—the gentleman from Mississippi moved to reconsider that vote and to lay that motion on the table. It seems to the Chair that the only way to rescue the House from that situation is through the fact that a new conference was ordered, and the conferees started in de novo as far as this particular thing is concerned. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is in order. If it were not, we would be tied up so that we never could get out of the tangle.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. What is the parliamentary status? I made a point of order to the first motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi and the Chair has not ruled on that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that out of order, and the last one also.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Did the gentleman from Mississippi file his conference report this morning?

Mr. SISSON. It is one of those conference reports where we failed of agreement, and it is not a conference report which has to be filed a day in advance. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same, and I want the House to understand that in making the motion I am not in any way conceding that the half-and-half principle is sound. Nor does the House commit itself upon that proposition. We are simply receding upon this amendment at this time for the purpose of getting this bill through. I am not going to take up the time of the House in explanation of the many things in this bill which are absolutely essential and necessary. That was debated at some length yesterday.

Mr. WEBB. Will we not meet this same situation the next time when this appropriation is under consideration?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so. In the first place the garbage matter will not be in the same situation, nor will the situation be the same in respect to the school system, and I could mention many other things. Unless the matter is adjusted and the bill becomes a law, in my judgment the matter of salaries will cause nearly all of the employees of the District of Columbia to leave the District employment and seek employment in other departments of the Government, leaving the District of Columbia without a government.

However much I may be opposed to the half-and-half principle, I am unwilling to insist that that law shall be changed on this appropriation bill when the District government will suffer, and no man knows to what extent. If I even thought it would mean simply the suffering of people on small salaries, I might even then be willing to visit that punishment upon them; but we are confronted, as the commissioners will show, with men keeping their positions upon the idea that they would get the raise in salary granted in this bill. If this bill does not become a law, we are likely to lose the majority of the employees of the District of Columbia through their seeking other employment. I am unwilling to assume that responsibility, and I ask the House to agree with me for this time, for I think we should make this recession and let this bill become a law. I am going to move to further insist upon these other amendments, and I am not going to ask for a conference at this time, because I do not believe we ought under any consideration to ever concur in the Keller amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. The motion is to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same. The motion is not to recede from our adherence. We can not renew that, because a motion to reconsider the vote by which we adhere was made, and that motion laid on the table, but it was all vacated when it went to conference again and the conference report came in, and we now take up the matter de novo.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What becomes, under this motion of the gentleman, of the action of the House which I read, by which the House definitely determined its motion to adhere, a motion to reconsider which vote was made and laid on the table, which has not been vacated?

The SPEAKER. They had a new conference and started de novo, and the motion of the gentleman, the Chair thinks, is in order.

Mr. GARD. I am not advised of their having a new conference or of anything being done after the motion to adhere was made.

The SPEAKER. How did the conference report get back here?

Mr. GARD. I do not know how it got back here. There is nothing of record to show it has ever got back here.

Mr. SISSON. Here is the conference report.

Mr. GARD. Where is it?

Mr. SISSON. Here it is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is none. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken and there were—yeas 216, nays 22, answered "present" 2, not voting 190, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BOOHER with Miss RANKIN.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. SWITZER.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. HOLLAND with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. WARD.

Mr. EAGAN with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. WILSON of Texas with Mr. FARR.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. PADGETT with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. FULLER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement with the Senate on amendments numbered 61 and 83.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 61 and 83.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, except so far as they relate to the support of the Army, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of September, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, when this matter came up yesterday I stated my reasons for objecting. It was mainly because I thought the annual District appropriation bill ought to be passed and not a continuing resolution like this adopted. Now the House has concurred in Senate amendment No. 1 of the regular bill and sent it over to the Senate, but if this resolution should be adopted now it seems to me it would have the effect to take away the pressure from the Senate to recede from their amendments and pass the regular appropriation bill. And it seems to me the same motive which has induced the House—many Members against their wishes and opinions—to vote in favor of the Senate amendment No. 1 ought to be left in force upon the Senate to compel the Senators to vote down the two amendments which they have put on the bill and which the House thinks ought not to be there and then pass the bill. And, therefore, it seems to me the wise thing is to let the bill we have just considered go over to the Senate alone and unaccompanied by this resolution, and put it up to the Senate either to withdraw from their action on the two amendments, which we think they ought to recede from, or have no appropriation for the coming year. Therefore, unless the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has some new suggestion to make which will change my mind, I shall object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no more interest in this matter than has, of course, any other Member of the House, but it is extremely important that provision be made for the conduct of the Department of Agriculture, in particular, during the month of September, and also for the District of Columbia in the event no bill is passed.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield? I will make no objection at all to a resolution continuing the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, the situation is just this: I received on yesterday a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, inclosing copy of letter which he had written to Mr. SHERLEY, the chairman of the committee, setting forth the importance of passing some continuing resolution for the month of September, inasmuch as it appeared to be impossible to prepare and introduce and pass through the House and Senate an appropriation bill before August 31. I am going to ask that that letter be read in order to show the importance of the adoption of this amendment, because if gentlemen of the House are willing to take the responsibility of taking the risk of stopping the activities of the Department of Agriculture throughout the country, not only in the city of Washington but in every State of this Union, and the efforts of the Department of Agriculture to further the production of food for the maintenance and supply of our soldiers abroad in this war, they can take the responsibility, but I do not care to do so.

Now, as to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]——

Mr. GILLETT. Before the gentleman leaves that will he not let me state that I agree with him entirely as to that, and if he brings in a resolution for the Agricultural appropriation bill I will have no objection to it at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me say this with reference to the District of Columbia government: The gentleman made the point yesterday, as did other gentlemen on the floor, that the House ought to recede from its action in doing away with the half and half. That action has been taken in good faith by the House. The House has done all it possibly can to relieve the situation and pass the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Now, I am informed—and I do not know whether it is true or not—that there is a possibility that the Senate may not be in session to-morrow. The gentleman knows, and I was told by a prominent officer of the District of Columbia this morning, that unless something is done there is going to be great confusion in the government of the District of Columbia on next Monday and the first of the week. It is no trouble for employees to get positions elsewhere, and if employees of the District of Columbia are not satisfied in their own minds that they are going to continue to be paid there is a possibility that some of them may quit.

Now, I have my own idea that the Senate will recede from the two amendments upon which the House has insisted. I have information from certain Senators which leads me to think that that will be done, but we have no guaranty that that bill can be enrolled and actually signed and become a law before next Monday or Tuesday. We do not know when it may become a law, and if it does become a law this resolution does not amount to anything.

It seems to me, therefore, that the House ought to relieve itself of any possible responsibility in the matter by adopting this resolution and sending it over, and let the Senate take whatever responsibility it cares to take in the premises. I have no more interest in this than has any other Member of the House. I simply offered the resolution. If gentlemen want to object to it, it is their privilege; but I think, so far as I am concerned, I have relieved myself of any possible criticism.

Mr. SISSON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I agree with my friend in the main that the House ought to put itself in a position where it can be relieved from any results that might flow from failure of any one of these departments to have proper funds with which to conduct its business. But, in reference to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in my judgment the result will be just about as bad if the Senate fails to pass the bill we have sent to them, because under a promise from the District Commissioners a good many people have kept their places up until this time. Therefore I do not think the failure on the part of the Senate to act, even if the resolution should pass, would cure many of the evils that would flow from the failure on the part of the Senate to immediately pass our bill. And I believe under all the circumstances it might be well for the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is quite a difference, I will say to the gentleman, in the mind of any employee who is dependent upon what he makes for a living as to the question of whether or not he is to get some slight increase that has been given him or whether he is not to be paid at all for what he does—men who have to work from day to day in order to provide for the support of themselves and family. They have been fed on these promises, and I think the House ought to put itself on record and let these employees of the District government understand, if the Senate fails to take action, that, so far as the House is concerned, they will be paid. It is certainly a guaranty of good faith to the employees of the District.

Mr. SISSON. I will say this to my friend, that I do not believe that the passage of that resolution would facilitate the passage of the District appropriation bill. It may tend to hamper it somewhat in the Senate. However, I do not know that the Senate will hesitate one moment to pass the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this letter to Mr. SHERLEY be read.

Mr. GILLETT. What is the date of it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. August 19.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have read a letter for Mr. SHERLEY. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, August 19, 1918.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SHERLEY: As you perhaps know, the bill making appropriations for the regular activities of the department during the fiscal year 1919 is still pending in Congress. The emergency food-production bill for 1919 has passed the House and is pending in the Senate. In the absence of Secretary Houston, I am writing to call your attention to the urgent necessity of renewing for the month of September the continuing resolution of July 8, 1918, if these measures, or either of them, are not enacted into law before August 31. If the regular bill should pass before that time, it is highly essential that provision be made for continuing the appropriations made by section 8 of the food-production act of August 10, 1917. This act, as you know, provides for the very vital emergency activities of the department, and it would be highly unfortunate if it should become necessary to discontinue any of the work inaugurated under its provision, especially during the crop season, when there should be no let-up whatever in the production, marketing, and conservation work of the department.

Very truly, yours,

CLARENCE OUSLEY,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] either willfully or accidentally—I presume accidentally—misunderstood me. I recognize the importance of the agricultural extension work. I think myself that the regular Agricultural appropriation bill ought to have been passed before the 1st of September, but it has not been done, and therefore I am perfectly willing that a resolution extending last year's appropriations should be passed, although it would be better for the country if the new appropriations were in force rather than the old ones. But I agree to that resolution. There is no controversy on that point. My only controversy about it and my only objection to this resolution is that what we ought to do is to send this District appropriation bill that we have just passed over to the Senate instead of accompanying it with this resolution.

Now, why did the House abandon its position? Why did we change our vote on the half-and-half proposition? Not because we wished to or because we had changed our minds, but because we recognized it was of the greatest importance that the new appropriation bill should be in force before the 1st of September. Technically the Senate had the right to say that we were putting on the appropriation bill a new measure and that therefore we were the ones who should abandon the half-and-half proposition, and they insisted that we must change our ground. Now, we send it back with two Senate amendments to which we do not agree. The very same argument which compelled the House to abandon its wishes as to the half-and-half proposition ought to compel the Senate to abandon their wishes as to those two amendments, and I can not believe that the Senate is so reckless of its duties and that they will so injure the District as not to pass this bill. But if we pass the extension resolution I confess I am afraid that the Senate, when they have the choice of passing the resolution or passing the appropriation bill without their pet amendments will not pass the bill and give us the new appropriations for the new year, which ought to be in force immediately, but will pass the extension resolution. In that case we would not have gained anything by abandoning our ground about the half and half. Therefore I want to bring the same pressure on the Senate which we, from our sense of duty, felt and compel the Senate to subordinate their wishes to their sense of duty, as we have, and abandon their amendments and pass the appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. An extension resolution has to originate in the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And if the House does not pass an extension resolution and the Senate fails to enact the appropriation bill, then they will throw upon this House the burden and responsibility of having no appropriation next week, because they will say it was up to the House to pass the resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is up to the Senate to pass the bill we have sent over to them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is all very well for the gentleman to argue, but——

Mr. GILLETT. I am willing to take my share of the responsibility in putting that on the Senate. I shall object to the passage of this resolution and hope thereby to compel the immediate passage of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a little time in which to address the House.

Mr. SISSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, known as the water-power bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, known as the water-power bill, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the words defined in this section shall have the following meanings when found in this act, to wit:

"Public lands" means such lands and interest in lands owned by the United States as are subject to private appropriation and disposal under public-land laws. It shall not include "reservations," as hereinafter defined.

"Reservations" means lands and interest in lands owned by the United States and withdrawn, reserved, or withheld from private appropriation and disposal under the public-land laws, and lands and interest in lands acquired and held for any public purpose.

"Corporation" means a corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States, empowered to develop, transmit, distribute, or utilize power, and authorized to transact in the State or States in which its project is located all business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act. It shall not include "municipalities" as hereinafter defined.

"State" means a State admitted to the Union, the District of Columbia, and any organized Territory of the United States.

"Municipality" means a city, county, irrigation district, drainage district, or other political subdivision of a State, competent under the laws thereof to carry on the business of developing, transmitting, utilizing, or distributing power.

"Municipal purposes" means and includes all purposes within municipal powers as defined by the constitution or laws of the State or by the charter of the municipality.

"Navigable waters" means all streams or parts of streams, and other bodies of water or parts thereof, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

"Navigation dam" means a dam or other work, constructed or owned by the United States for the improvement of navigation, with or without contribution from others, from which flows surplus water not needed for navigation that may be disposed of under the provisions of this act.

"Project" means a complete unit of improvement or development, consisting of a power house, all water conduits, all dams and appurtenant works and structures (including navigation structures) which are a part of said unit, and all storage, diverting, or forebay reservoirs directly connected therewith, the primary line or lines transmitting power therefrom to the point of junction with the distribution system or with the interconnected primary transmission system, all miscellaneous structures used and useful in connection with said unit or any part thereof, and all water rights, rights of way, ditches, dams, reservoirs, lands, or interest in lands, the use and occupancy of which are necessary or appropriate in the maintenance and operation of such unit.

"Project works" means the physical structures of a project.

"Net investment" in a project means the actual legitimate original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the "Classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission," plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for additions or betterments. The term "cost" shall include in so far as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of lines 1 to 18, inclusive, on page 27. Then I want to ask for an agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMS: Page 27, strike out all of lines 1 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not make some agreement about this matter as to the time to be used in discussion and to consider section 14, in so far as it is affected by this or any other portion of the bill, following this definition and connected with it. I frankly confess that, so far as I know, whatever controversy exists in relation to this bill hinges largely on the adoption of this amendment as to net investment and the use of that to determine the amount to be paid on recapture, instead of that portion of the bill which was stricken out and amended by this.

Mr. ESCH. Is it the gentleman's purpose to defer the consideration of his motion until we reach section 14?

Mr. SIMS. No. I am going to ask this: There are so many important matters that come between this and section 14, if we consider this subject matter in connection with section 14, that I want to suggest this proposition: Suppose my motion is voted down. Then, of course, there will be no use in having any contention about the use of it in section 14, because that method of determining the value of property will be finally adopted.

Mr. ESCH. I understood the gentleman that it would be better if we deferred the consideration of the net-investment proposition until we reached section 14, because they are so interrelated that the consideration of section 14 will involve the definition of the net investment. My idea was to pass over the definition of net investment until we reached section 14 and there consider it.

Mr. SIMS. Perhaps the gentleman has looked it up as well as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. Is there anything in the bill between this paragraph and section 14 that would require changes?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then it will be necessary to change that also.

Mr. ESCH. It is subsection (d) of section 10, which is the Houston amendment, basing the amortization reserves on the net investment. So a like motion to pass that over until section 14 is reached will be in order.

Mr. SIMS. I understand the gentleman's proposition to be that we defer action on this motion until we reach section 14, which I think is all right.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And we will also defer action upon any other portion of the bill involving the same question before we reach section 14.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And then take them all up together.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. But when we do take them up, we will first act on the motion to strike out.

Mr. ESCH. I would rather say, pass over the net-investment question.

Mr. SIMS. Rather than make a motion now to strike out. If a motion to strike out was made, there might be motions to amend.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not ask unanimous consent to pass over every feature of the net-investment question, and let it all be considered at one time in connection with the recapture clause, which occurs in sections 14 and 15, and let any motion be made with reference to any one of the paragraphs, or any language that appears in connection with it be passed over, so you will not have to debate the subject every time it occurs in the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course if any other basis of recapture is adopted, this ought to go out, and those who are favoring the net-investment idea would recognize that fact.

Mr. FERRIS. I say, if the old plan of recapture goes in, you would not want this, and if the idea of that side prevails, then, of course, you want everything in harmony with it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that action at any and all times upon this net-investment proposition, which I have moved to strike out, embracing lines 1 to 18, inclusive, on page 27, be passed over until we reach section 14, and that in considering any other portion of the bill involving the same question before we reach section 14, action upon those sections or paragraphs, whatever they may be, may also be deferred until we reach section 14; and that when we reach section 14 we then take up these several sections or paragraphs that have been passed over and act on them at one time, giving preference to the order in which the paragraphs appear.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think it would be better to pass over this paragraph now and then take care of the other matters as they are reached?

Mr. SIMS. If that is to be the proceeding, I would rather settle it right now, because it is the chief corner stone of the whole thing.

Mr. WALSH. I mean to take care of passing them over as they are reached.

Mr. SIMS. No; let us have an agreement that covers the whole subject matter.

Mr. WALSH. There may be some objection to that.

Mr. SIMS. I have adopted the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. WALSH. I am not objecting; but it seems to me that the orderly way would be, when you reach subsection (d) of section 10, if you wish it passed over, to ask to have it passed over; and do the same with reference to the others as they are reached.

Mr. SIMS. My idea is to pass over this and that we get an agreement that the others be passed over when they are reached.

Mr. WALSH. That is not what the gentleman said.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I meant. I understand the gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. He has not made any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. SINNOTT: Page 26, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment, in effect, is to strike out the definition of navigable waters. I think it is very unwise to undertake to define navigable waters in this bill. Whether that is so or not, this definition of navigable waters, of course, is not a correct definition. Navigable waters are not waters over which Congress has jurisdiction. Congress at the present time has jurisdiction over all these little nonnavigable feeders running into navigable streams. If you pass this definition, then, under the present law, every time a little mountain stream or nonnavigable feeder is to be bridged, you will either have to come to Congress for permission or to the Secretary of War, provided your State has passed the necessary laws. You will bring all that embarrassment upon local communities. In addition to that, if we can make such a definition as this and the ordinary incidents of navigable waters follow, then you will change the title to land in a great many States. For instance, only a month or so ago there was a very important decision rendered in the State of Oklahoma. The question was whether the Arkansas River was navigable. Had that river been held to be navigable, the State of Oklahoma would have received title to very valuable oil lands under the bed of the river; but the court held that the stream at the point in question was not navigable, and that therefore the oil under the bed of the stream belonged to a tribe of Indians. The water in question was under the jurisdiction of Congress. The stream lower down is navigable. Congress could protect the navigation of the stream lower down by going up the stream to its source, and enacting laws and regulations controlling the water above the point of navigability. So, therefore, I think this definition ought to go out.

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will.

Mr. DILL. What would be the means of determining the meaning of navigable waters if this is stricken out?

Mr. SINNOTT. From the decisions of the court which says that streams are navigable if navigable in fact.

Mr. DILL. I agree that this is not a correct definition, but I wondered if some definition ought not to be put in the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not know of anyone omniscient enough to perfect a definition of navigable waters.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Let me preface my question by a statement. In the State of Maine, under the decisions, we have three classes of streams—navigable streams, so called, which are declared navigable according to the rule of the old common law, streams where the tide ebbs and flows. Then we have purely private streams, and in between the two a large intermediate class of streams which we call floatable streams. In determining whether a stream is navigable or not there is more involved than the question of transportation. There is involved, for instance, the question of title to adjoining land, whether the title runs to the thread of the stream or only to the banks, and there is involved the title to the ice which forms over the bed of the river.

My question is whether, in the case of a stream wholly within the boundaries of the State, and determined by the court of last resort of that States as to the character of the stream, the decision of the court is final or whether the Secretary of War or some one else can override the determination of the supreme court of the State, and say that the decision of the court is not in fact the law?

Mr. SINNOTT. If the stream is wholly within the State, Congress has no jurisdiction over it. Congress has jurisdiction by virtue of the commerce clause in the Constitution to control interstate navigation. But you may think that a stream is wholly within your State, but if it flows into some interstate stream——

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I do not put that case. Here is a stream wholly within the State of Maine, and emptying into the Atlantic Ocean, and on which there is more or less commerce. The State of Maine may hold that it is a floatable stream and not a navigable stream. I want to know whether the decision of the court of Maine fixes the character of that stream or whether some one in Washington or the Supreme Court of the United States may review the findings of the court of Maine and reach another conclusion? I would like the opinion from some lawyer on the committee with respect to that.

Mr. SIMS. If gentlemen will allow me to express my own individual views about the matter, I have no objection whatever to the amendment, so far as it undertakes to define navigable water, but I want to submit this thought; the Senate bill to which this is a substitute does have a definition. It might possibly be—I will submit this to the gentleman's consideration—that we should adopt this or something else. If we are going to adopt any amendment whatever to the Senate definition of navigable waters, that should be done now.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not think we should attempt to define navigable waters at all.

Mr. SIMS. I concur with the gentleman, but there is a definition in the Senate bill, and this is a Senate bill, and we are considering a substitute for it. If we offer no amendment to the Senate bill, will we have jurisdiction over the question when we go into conference?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, I think so; it would be in disagreement.

Mr. SIMS. I submit it only as a suggestion; I have no objection as a member of the committee to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. It does not leave the Senate definition in if we strike our definition out; this is an entire substitute for the entire Senate bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question and see if I understand the purpose of the section. This is an attempt to define what is meant by navigable waters. Is it the purpose of the committee to declare that navigable waters mean all streams over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce among the several States and also that all parts of such streams shall be considered as navigable?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman asks a difficult question. I expect that he himself has had to consider such matters where it has been held that it is an obstruction to navigation to impede the flow of a tributary of a navigable stream to such an extent that it injures navigation on that navigable stream.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Here you undertake to define something, and if you are going to define a navigable stream you ought to write the definition so that he who runs may read. Here is what you say:

"Navigable waters" means all streams or parts of streams, and other bodies of water or parts thereof, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Does that mean all parts of streams over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce on navigable streams or does it mean all streams over which Congress has jurisdiction? If you are going to write a definition you ought to write it so that everyone can understand it.

Does that mean that part of the stream over which Congress has jurisdiction or does it mean every part of the stream is included, provided Congress has jurisdiction over the stream—in other words, provided it is a navigable stream? The only jurisdiction Congress has is to regulate navigation. You have written a definition here which, in my opinion, does not say a word. It does not throw any light whatever upon the subject, so far as the courts are concerned. When the court comes to construe this, it will read your definition, and your definition the way it is written is that a navigable stream is a navigable stream. You say nothing about the parts of the stream that are not navigable. You do not say it so that it can be understood.

You say:

"Navigable waters" means all streams or parts of streams, and other bodies of water or parts thereof, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Do you mean to include all parts of streams? If so, then it ought to read in this way—

"Navigable waters" means all streams and other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and all parts of such streams and waters.

Then you will have defined something, but I submit to the gentleman that this paragraph as it is written does not throw any light whatever upon the subject, and when the court undertakes to construe it, it will simply read here broadly that "navigable waters" means navigable waters.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to admit that the gentleman is making the very argument that I used before the committee in opposition to this definition—that it does not define specifically. But these definitions are adopted only for the purposes of this act.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understand; but it does not serve any purpose in this act.

Mr. SIMS. And the gentleman thinks it ought to be more specific than it is, and so do I. Therefore, I have not objected to striking it out, but if we do I think we should put something in its place.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Very well. If there is no objection to striking it out, there is no occasion to amend it.

Mr. SIMS. I state that not representing the committee, but speaking from my own personal view. I have no objection to striking it out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Striking it out will not hurt the bill, and leaving it in will not help the bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] contends that the striking out of this paragraph will make no change in the general law defining navigable waters as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I think it would be profitable to inquire into that contention briefly and see if he has interpreted this section correctly. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] defined navigable waters correctly. That is, he gave the description of the Supreme Court correctly, that a navigable stream is navigable in law when it is navigable in fact. The navigability of any stream is to be determined upon the facts applicable to that stream. I think it is also a fair statement that the jurisdiction of Congress over navigable waters depends upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce upon those waters, so that a stream may be navigable and not be within the jurisdiction of Congress. It would not be profitable to go into the question of whether Congress in any particular case would have the power to regulate interstate commerce, because the trend seems to be to say that Congress has power to regulate commerce on a stream even where it is entirely within a State if there is navigation upon that stream in connection with other streams which make it interstate commerce. But coming now to the point to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi, the language in this bill is that all streams or parts of streams over which Congress has jurisdiction under the power to regulate commerce are navigable waters.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. In a moment. It may well be that a stream over which Congress has jurisdiction by reason of its power to regulate commerce may not be a navigable stream for its entire length but only navigable for a part of its length. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], I think it was, cited a case recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in respect to the Arkansas River, where the court held that a certain part of the upper reaches of the stream is nonnavigable, and yet everybody knows that certain parts of the Arkansas River are navigable. So I ask, with respect for the gentleman's opinion, in which I have much confidence, whether this paragraph as it stands now would not have the effect of making certain parts of streams navigable which are not navigable, if the paragraph should be omitted?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I would say in answer to that that it depends entirely upon how the Supreme Court parses this sentence. I do not know just what the word "which," the first word in line 3, refers to. Does that refer to streams or to parts of streams, and is it limited by that other clause "over which Congress has jurisdiction"? In other words, Congress has jurisdiction over the navigable waters, and it says all parts of them "over which Congress has jurisdiction." Congress has jurisdiction over those parts that affect interstate commerce. This statute, if it is intended to give Congress jurisdiction over all the rest of it, ought to be amended. It is impossible from my point of view to determine how the court is going to guess at the meaning Congress has in its mind. If we want to give this commission that is going to regulate water power jurisdiction over all parts of a stream, we ought to word this differently. We ought to say that "navigable waters" means all streams over which Congress has jurisdiction and all parts thereof, but when you put the parts of the streams ahead of this qualifying clause "over which Congress has jurisdiction," it simply limits it to the stream and the part of the stream over which Congress, under the commerce clause, has jurisdiction, and that leaves it wide open just as it is without this definition.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a moment?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Just for one statement, and that is that Congress has already assumed jurisdiction over all nonnavigable feeders or tributaries flowing into a navigable stream in the act which prohibits anyone from placing in the upper reaches of the streams any débris or noisome matter that may flow into the navigable part of the stream.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then if Congress has jurisdiction over the stream from one end to the other under the law, what is the use of putting any definition in here? When the court reads this, it will read it in the light of the law the gentleman has just announced, if it be the law, and say that "navigable waters" means navigable waters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask just one minute more to make this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman from Oregon did not intend to state, I assume, that there is any law of Congress making the entire length of streams navigable if any part of it is navigable. Congress has only legislated in specific cases. There has been no general legislation which would make all of a stream navigable if a part of it is navigable, as applicable to the development of water power.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; the gentleman misunderstood me. What I say is that Congress by act of Congress has already assumed jurisdiction over the upper reaches of nonnavigable tributaries of all navigable streams by prohibiting the placing in the nonnavigable part anything that might flow down to the navigable part.

Mr. SMALL. Yes; but that has no application to water power. This concluding statement, I think, if the committee desires to put under the jurisdiction of this water-power commission the navigable streams, any parts of which are under jurisdiction of Congress, the whole of them under the jurisdiction of the commission, we ought to let this paragraph remain in; otherwise strike it out.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a little misapprehension as to both the purpose and effect of the definition of navigable waters as it appears in the bill. In this definition we are not seeking at all to define the jurisdiction of Congress over the navigable waters, or determine the waters which are navigable within the jurisdiction of Congress. We are seeking to define the jurisdiction of this commission in dealing with navigable waters. In other words, we might, if we had so desired, have limited the jurisdiction of the commission to waters which are navigable in fact. We might have put in other limitations upon the jurisdiction of this commission. The only purpose of this definition is to say that it was the intention to give this commission jurisdiction, and all jurisdiction which the Congress possesses touching navigable streams under the Constitution. We could not have given them more power than that, I think, by well-settled decisions, because the respective right of the Federal Government and the State government touching navigable streams is pretty well settled. We do not seek here to establish a definition which will determine riparian rights or any rights which the State has the right to determine. We only say here that so far as Congress itself could deal with this subject as a matter of legislation the commission may deal with it as a matter of executive administration. It seems to me that is all there is in this proposition. We neither extend nor contract our own power, and therefore the power of the commission, to deal with the entire subject. If, as a matter of law under the Constitution, the Congress itself could not have made a regulation touching a stream because it is nonnavigable, the commission could not make such an order or direction. If the Congress could have made such an order or direction, the commission, under this provision, would have the right to make such an order or direction.

Now, then, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] asked a question which I think was not answered. I do not think that anybody can answer it except the Supreme Court, but it is my judgment that the opinion of the supreme court of a State would not be binding in the determination of the actual navigability of a stream upon the commission created by this act in its undertaking to deal with water-power development. I may be wrong about that. It is my judgment by way of a curbstone opinion.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to close debate upon this amendment if there is no other member of the committee who wants to discuss it. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment and any amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the debate is just about to end on this amendment which is before the committee, but there are other sections in the paragraph which has been under discussion. The gentleman is not trying to cut off debate on that?

Mr. SIMS. I said this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That debate on this amendment shall finish?

Mr. MONDELL. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. SIMS. The request was that debate on this amendment end in five minutes, on the present amendment to strike out the section.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like about three minutes on the amendment, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] want time on this amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I want five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment be closed in 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think the views I entertain have been expressed in possibly better language by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. ANDERSON] than I might express them. That was the view of the committee when this matter was considered. I think I am justified in saying that these definitions at one time were ordered to be stricken out, or, rather, passed over, for two or three reasons, for several weeks. Then we came back and thought we ought to adopt the amendments. This particular amendment as to navigable waters was then thoroughly considered by the committee, in the belief that it was advisable to leave it in for the reason as stated by Mr. ANDERSON, somewhat to be supplemented by myself. Now you have jurisdiction over a navigable stream. Anyone familiar with streams or water rights must recognize that here is a large stream which is navigable. Here are five branches, all nonnavigable. Cut off branch 1, dam it, and turn it away; cut off branch 2, dam it, and take it away, if you have the right to do it; dam up and take off branch 3, if you have the right to do it. and you have absolutely destroyed the navigability of the stream. That is one of the fundamental principles of all water rights and all legislation and rules and decisions. You can go to the very high recesses of all these streams and preserve the water and keep it in a stream, keep it all together, and when it comes down to your main stream, why, your entire stream can not be dried up. It is the same way with the owner on a stream. He might go to the very recesses of every little branch, not by a multiplicity of suits against all parties on the various portions of the streams, but he can commence one suit against every man on every branch of the stream above where he has his water right and enjoin and prohibit them from taking water out of those branches of the stream, because no man can tell which one is depriving him of water in the stream below.

Now, this definition does not enlarge the navigability of the stream; it does not enlarge the power of Congress over the stream; but it simply says this, and I believe it ought to remain in the bill, that the commission is given power to grant a license on these navigable streams and all their branches for the purpose of developing and utilizing the water of these streams, the main stream and the various branches, not for the purpose of simply confining them down to the navigable stream alone and leaving out all the various branches, which if dried up would leave the stream below nonnavigable.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman is aware of the case of the United States against the Rio Grande Co., 174th United States, wherein it was held:

For the purpose of promoting and regulating foreign and interstate commerce Congress is given plenary power over all the navigable waters of the United States, to the end of improving and maintaining their navigability; that this power is not limited to the navigable sections of streams, but extends to the tributaries and feeders of the same, for without the control of these the power over all navigable sections might be wholly impotent.

Mr. RAKER. Clearly this was fundamental. Congress has taken power over this, particularly in the river and harbor bill, and goes to every tributary in order to prevent refuse and débris from running into these streams and their branches and interfering with navigation.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. For a question.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman think it wise to compel anyone who desires to put in a little dam or diverting ditch on the upper reaches of some of these nonnavigable tributaries to come to this commission?

Mr. RAKER. No. That is not the purpose of this bill. Congress already has that power. And the question of bridges, and so forth, across streams means those streams that are navigable; but you do not have to come to Congress to get a bridge across a nonnavigable stream, although the nonnavigable stream may be as material as the main branch itself.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has just stated that he was in favor of this definition for the reasons given by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], and then he proceeded to give reasons why he supported it that were diametrically opposite to the reasons given by the gentleman from Minnesota—not a very logical position.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is for the definition because it does not mean anything. It is mouth and ear filling, a sort of general affirmation of a condition with no legislative force or effect. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is for it because it is legislation, because it does have some force and effect, and if it has force and effect then it has the force and effect of making navigable the utmost tributary to the springs at the very head of all the navigable streams of the country.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. My time is very limited. The gentleman could not yield, and I am sorry that I can not.

Mr. RAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, that is not what any of us want to do. The question of navigability, if this issue is raised, is a question for the courts, and the Congress ought not to attempt to exercise legislative power in the definition of navigability. There is a good deal of difference of opinion as to just how far the authority of Congress extends over streams beyond their navigable portions. The statement contained in the Supreme Court decision in the Rio Grande case just quoted settles nothing. It is a little surplusage thrown in by the court for good measure, and does not determine anything. Whenever we reach a decision by the highest court of the land on a definite question, my own notion is that it will not be in line with that dictum of the Supreme Court in the Rio Grande case. The Supreme Court is not going to hold, in my opinion, and the gentleman from California would not want it to hold, I am sure, that the upper waters of the Missouri River in my State, for instance, the head of the Snake River and the Columbia in my State, or the head of the Colorado River in my State, are navigable because the waters flow into navigable streams, and by declaring them navigable take over and interfere with our control over the diversional use of those streams and their waters.

Nothing is gained by this definition and nothing is changed by it, except that this commission, reading that definition, might imagine they had authority which we do not intend to give them; and inasmuch as it would be difficult to reach their acts under their assumed authority, we should not suggest authority and control which we do not intend to grant and could not if we wished. And therefore the provisions should go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SNOOK). The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, my objection to the definition as contained in this paragraph is that it seems to give the opportunity to this commission, composed of three Cabinet officers, to take jurisdiction over a stream or a part of a stream which, under the decisions of the Supreme Court or the law of the State in which that stream or part of a stream is located, has been declared to be not a navigable stream. And the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has cited instances of decisions of courts of that State whereby streams in Maine are classified into three different kinds. Now, to say that "navigable waters" means all streams or parts of streams—and I assume parts of streams means the part of a stream which is located wholly within one State, as distinguished from a branch or a tributary thereof—to say that navigable waters means all streams or parts of streams over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, seems to me is not an accurate definition of navigable waters. The Senate had the following definition in its bill as contained in section 14, on page 22, lines 1 to 7, inclusive.

Section 14, page 22, provides—

That the term "navigable waters" as used in this act and as applied to streams shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or which, through improvements heretofore or hereafter made, have been or shall become usable in such commerce.

Well, now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we are going to attempt to define "navigable streams" or "navigable waters," the Senate definition is much to be preferred, because it says there that it includes streams which in their usual condition or in their natural and ordinary condition are used or usable for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That follows very closely the language of the decisions of the courts as to what a navigable stream is?

Mr. WALSH. I am not familiar with the exact language of the decisions of the courts, not having examined them for some little time, when this bill, away back in the past, many weeks ago, first began to be considered in the House during this session; but my recollection is that the Senate definition does follow very closely the decisions of several of the State courts and also of the United State Supreme Court.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman observe that the Senate then proceeds to give this commission jurisdiction over nonnavigable streams?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I appreciate that the Senate defined "navigable streams" and then went on and in the same section gave jurisdiction over nonnavigable streams. But I submit that for the purpose of definition the defining part of section 14 in the Senate bill, lines 1 to 7, inclusive, is much to be preferred to that of the House in the paragraph on page 26, which the gentleman's amendment eliminates.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman construe this to mean solely and entirely that "navigable streams" are such only for the purposes of this act, so that it may be carried out and the rest of the act used in connection with it, and where it is, as provided here, in fact, the commission then has jurisdiction to authorize the permit or license? Is not that all it is for?

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, that might possibly be a fair interpretation to put on this definition. But the difficulty is going to be, in my opinion, that the interpretation that is going to be put upon this is to be left to a commission and its subordinates, and if you leave to them the construction of language such as this, which is capable of being expanded broadly, I fear you will find this commission seeking to take jurisdiction or authority over or impose conditions or restrictions upon a part of a stream which, by the decision of the court or the laws of the State in which that part may be located, has been determined to be a nonnavigable or a floatable stream, and I think the definition might well be eliminated.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, is the time exhausted?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the time has not expired. I have two minutes remaining. I wish to use those two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a parliamentary inquiry

Mr. SIMS. That will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. If this paragraph is not stricken out, I desire to amend it. I want to know of the Chair if he would recognize me for an amendment to the paragraph after the vote to strike out, if the vote to strike out is not carried?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he should and would do so. The amendment upon which time has been limited is the amendment to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say to the members of the committee that I am very much afraid of the effect that it will have upon the question if we strike out this section and put something in place of it, because while it will not be formally accepting the Senate amendment it will be so understood and believed and, in effect, be the same thing. I am perfectly willing to accept the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], who raised this question, to amend this paragraph so that it will read—

"Navigable waters" means all streams and other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and all parts of such streams and waters.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman says "my amendment." The gentleman understands that I suggest that language if he wants to make it mean that, but I would be very much opposed to it.

Mr. SIMS. What I meant was to adopt the gentleman's suggestion as to the amendment, so as to broaden it, and then we will have something in issue between the House and the Senate on which the conferees may act. Therefore I hope the motion to strike out will be defeated, so that this may be offered and so that other gentlemen may offer any amendment that they desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out lines 1 to 5, on page 26.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS), there were—ayes 17, noes 10.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, seven Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: Page 25, line 19, after the word "district," insert "hydroelectric district."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely adds a little more redundancy to the definition of "municipality" that is already in the bill. I do not think it is necessary. I think a hydroelectric district would be comprehended by the language of that particular paragraph; but as we have already inserted the words "city, county, irrigation district, drainage district," and in fact municipalities that do not at first hand suggest hydroelectric districts, it seems to me that we might as well insert the words "hydroelectric district."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What does "hydroelectric district" mean? Are there any hydroelectric districts in this country?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know that there are.

Mr. RAKER. But there are drainage districts and irrigation districts, which are municipalities organized for those purposes?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; organized for those purposes.

Mr. RAKER. And they are political subdivisions. The gentleman ought not to insert something that does not exist. These others are political subdivisions recognized by State laws. When they comply with the law then they become a part of the political structure of the State and can go on and do business.

Mr. FRENCH. As I said, I do not think it is essential. I merely think it is desirable; and since we have included other districts that do not necessarily have for their first object the developing of hydroelectric power, I think we might very properly include the words "hydroelectric district."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the commission is hereby authorized and empowered—

(a) To make investigations and to collect and record data concerning the power industry and its relation to other industries and to interstate or foreign commerce, and concerning the location, capacity, development costs, and relation to markets of power sites, and whether the power from navigation dams can be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, and what is a fair value of such power, to the extent it may deem necessary or useful for the purposes of this act.

(b) To cooperate with the executive departments and other agencies of the Government in such investigations, and for such purpose the several departments and agencies are authorized and directed, upon the request of the commission, to furnish such records, papers, and information in their possession as may be requested by the commission, and temporarily to detail to the commission such officers or experts as may be necessary in such investigations.

(c) To make public from time to time such portions of the information secured hereunder as it shall deem expedient in the public interest, and to provide for the publication of its reports and investigations in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use. The commission, on or before the first Monday in December of each year, shall submit to Congress for the fiscal year preceding a classified report showing the permits and licenses issued under this act, the parties thereto, the terms prescribed, and the moneys received, if any, on account thereof.

(d) To issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation, State, or municipality for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other project works necessary or convenient for the development and improvement of navigation, and for the development, transmission, and utilization of power across, along, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, or upon any part of the public lands and reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or for the purpose of utilizing the surplus water or water power from any navigation dam, except as herein provided: Provided, That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the commission that the license will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired, and shall be subject to and contain such conditions as the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls shall deem necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of such reservation: Provided further, That no license affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be issued until the plans of the dam and other navigation structures have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, a finding to that effect shall be made by the commission and shall become a part of the records of the commission: Provided further, That in case the commission shall find that any navigation dam may be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto.

(e) To issue preliminary permits for the purpose of enabling applicants for a license hereunder to secure the data and to perform the acts required by section 9 hereof.

(f) To prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of a system of accounts and for the maintenance thereof by licensees hereunder; to examine all books and accounts of such licensees at any time; to require them to submit at such time or times as the commission may require statements and reports, including full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, cost of project, cost of operation, and the production, transmission, use, and sale of power; and to make adequate provision for currently determining said costs. All such statements and reports shall be made upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and on such blanks as the commission may require. Any person who, for the purpose of deceiving, makes or causes to be made any false entry in the books or the accounts of such licensee, and any person who, for the purpose of deceiving, makes or causes to be made any false statement or report in response to a request or order or direction from the commission for the statements and report herein referred to shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(g) To hold hearings and to order testimony to be taken by deposition at any designated place in connection with the issuance of any permit or license, or the regulation of rates, service, or securities, or the making of any investigation, as provided in this act; and to require by subpœna, signed by any member of the commission, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence from any place in the United States, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Any member, expert, or examiner of the commission may, when duly designated by the commission for such purposes, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commission and empowered to administer oaths, shall be reduced to writing by such person or under his direction, and subscribed by the deponent. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

(h) To perform any and all acts, to make such rules and regulations, and to issue such orders not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be recognized?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I want to offer an amendment which, perhaps, there will not be any controversy about. On page 30, line 6, next to the last word on the line, to strike out the word "its."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMS: Page 30, line 6, after the word "for," strike out the word "its."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the object I have in offering this amendment is that I do not see how the United States can have any other purpose except public purposes. In other words, the United States has no private purposes, and I can not see the object of putting in the word "its" unless it is to restrict the uses entirely to Army or Navy construction work or something of that kind. This language was inserted by an amendment in the committee, and the question of using the word "its" was not discussed in the committee, as I now recall. What does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] remember about that?

Mr. ESCH. My recollection is that the word "its" referred to the public purposes which the Government itself has, for instance, in developing power for the fixing of nitrates. It might also lease the use of power to a municipality or something of that kind.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know what the courts might hold about what the public purposes of the United States are. In other words, it seems to me that the United States can not have any purposes except public purposes.

Mr. ESCH. The Government could license a municipality, and that would be a public purpose, but it would not be a public purpose of the United States; whereas if the Government utilized the power in the fixing of nitrates or in the manufacture of munitions, it would be the use of the power for its own purposes.

Mr. SIMS. But what I have in mind is this, that perhaps the United States might want to lease or sell the power which it has created at navigation dams. It might lease the power to a municipality or to a manufacturer; but if it is to be confined to use by the United States for its public purposes, then unless the United States had such a purpose to carry out, in connection with manufacture of munitions or something of that kind, having no purposes of its own it could not lease it. If the United States has such a purpose, something in the line which the gentleman mentions where a navigation dam has been built for the purpose of improving navigation, it could not operate the structure——

Mr. ESCH. The purpose of making the survey and submitting the proposition to Congress was for the purpose of Congress determining whether it wanted to make the expenditure for such a purpose.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say that I offered this amendment to have the subject discussed because it was not in the original bill. I wanted to raise the question so that the members of the Committee of the Whole might have their minds directed to it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist on his amendment?

Mr. SIMS. No; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I suggest by way of amendment, in order to conform to the language used in such cases, that you strike out the word "its" and insert the word "their."

Mr. SIMS. I want to say that I am not the author of the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Amend, section 4, subdivision (e), page 30, by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"Provided, however, That upon the filing of any application for a preliminary permit by any person or corporation the commission before granting such application shall at once give notice of such application, in writing, to any State or municipality likely to be interested in or affected by such application, and shall also publish notice of such application for four weeks in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the county or counties affected by said application."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Oregon will yield——

Mr. SINNOTT. I will yield.

Mr. FRENCH. I had the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon in mind some days ago when I addressed the House, and at the same time I inserted in the RECORD a proposed amendment which covers the same thing. Since it is all on the same subject and I have no pride in my amendment, I would like to have my amendment read so that we may have both before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the proposed amendment for information.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 29, line 11. After the colon following the words "herein provided" insert the following:

"Provided, That when application for [temporary permit or] license shall be made by citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, the commission shall certify the application and the terms of the same to the governor of the State and to the chairman of the board of county commissioners or other similar supervisory county board of the county or counties to which the application for [temporary permit or] license pertains, and shall cause a copy of said notice to be published once every week for four successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in said county or counties, and the State, county, hydroelectric district, or other municipality within which the application for temporary permit or license last mentioned pertains shall have the option for a period of five years of taking over as though having made the original application for license all rights, leases, and project property of every description of said citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, paying therefor an amount not in excess of the total amount of money expended on said project, including interest by such citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, and thereupon the commission shall take up any preliminary permit or license theretofore issued and issue a new preliminary permit or license, as the case may be, to said State or municipality, and in case the grantee of the preliminary permit or license and the State or municipality shall be unable to agree upon the amount due the grantee of the preliminary permit or license from said State or municipality, then and in that event the commission shall determine the amount to be paid, and the amount so determined shall be final under the terms of the preliminary permit or license."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Is this an amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho as a substitute?

Mr. FRENCH. No; I simply asked that it be read now for information and that we have it up after we have disposed of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon. As it covers much the same matter, I thought it ought to be read for information.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, subdivision (e) of section 4 is the subdivision relative to preliminary permits. In section 7 it is provided that in issuing preliminary permits in the discretion of the commission preference may be given to States or municipalities. It is well known, however, that municipalities and public officials are often very dilatory and that they sleep upon their rights. It seems to me it is wise to provide that as soon as an application is filed by any person or corporation that notice shall be at once given to the various municipalities, which mean the county, city, irrigation district, drainage district, or other political division of the State. Notice to them that an application for the preliminary permit has been filed should be given. This will bring knowledge directly home to the State or the county or the city officials and give them an opportunity to present their application if they desire public or municipal ownership, where otherwise the matter would be entirely overlooked and snap judgment would be taken against them, and they would be foreclosed from filing application.

Mr. SIMS. What is the length of time the gentleman requires for publication?

Mr. SINNOTT. A publication of four weeks.

Mr. SIMS. I am very much inclined to the opinion that the gentleman's amendment is a very proper one; but does he not think that four weeks is an exceedingly limited time in which the county or municipality or district might have——

Mr. SINNOTT. I thought myself that the time was somewhat limited, and I am willing to extend it. I thought we should give the municipality time to consider the matter to file a protest or to take any necessary steps to protect its future needs. I agree with the gentleman; I think the time should be lengthened.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman think of doubling the time and making it eight weeks?

Mr. SINNOTT. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. SIMS. Would the gentleman offer that as a substitute?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be eight weeks instead of four weeks, and that the amendment be so modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not general publication. Does not the gentleman from Oregon think there should be a general order, whether or not anybody is interested, any municipality or State, that the commission ought to direct on all applications? In other words, the bill ought to contain a provision that in all instances where an application is filed there should be proof submitted to the commission before it can act, or a publication of the application referring to it, its purpose, the land desired to be occupied, to be published in a newspaper in each county where the land is to be used, so that everybody can know and then appear before the commission and be heard.

Mr. SINNOTT. The only trouble with that is that I do not want to make it too complicated. I would prefer to have it directory rather than jurisdictional. Let the matter rest with the commission, otherwise you are going to get it tied up in legal technicalities, such as whether proper notice has been published, and so forth. I think the commission could handle the matter.

Mr. RAKER. But if you want to treat the public fairly, you ought not to simply say that the man shall give notice of publication to such municipalities or others that might be interested. The question is, if the law provided that there should be filed with the commission a published notice or proof that they had published before they asked for a hearing.

Mr. SINNOTT. I prefer to leave that matter with the commission rather than with the applicant. The commission I think is in better position to take the necessary steps. The man has no particular interest in the matter except to give a broad and general notice to the public.

Mr. RAKER. Let me read this for the information of the committee:

Each applicant for a permit under this act shall, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commission, submit proof to it that notice of his application, giving the location of the works he proposes to construct and the public lands, if any, to be occupied, has been published for a period of 90 days in some newspaper of general circulation in the counties or one of the counties in which such works are to be constructed, and in some newspaper published in each county in which any public lands so to be occupied are located.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in 15 minutes, 3 minutes of that time to go to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], and 2 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that before action is taken to grant the preliminary permit to any person or corporation the commission, before granting it, shall at once give notice—of such application in writing to any State or municipality likely to be interested or affected by such application.

How are you going to tell whether they are likely to be interested? The purpose is to give general notice to the public, and I am asking the committee if they believe this is a sufficient notice to be given on a matter of this kind.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman ought in fairness to the gentleman from Oregon to read the rest of the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I am reading it as fast as I can, and, of course, I can not read all of the words at once. That is so indefinite that you could not tell to whom to give notice, and possibly this might be a jurisdictional question. To proceed—and shall also publish notice of such application for eight weeks in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the county or counties affected by such application.

The counties are not affected. A county can not be affected. That is where the land is located, so that it may be designated. They can publish in either a daily or weekly paper, and it does not provide whether once or a dozen times. I think the gentleman ought to so clarify his amendment to cover the proposition involved. I believe it would give better results if the matter were brought to the attention of the committee, but no one at that time seemed to think it ought to go on, and some of us believe that it would be a good thing to publish the notice and give general information in regard to it. The committee will remember that this was one of the things that Senator WALSH appeared before the committee and argued and asked it to especially consider and place in the bill.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing now to suggest as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], but it seems to me his amendment in its present form would not meet the views of those who would support the idea involved in it; that is, to require notice to the counties interested or affected by a proposed water-power improvement. It would be difficult for anyone at the beginning of a project to know what counties are affected or may later be affected. Take the case of a large project which is capable of developing large horsepower. The power might be carried over and delivered to a very large section of the State, to manufacturing concerns in distant counties that might not be known or even thought of at the time the project was first broached. It would seem to me that it would broaden the whole matter and still be inclusive enough if it were required that such notice be given as the commission might require, by publication in newspapers and otherwise. I doubt very much if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon will work well. The counties interested in the first instance might be thought to be the counties in which the dam and other works are to be constructed. The location of the works might be away off in the wilds, where there is little, if any, development unsettled. They might be thought to be the ones interested, whereas the power developed there would be carried to distant counties that might not be included in the notice to be published. It seems to me it would be better if the amendment would require simply such notice, by publication or otherwise, as the commission at the time might require. That would be a good deal better, I think.

There are water powers in my State where the current is carried across the State by virtue of a new development, by improvement in the method of transmission, and by the demands for power in sections distant from the original development, into and through counties that under this or under such requirements as this would receive no notice at all. It seems to me that as time goes on the notice to be given would be different, and it ought to be left to the commission to determine the kind of notice to be given and the length of notice. I do not like the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Oregon, although I thoroughly approve of the idea that the public ought to have notice of the application.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to discuss the matter at all. I would like to offer a substitute for part of the amendment if I can get the original for a moment. After the word "counties," in next to the last line of the amendment, I move to insert "in which the project or any parts thereof or lands affected thereby are situated." I do not think the amendment requires any argument. It seems to me that it meets the exact situation which the gentleman from Oregon has in mind a little more specifically than his amendment does.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman. I had no particular pride in the form. I want to get this idea of notice in the bill in some manner.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Sinnott amendment as follows: After the word "counties" in the Sinnott amendment insert the following: "in which the project or any parts thereof or the lands affected thereby are situated."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon as amended by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, then I offer the amendment which has already been read, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as having been read.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not in substance the same as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. FRENCH. I would say that my amendment covers everything covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon pertaining to a temporary permit, but my amendment goes further and pertains also to the licenses when they shall be issued.

Now, what I would like to do is to strike out the words "temporary permits or" every time those three words occur in my amendment, because they are not necessary now since the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon has passed, and then consider just the other parts of the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's purpose is to offer his amendment with all such portions of it as have been covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon stricken out?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that is it; and if the words "temporary permits or," wherever they occur, are eliminated, that will eliminate everything that has been covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. FERRIS. Is that the long amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentlemen think he ought to offer an amendment of that length here without its having more consideration? No one knows what is in it, and I could not understand it from the reading from the desk, and I doubt if anyone else could.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman would like to have it read again——

Mr. FERRIS. I do not care to have it read again, but I do not think the gentleman ought to add such an amendment. The gentleman from Oregon has had his amendment adopted, and that will put the whole matter in conference, as this is a substitute for the Senate bill. Could not the gentleman content himself with going over it with the gentleman from Oregon or the chairman of the committee, with reference to it, without asking us to adopt such a long amendment as this?

Mr. FRENCH. There is another feature that my amendment covers, and I think it ought to be brought to the attention of the House, and it is——

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman would not want us to adopt a second amendment after adopting everything the gentleman from Oregon has in his amendment in order to get something that the gentleman wants?

Mr. FRENCH. No; but everything in my amendment that has been covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon has been eliminated. My amendment can be read, if the gentleman prefers it again, covering that which is not covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. FERRIS. Then offer the amendment in the form in which you want it.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FRENCH: Amend page 29, line 11. After the colon following the words "herein provided," insert the following:

"Provided, That when application for license shall be made by citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, the commission shall certify the application and the terms of the same to the governor of the State and to the chairman of the board of county commissioners or other similar supervisory county board of the county or counties to which the application for license pertains, and shall cause a copy of said notice to be published once every week for four successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in said county or counties, and the State, county, hydroelectric district, or other municipality within which the application for license last mentioned pertains shall have the option for a period of five years of taking over as though having made the original application for license all rights, leases, and project property of every description of said citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, paying therefor an amount not in excess of the total amount of money expended on said project, including interest, by such citizen, association of citizens, or corporation, and thereupon the commission shall take up any license theretofore issued and issue a new license, to said State or municipality, and in case the grantee of the license and the State or municipality shall be unable to agree upon the amount due the grantee of the license from said State or municipality, then and in that event the commission shall determine the amount to be paid, and the amount so determined shall be final under the terms of the license."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, as I indicated the other day, if this bill becomes a law as now written, we are going to run into a practical difficulty from the standpoint of giving opportunity to municipalities to develop power projects. The bill ostensibly gives that opportunity, but we must remember that municipalities act slowly.

The amendment that I have proposed tends to make it easier for States and municipalities to find themselves. It tends to make it easier for them to take over hydroelectric projects.

We must remember that it takes a longer time for a State to act or for a municipality to act than it does an individual, an association of individuals, or a corporation. Our legislatures for the most part meet every two years; a few of them meet annually, and still others meet as infrequently as every four years.

It must be borne in mind that this is a new subject; that many of the States do not have laws under which municipalities may act. To-day we have irrigation districts, drainage districts, and other municipal organizations of somewhat similar character, but I am not aware that in any State do we have a hydroelectric district, organized primarily for the purpose of developing and handling a hydroelectric proposition.

In the State of Washington a city may own its own hydroelectric plant, but it may not, under the laws of the State, sell power to another town or another city. True, I understand this is being done, and quite likely no one will challenge the right of a city so to do, but I have been advised that all that is being done along this line is not only in excess of authority but in direct violation of law of that State.

I seek in my amendment to provide merely that the people shall have an opportunity to express themselves. I do not seek to commit any community or State or our country to the proposition of Government ownership of hydroelectric systems any more than does the bill. It can not be urged against my amendment that it is in favor of Government or State or municipal ownership and that the bill is not, unless you are willing to say that you plan under the terms of the bill through discretionary authority to deny States and municipalities the right to obtain licenses for the development of power. The bill itself is ostensibly framed looking to possible State and municipal ownership. It is written in the bill, however, that this State or municipal ownership may be deferred for 50 years or longer.

The amendment that I have proposed provides that the commission shall give notice to the governor and to the governing board of each county in which a hydroelectric project may be that is applied for. This notice must then be published for a period of four weeks. Then for a period of five years the State or the municipality in which the project is situated may have the option of acquiring the project, but in doing so will pay to those who have developed it to the point when it may be taken over by the State or municipality all the money that the promoter or original licensee has expended upon the same, including interest.

You must remember that States and municipalities act slowly, that individuals and corporations may act speedily, and unless some such provision as I have suggested be comprehended in the law we shall soon find that municipalities and States, as they attempt to own and manage hydroelectric power plants, will be asked to do so in competition with private institutions upon an unequal basis, for the reason that by reason of the fact that individuals and corporations may move with promptitude, they will acquire the most feasible projects, the projects that can be developed most readily and with the least expenditure of money. The States or municipalities, when they shall act, will find that the better projects will have already been picked up, that it will cost them more to get started in the development of hydroelectric power, and thereby they will not be able to compete upon equal basis with the private producer of electric power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the amendment which I offered to the Sinnott amendment, which was adopted a moment ago, I should have moved to strike out the language after the word "counties" and insert the language which I offer. I have simply made the motion to insert, and I ask unanimous consent that the language following the word "counties" in the Sinnott amendment may be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all after the word "counties" be stricken out. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: After the word "counties" strike out the words "affected by said application."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 30, line 9, after the word "thereto," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "Except that this proviso shall not apply to any navigation dam constructed prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that the proviso on page 30 is to the effect—

That in case the commission shall find that any navigation dam may be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto.

The idea is that during those two years Congress would have the option of determining what course it should pursue and whether it should justify the construction of such dam on Government account. But there is no reason why existing navigation dams should be put under that provision and action with reference to the disposal of power from such dams be delayed for two years. So I have offered this amendment excepting these navigation dams that have already been constructed. There are some eight or ten of them already built in the United States, and it seems desirable that those of them that can develop power for governmental uses should be availed of at the very earliest possible moment in view of the great shortage of power at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. SIMS. I did not catch the limit exactly.

Mr. ESCH. There is no limit. I do not change the two years at all. It means it simply shall not apply to navigation dams that were constructed prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SIMS. You have reference to the issue of permits?

Mr. ESCH. This is in reference to licenses—that no license shall be issued in the case where the commission recommends a dam may be constructed by the Government for its public uses.

Mr. SIMS. They can not be issued under two years after it has reported to Congress the facts and conditions.

Mr. ESCH. But there have been dams already constructed, and we do not want to wait two years on those.

Mr. SIMS. I want to see if I understand the gentleman's amendment. Does the amendment intend to limit or to strike out the two years beginning with when it shall have reported to Congress?

Mr. ESCH. Not at all. It says this proviso shall not apply to any navigation dam constructed prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SIMS. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the practical application.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman understands that under the proviso, at the top of page 30, the commission, if it finds that any navigation dam may be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, shall not issue any license therefor for a period of two years, pending action by Congress, and so on. Now, then, I say we should not require dams already constructed by the Government to wait the period of two years and thus lose for two valuable years the possible power development by the Government on its own dams and for its own public uses.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know about this, and I hesitate to oppose it. This is the situation, it seems to me.

Here we are with a proviso which reads like this:

Provided further, That in case the commission shall find that any navigation dam may be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto.

And prior to that it says this:

Whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desirable and justified in the public interests for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, a finding to that effect shall be made by the commission and shall become a part of the records of the commission.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin comes along and says this:

Except the proviso shall not apply to any dam constructed prior to the passage of this act.

That, in substance, of course will undo the very thing as stated in the above language. How desirable it is to do the thing provided for; how desirable it is to have that commission make a finding in the public interests and hold it for two years, I do not know. If it was desirable to do that at all, it is not desirable to put an exception to it which says we shall not do the thing we have just said we would do. I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] would elaborate that a little more.

Mr. SIMS. I think I understand now what the gentleman stated a moment ago; but the law here has reference to projects that are intended and which are to be constructed after the law is passed.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. But whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desired in the public interest for the purposes of commerce, it is with them as to whether they will authorize the improvement at all or not.

Mr. ESCH. That is already passed.

Mr. SIMS. And it says:

A finding to that effect shall be made by the commission and shall become a part of the records of the commission.

Now, then, it provides when the commission makes such a report as that there shall be no license issued for making that particular improvement for two years after they report to Congress?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And the exception of the gentleman is to apply to the dams already constructed and about which no report of the commission will be made at all to Congress?

Mr. ESCH. Of course, that is all past. The dam has been built and the Government has spent its money.

Mr. SIMS. Have I now got clearly in my mind what the gentleman has in his mind?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. But suppose this commission finds that the contemplated improvement is an improvement in the public interest to have, to further its development and take over and go on with it. Why not let them report that to Congress, as the language provides. In that Keokuk Dam proposition there are instances where they can not get a license and ought not to have a license, at least until the report is made to Congress as to the public interest phases of the question.

Mr. ESCH. That would not apply to the Keokuk Dam. That is on private account. This relates to Government dams, and the dams are already built.

Mr. FERRIS. Then there is no controversy about it. You do not want them to have a license.

Mr. ESCH. The amendment says, "except this proviso shall not apply to navigation dams," and these dams are already built on Government account.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In paragraph (d), at the bottom of page 28, the language is to "issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation." Does not the gentleman think that that ought to be limited to domestic corporations? It means that a foreign corporation——

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman wants to turn to page 25, line 8.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What does that say?

Mr. RAKER. It says, "A corporation means a corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States."

Mr. WALSH. A corporation may have been organized under the laws of a State, and after its organization the control of its stock might pass into the hands of people not citizens of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. That would not make it a foreign corporation.

Mr. WALSH. No. It would not be a foreign corporation, except that it would be controlled by a foreign interest. Do you want to permit that under that definition?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think we do. But we never discussed or contemplated that possible purchasers of the stock of a domestic corporation should be prohibited. Nothing of that kind was discussed in the committee.

Mr. WALSH. That is possible.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in recent legislation—for instance, that touching the operation of our ships—it was provided that the majority of the stock must be owned by American citizens. Now, why would it not be a wise thing to add here, "or any corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by citizens of the United States"?

Mr. SIMS. That question was not presented in the committee, and has not been considered at all by the committee. Therefore, I have no more opinion on that subject; that is, no more matured opinion or more considered opinion, than the gentleman, if he has given it study.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have not given it much study. But I do not think it requires any.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know how that affects it in any way. The physical structure has to remain here; the work all has to be done in the United States anyway. If they add transmission lines to Mexico or to Canada it would take special legislation to get permission for it. I can not see how the fact that a foreigner, a man not a citizen of the United States, owns stock in any one of these companies would of itself have any effect on the administration of the utility.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "corporation," on line 25 of page 28, the words "the majority stock of which is owned by citizens of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let the Clerk read it, and see if I have got it right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: Page 28, line 25, after the word "corporation," insert the following: "The majority of the stock of which is owned by citizens of the United States."

Mr. SIMS. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. The language in the bill is:

"Corporation" means a corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States, empowered to develop, transmit, distribute, or utilize power, and authorized to transact in the State or States in which its project is located all business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act. It shall not include "municipalities" as hereinafter defined.

The gentleman does not offer an amendment to the definition. Your amendment is that the stockholders of the corporation, or the majority of them, shall be citizens of the United States? Or does the gentleman exclude all foreigners from holding.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman this: Might we not get into some conflict or some trouble with our neighbors on the north? I have been informed—although I have not looked it up, and perhaps the gentleman himself can tell us—that citizens of the United States own some of the corporations or property operated by corporations in Canada. I mean citizens of the United States own a majority of stock in Canadian corporations of this kind for water-power development. Should we go to limiting it by saying that the majority of the stock of our own shall be limited to citizens of the United States, there might be trouble. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] can tell us whether or not American citizens own a majority of stock of the water-power companies in Canada?

Mr. DEMPSEY. They own all the stock absolutely.

Mr. SIMS. There are no laws in Canada prohibiting that. I am afraid it might result in retaliatory legislation, and there is no sound reason that applies to this industry why a majority of the stock might not be held by a citizen of Canada or Mexico as long as it is a domestic corporation and controlled absolutely by the laws of the United States. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is straining a point in discriminating against foreigners when foreigners are permitting us to do the identical thing that we would restrain them from doing. Still I have not looked up the matter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in response to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, with reference to this proposed amendment, of course the gentleman from Mississippi could not offer his amendment to the definition at this time because we have passed that section.

Mr. SIMS. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. Now, it seems to me, if we are going to establish by this legislation some comprehensive scheme for the development of water-power sites, and are going to permit corporations to do it, we ought not to make it possible for corporations to be formed by a body of citizens in accordance with the laws of our States and then the week after they are formed to sell out to some water-power interest having residence, say, in Canada or France, or anywhere else. It seems to me that in order for this commission to operate adequately under this law the majority of the stock ought to be held by our citizens.

Now, the gentleman states that it is liable to raise complications with our neighbor on the north. We have not had any complications as to building ships. We have provided practically that the majority of the stock in ships or in corporations shall be held by citizens of the United States.

Now, this is a new project, and it is going to require millions of capital to get it going. It seems to me that a majority of the stock of corporations other than municipalities should be held by citizens of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. How could it possibly affect our ability to control and manage these water powers and their incidental services if 51 per cent of the stock was held by persons outside of the United States? I do not see how the management of a domestic corporation by the United States can be interfered with by the fact that it has foreign stockholders.

Mr. WALSH. It might make it much more difficult, because the corporation might be put into a big foreign combination, and simply be one small part of an immense foreign water-power trust.

Mr. SIMS. The more stock is held abroad, the more rigid will be the control exercised by our own authorities.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would not carry that doctrine so far as to preclude our own citizens from holding any stock, would he?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; not at all. I hope they will own it all.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi would not accomplish what the gentleman from Massachusetts has in mind at all. The amendment deals simply with the issuance of licenses and not with the holding of stock after the licenses have been issued. The amendment as proposed would control the stock on the day that the license was issued, but the next day the control of the stock might change.

Now, let me suggest to the gentleman, in connection with that which he has in mind; I do not think this legislation would affect us adversely at Niagara. We have acted in a very neighborly way with Canada there, and I do not think Canada would consider this legislation as aimed adversely at her interests. But there is this in connection with the passage of this water-power bill which it seems to me ought to be borne in mind and is of real importance: While the United States to-day is the financial center of the world, it has been the custom of our people heretofore when they wanted to finance a project to go abroad to get their capital. We have done that with all kinds of projects. England has financed us again and again and again. Now, the primary object that we all have in view here is to utilize these water powers.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that practically all, if not all, the capital of the Keokuk development was furnished by English money?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that has been true of practically all our projects. Our men go to New York and the New Yorkers go abroad. Our object here is to finance these projects so that we will develop power out of what is to-day being wasted, and we ought not to put anything in the way of that development. I agree entirely with the chairman in his idea that you are going to control the operation of these companies through the laws, and not through the holdings of stock, and that the laws will be very much more rigidly enforced, and the laws will be made more rigid as against foreigners than they will be against our own citizens. They will make their investments with that knowledge, and it seems to me that from the standpoint of developing water power it is something of a question whether we ought to put in a provision of that kind.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Suppose we put in a restriction requiring that a majority of the stock shall be owned by our citizens. Has the gentleman considered the question whether the Provinces of Canada might retaliate? Many corporations with American stockholders have gone into Canada to develop manufacturing enterprises. Would there not be danger of retaliation if this provision were inserted?

Mr. WALSH. I do not see why there should be any more in this case than there is in the building of ships and the operation of ships under the amendment to the shipping laws that we passed here which contained that provision.

Mr. ESCH. I am rather in sympathy with the general proposition, but I want to know whether there is any possible danger that Canada might retaliate against Americans whose money is invested in manufacturing enterprises in Canada?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. In the shipping bill we made a similar provision. But I understand that the projects at Niagara are excluded from the provisions of this bill, so that as far as that goes there need be no fear of any complications if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I simply want to develop the thought suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin. Practically every large automobile and other manufacturing concern in the United States to-day has a Canadian branch, and that fact really does give one cause for thought in connection with this matter. Now, while this bill does not apply to Niagara, because the committee is not given power as to Niagara, the bill is broad enough in its terms to cover Niagara.

Mr. WALSH. No; that is excluded somewhere here, I think.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I intended to offer an amendment to cover that point; but I think the bill as drawn includes Niagara. My intention was to offer an amendment to make it clear that this commission shall have no jurisdiction over Niagara.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think there is any doubt at all that as prepared and presented the bill does include Niagara, although the committee is not given jurisdiction. However that may be, as I say, the real question, it seems to me, is the question of financing these projects—if we are not going to make it more difficult to finance them by excluding men who in the past have furnished the great amount of our capital.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is in line with the suggestion I made day before yesterday in my remarks on the bill, and one which I have been contending for in all of this class of legislation, like the coal, oil, and phosphate bill. The only question is as to the real wording of the amendment. This amendment in its crude form ought to be adopted and let it go to conference and let the conferees place it in proper shape in the bill.

Speaking with some Senators the other day in regard to the coal, oil, and phosphate bill, they practically agreed with me that it should go into the bill before it is reported back to the House. In this bill for the first time in the history of the country we are deeding away for 50 years to the corporation that gets the permit the use, it may be, of a hundred thousand acres of the public domain of this country. The corporation may be owned or composed of aliens and all the stock may be owned by aliens, except, perhaps, $300. It ought not to be, the question of comity between nations is not involved. We ought to have the right to control our own lands and our rights connected therewith.

This amendment is in the right spirit and the right line. You can hardly grasp the magnitude of this legislation. We ought not to think of a corporation that is controlled and run and owned by aliens. They ought not to come into our country and practically control the corporation which furnishes the hydroelectric energy of this country. It is not proper legislation. The testimony of all the men, all the engineers before the committee was that this is going to be an interlocking system. It is a monopoly. There is no doubt about it. Only one system is started, and it ought to be all there is in the community, because otherwise it would be duplication. We by the provisions of this bill will have the power to control and regulate prices and the question of bond issues, and we want to be able to handle it in proper shape. Therefore aliens ought not and should not be permitted to own the majority, if not practically all, of the stock, to handle and control our hydroelectric development, and control the lands in this country. I believe it will be a mistake if we do not carry this amendment or a similar amendment so as to guard against it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for time for the purpose of seeking information. A few moments ago I asked the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] whether it was within the province of the State itself to determine whether a river wholly within the borders of that State was a navigable river or a nonnavigable stream, or whether that power was within some outside jurisdiction, such as the Secretary of War. One of the reasons for asking the question was because of conditions in my State. We have a statute there under which it is forbidden any corporation to develop and transmit electric current outside the borders of the State of Maine. The specific thing I would like to know is, the State of Maine having declared a river nonnavigable, whether the Secretary of War or the Federal authorities may declare that river navigable and issue a license to a corporation, and whether that corporation can then go onto the river, build a dam, make a development, and transmit power outside the State of Maine, notwithstanding the statute and the settled policy of the State of Maine to confine electric power within its limits?

Mr. SIMS. The State of Maine has passed a statutory definition of navigable waters, has it?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. No; that has been left to the courts. The legislature of the State has passed a statute forbidding the transmission outside of its borders of electric power generated within the State. I want to know whether under the powers of this subsection this commission may license a corporation to develop a stream, generate electricity, and transmit it outside of the State of Maine in contravention of the statutes and the policy of the State? I should have to oppose such an overriding of the settled policy of any State.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, if the Government of the United States builds a dam on a navigable stream for the purpose of improving the navigable waters in Maine, whether the power developed there can be transmitted beyond the borders of the State of Maine?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I was inquiring more particularly whether a corporation which may be licensed under this section could do that.

My question involves perhaps two or three propositions: First, whether the decision by the supreme court of our State that a particular river wholly within our borders is nonnavigable is reviewable, and whether Federal authorities may determine this same river to be navigable, and then whether the commission provided for in this bill may license a corporation to go upon that river, build a dam, generate electric power, and do with that power that which the State of Maine has declared to be against the public policy of the State.

Mr. SIMS. But I understood the gentleman to say that the State of Maine has not defined navigable waters.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The supreme court has when cases have arisen.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, the courts have, but has the State of Maine by legislative enactment done so?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The legislature has never assumed, as far as I know, to decide. It is always a question for the courts.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think the State of Maine or any other State, directly or indirectly, could control what the Government of the United States may do with a navigable river or a watercourse, and whatever the Government of the United States may do through itself it can do by agents. That would be my answer.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Then, as I understand the gentleman, it is his opinion that the Secretary of War can declare a stream to be navigable which the Supreme Court of the State of Maine has declared is not navigable, and this commission can then license the corporation to build a dam there and generate power and transmit that power——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Of course I do not hold any such thing. I do not think the Secretary of War could determine that and override the decision of the courts that have jurisdiction of that identical question.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I am glad that it is the gentleman's opinion, then, that the Supreme Court of Maine has the last word in determining whether a river wholly within the boundaries of Maine is navigable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited to 15 minutes and the Chair has no power to extend it.

Mr. SIMS. That means to extend the time for three minutes.

Mr. DOREMUS. We are asking unanimous consent that the time already granted be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I am not now arguing that this should or should not be so. I want to get the opinion of the committee as to whether it is so.

Mr. DOREMUS. I merely want to say in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Maine that under the terms of this bill these water-power companies will operate under the laws of the States in which they are situated. It is so provided expressly. In answer to the other question, the committee having stricken out the definition of a navigable stream, what constitutes a navigable stream within the State of Maine would still be subject to the jurisdiction of the State courts.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I am glad to hear the gentleman's opinion. And not reviewable by outside authority.

Mr. DOREMUS. I would not say that. It might clearly be reviewable by a higher court.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this may be a brave moment for me, but I must dissent to all these proposals. If the time has come when a State legislature can override the Federal Government, then we had better clasp our hands in last embrace. I do not think the State of Maine or the State of Oklahoma or Colorado or any other 1 of the 48 States has anything to do with a stream which the Congress of the United States says is navigable. The Supreme Court for the last 25 or 30 years has rolled it around under their tongues as a tender morsel, as to what is a navigable stream, and we do not know and they do not know, and they have finally wound up with the response that any stream is navigable that Congress says is navigable.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, my objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] was based on the fact that I was fearful it might embarrass those who formed these companies in financing their projects. In thinking that over I have changed my mind. It seems to me that they could finance their project through bonds and that the capital could well be held, or the majority of it, in this country. So that objection disappears, it seems to me. To come to the question in respect to Canada, it seems to me that this is the answer so far as Canada is concerned: Canada is a comparatively new country. While she is rich in natural resources, she is not rich in ready money, in accumulated wealth. Canada will welcome this country coming in there and financing her projects of all kinds, and she will not feel that we are discriminating against her if we provide that in this country, rich in accumulated wealth, its projects shall be held by its own people. So I do not see any objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] will listen for one moment, it seems to me the question he propounded is this:

Suppose the supreme court of his State decided that a certain stream in that State was navigable, and the Secretary of War took the position opposite to that, what would be the result? The result would be that the question would get into the Federal courts, and the Federal courts would determine the question, and you could not tell whether they would determine it in accordance with the State courts of Maine until you had thrashed out the question in each individual instance. But the question would be one for Federal determination in a Federal court.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and the action of the State supreme court would have little or nothing to do with it, only in so far as they happened to be right.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Only in so far as their logic and arguments might shed light on the question.

Mr. SIMS. But the question the gentleman asked me was whether the Secretary of War could overrule the State court, and I said "no."

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The gentleman has answered what I was asking. I have got his opinion. I was not asserting it to be this or that, but I was asking for information.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, to be logical, ought to go further and provide stockholders and also a majority of the bonds.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the most powerful control on earth is the bondholder. In many instances the bondholder actually controls your railroads, selects the voting trustees, and everything of that sort.

Now, it is not consistent to finance that proposition abroad, and yet you will not let the men who buy the bonds, and without which these developers say they can not do—you let them buy all the bonds they want, but they shall not have any control whatever except a minority control as a stockholder. Now, if you are going the whole way, provide also against the bonds. Either way will reduce the credit of these companies, no matter which it is. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan any time I have left.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the committee to section 27 of this bill, which provides:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses or any vested right acquired herein.

Now, I can only repeat what I said a moment ago in answer to the gentleman from Maine, that water-power companies organized under this act will be obliged to operate under the laws of the various States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 29, line 7, after the word "States," by inserting "except boundary streams."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 7, after the word "States" insert "except boundary streams."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this includes the Rio Grande, the St. Lawrence, the Niagara River——

Mr. SIMS. And the St. Croix.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; the Detroit River, St. Marys, and so forth. Now, Mr. Chairman, for 10 years the Aluminum Co. of America has been knocking at the door of Congress for the right to destroy the Long Sault Rapids in the St. Lawrence River by constructing a dam there for the purpose of developing water power. That was 10 years ago, and it was estimated then that it would cost $45,000,000. Just how many more millions it will cost now, I am not prepared to say. They propose to develop at that one particular point 500,000 horsepower, the largest water-power development proposition in this country, I believe, not excepting Muscle Shoals. They have come here repeatedly and asked Congress for the privilege of developing that power, and every time Congress has refused to grant it and refused for good reasons. Except for the interposition of Congress at Niagara 10 years ago or more that most wonderful of all of the natural spectacles of the world would have been seriously impaired, if not destroyed, in my opinion. There are 50,000 people, according to the testimony before the committees of Congress, every year, not plutocrats, not millionaires, but clerks and people of moderate means who are able to spend a little money for a vacation, who go down the St. Lawrence River and run the rapids. This company proposes to dam the river at the foot of the Long Sault and destroy those rapids for the purpose of developing water power. They have never been able to get the consent of the Canadian Government, and now by a treaty under its terms this can not be done except by the two Governments acting jointly in the matter. I am not willing, I do not believe this House is willing, to take from the Congress the power to act finally in that matter and delegate it to this so-called commission of Cabinet officers, which in my opinion means to delegate it to the chief of some bureau in one of the departments.

I think that is a matter of sufficient magnitude and importance where the treaty rights of this Government and Canada are involved for them to come to Congress and get the positive action of Congress—to ask the action of Congress and direct consent of Congress on the proposition. But as the bill is written this executive secretary, whom we refused to strike out, acting for the commission, can grant the license to the Long Sault Development Co. I had a newspaper clipping sent me the other day from a Canadian paper——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It set forth that this aluminum company were again at work, and they propose now to begin over this fight—or to press more vigorously this fight, because they have never ceased—to secure the right to go on the St. Lawrence River and destroy those beautiful rapids and to construct this most powerful power-producing plant in this country. I believe that that is a matter that Congress itself ought to reserve for itself. I do not believe that we ought to trust that to this commission to pass upon. It is a matter of too vital importance to us, and it involves our relations with a neighboring country, and therefore—as this amendment, of course, would include Niagara—I think that ought to be limited under the law, so that Niagara and the rapids below Niagara, and the rapids on the St. Lawrence River should be excluded from the jurisdiction of this commission.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. ESCH. Was not this project once inaugurated in a bill presented to the House, I think by Mr. Maltby of New York, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, and defeated in the House?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was presented by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which had jurisdiction in those days of Niagara as well as the St. Lawrence. It was presented here and fought out on the floor of the House under suspension of the rules when it required a two-thirds vote to pass the bill. I opposed it then, and others did, too, and after full discussion the House not only refused to give a two-thirds vote in favor of the proposition but voted it down by a vote of two-thirds. I think that right ought to be preserved now to the Congress, so that when that great corporation comes here and asks for the privilege of producing in the present status of development of machinery 500,000 horsepower, that Congress itself ought to have the right to pass on it.

They have 500,000 horsepower now, and nobody knows when another Edison will come along and put another cog in the wheel or turn a wire the other way and make it 5,000,000 horsepower. We used to carry this power 200 miles. I think, perhaps, that is the limit now, economically. Who knows but what they may transmit this energy 2,000 miles? And they may not require any wires at all. I am not willing to prophesy against the possibilities of the future. And if it should come to pass that the Aluminum Co. of America, who own all the rights up there they can secure, should own this great horsepower—maybe many millions of it—it would be, in my opinion, a sad day for the country. And I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to delegate to any executive officer or to any commission composed of any gentlemen, either Cabinet officers or private citizens, the right to issue a license to any such corporation. And I think the amendment ought to be agreed to, and this commission, if we are to delegate powers to a commission, ought to be confined in its operations to streams inside the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not intend, and I want the committee to believe it, to spend a great deal of time in the discussion of this bill, or to take up any time unnecessarily. I speak now by reason of the fact that the Member who would properly speak to this question [Mr. SNELL] is confined to his home by illness, and I am seeking to say that which I believe he would say if he were here.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] lives way down on the southern boundary of the United States, and he is talking, and talking with the glamour of one who looks way across a broad country, without knowledge, but with an excess of imagination, about a question as to which apparently he has no information.

At the present time the Canadian Government and the Government of the United States take precisely the opposite view to that in which the gentleman from Mississippi indulges. No longer ago than this present noon hour I talked with the gentleman who is charged by the United States with supervision of its water powers, upon this very question, and he said that this Government and the Government of Canada unite in the opinion that there was no possible objection to the development of the power in the St. Lawrence River; that it was a burning shame that, with the shortage of fuel, with the need that we have in that northern country for warmth in the wintertime, to allow the wastage of that great water power to continue. He said there can be no possible objection to it, because you do two things: In the first place you obviate a dangerous obstruction to navigation.

Each time you shoot the rapids of the St. Lawrence River to-day you are running a great danger, and by damming it, as it is proposed to dam it, you obviate that danger and at the same time you create a wonderful power, a great saver of fuel. "Why," he said, "there is no diversity of opinion. Everybody who has studied the subject has agreed; all who have given any thought to it are of one mind. They all believe it is a burning shame that this project has been neglected."

And to-day a treaty is in mind and the preliminaries have even been undertaken for the development of that power. As I understand the question, it is not possible to develop the water power without a treaty. It is not possible for any great mammoth corporation, such as the gentleman has in his mind, to steal this power overnight and Congress not know what has been done. There is no such a thought in the mind of anybody. The gentleman is creating an ogre only to destroy it. The ogre does not exist. But the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States believe that navigation should be made safe through the St. Lawrence rapids, and they believe at the same time that this great power should be utilized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman having two minutes, but I would like to see if we can get agreement to close debate. Does the gentleman desire to discuss this further than the two minutes?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just two minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I ask that the debate close in seven minutes, two minutes to be granted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] and five minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close in seven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And when the development comes, as I say, it will not come overnight; it will not come secretly; it will not come because some great corporation wants it; it will not come because some great corporation wants to benefit privately. It will come because two great nations, sitting down together and discussing the subject, believing that navigation should be safe, believing that the power should be utilized, believing that fuel should be saved, unite in a solemn treaty, and that treaty will be presented to Congress, and Congress, in its deliberate wisdom, will pass on the treaty. Only in that way will it come. But it is certain to come, and certain to come in the near future, and when it comes it will be a boon to navigation, it will be a boon to fuel users, and it will be a boon to the two countries generally.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any use in having so many water-power commissions in the United States to take charge of similar development. The fact that a river is a boundary river does not change the nature of the development at all. It is just the same. In our present bill, while in the rule creating the committee, it excepted from the committee the jurisdiction to legislate on navigable boundary waters, of which the Committee on Foreign Affairs had jurisdiction, and I stated so in the hearings a dozen times.

But on the 2d day of May, 1918, Mr. FLOOD, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, introduced a bill, H. R. 11871, which reads:

> That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue license to any State, municipality, person, firm, association, or corporation, on the terms and conditions hereinafter provided, for the diversion of water in the United States from streams constituting in part or whole the boundary between the United States and any foreign country.

And then it goes ahead with provisions almost identical with the present bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I know, and he has not been able to pass it, and he never will pass it, in my opinion.

Mr. SIMS. I am not withholding anything. It provides that the Secretary of War have charge of water-power development on navigable boundary streams, which is a more restricted authority than that of the commission. I used to believe, and I still believe, so far as that is concerned, individually and personally, and have so always stated on the floor of the House, that I do not think that any dam or any works for the development of water power upon a navigable stream for, say, exceeding 500 horsepower should be granted by any commission, whether composed of 1 man or 1,000, without the consent of Congress.

Now, if the gentleman will confine his amendment simply to requiring the consent of Congress whenever the commission grants, or proposes to grant, the license for a project on a navigable boundary water, that it must report to Congress that it thinks the license ought to be granted, it will be with Congress as to whether the license be granted or not. Then we have just what the gentleman from Mississippi wants; and I think it would be better to have one commission to deal with all water-power development producing electricity than to have one commission, composed of three Secretaries, on navigable streams in the States and only one of that commission, as provided in this bill, to pass on the identical questions touching navigable boundary waters. But I think this bill should retain the jurisdiction of the commission to issue licenses upon boundary waters, but to be valid only with the approval of Congress. Then the gentleman will have just what he wants with reference to boundary navigable streams, and what I would be glad to see done with reference to all projects. But as chairman of the committee, and as a member of this committee, I am going to support the bill as reported. I do not think we should attempt to assume jurisdiction over boundary streams because of the rule depriving us of that jurisdiction in considering the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Did not the rule creating the committee exclude these boundary streams?

Mr. FOSTER. It does. Why not put it in now and conform to your jurisdiction?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. After the word "licenses," on page 28, line 24, insert "with the consent of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: Page 28, line 24, after the word "licenses," insert "with the consent of Congress."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the creation of a commission, with power to make investigations and employ whatever necessary help they need, to examine into all water-power sites of the country and discover new ones, and to report all of their data to Congress.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question to start on?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is the gentleman now confining his amendment to boundary streams?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. SIMS. I can not support it that way. If it is confined to boundary streams I would support it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will have several amendments to offer before we get through. The purpose of this amendment is to take from the commission which is created the right to issue licenses without the consent of Congress. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to delegate to this commission, composed of officials here in the various departments, the right to dispose of the water-power possibilities of this country. I think it is very well to have them make the necessary investigation or have some commission do it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In a moment. We authorized a commission to do it a year ago, with full power, and we appropriated the money for them to go out and collect all this data. Now, we create another commission and propose to give them the same power, and the same amount of money in an initial appropriation, to go out and do the same thing the two commissions operating in the same field, each absolutely duplicating the work of the other, with no limit on either one in its right to employ experts of all kinds—experts on transportation, experts on water-power development, experts in irrigation, experts in flood control, experts in architecture; all manner of experts.

Now, those two commissions ought to be able to furnish Congress with sufficient information for Congress to act intelligently upon. Therefore I have offered this amendment not to abolish the commission. Let this commission go on and do all the preliminary work that is necessary, and prescribe all the desirable rules, and then report the facts to Congress. Then Congress may intelligently act upon the propositions when they come up, just as they did in the general dam act. We provided in that a number of years ago general features touching the construction of dams, general features touching the building of bridges across navigable streams, and we can pass this act which will be applicable to all water power and fight it out now, and then let these people, when they want to develop the water power, come to Congress. I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, to turn over the development of the water power possibilities that I mentioned a moment ago to any commission. I disagree absolutely with the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] as to the desirability of it or the popularity of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] at the opening of the debate moved to strike out the first section of the bill, which created a commission, which was, of course, the very initial step. It was entirely necessary, of course, to have some administrative officers. Now, the gentleman moves to take away from the commission all the powers that were given it and all that it was intended for them to have.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Not all.

Mr. FERRIS. Practically all. What would you have this commission do? If the amendment prevails they would be an ornamental commission, with no powers to do anything.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would have them get up information and advise us.

Mr. FERRIS. You would propose to have them come back to Congress with every little project, precisely the spectacle we have had here every year when the Niagara Falls people came here and asked to get a one-year license. The House is told that just as soon as we get a comprehensive measure they will not have to come back here and trouble the House with this matter of an annual license.

I do not know; I have no more interest in this bill than the rest; but here is a bill proposing a comprehensive measure and every branch of the Government is trying to get something done. The estimates of the engineers show that we have water powers in this country aggregating from 60,000,000 to 200,000,000 potential horsepower, 6,000,000 horsepower of which has been developed and put to beneficial use. The rest of it is undeveloped and running idly to the sea, doing no good.

I do not know who is for this bill and who is not. I had hoped everyone wanted to do something. I did not know anyone wanted to kill it. The House is so well committed and the bills have always been killed at the other end of the Capitol. Surely this bill ought not to be killed here among its friends.

It certainly does seem to me that somebody at some time, somewhere, now that the Senate has finally passed a water-power bill, ought to show energy enough, intelligence enough, and cohesiveness enough to pass a bill that will get some more water-power development. Now, I have no license to lecture the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. He has been here longer than I have and probably knows more about this subject than I do; but I submitted to the gentleman yesterday, and I submit to him again to-day, that he ought to help us get a water-power bill through and not hinder us. He has been quite a pioneer on this subject. I hope he may help us now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am anxious to help the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. We would think by the gentleman's efforts that he was against any water-power legislation at all. I am sure he is not——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I am not.

Mr. FERRIS. But now let us follow his amendments. The first thing he did he sought absolutely to decapitate the bill, at the reading of the first line, by striking out the entire commission.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think that is a fact.

Mr. FERRIS. And now the gentleman seeks to strike out the very authority that we gave to the commission yesterday. The only deadlier thing the gentleman could do would be to move to strike out the enacting clause. Of course, we could load this bill up with amendments until that would be a welcome motion; but I hope the House, even in war time, will not forget itself and lose control of its bill in an effort to really develop water power. Bills similar to this have passed the House four times with scarcely a dissenting vote, and the President, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and every man in this House, I think, were convinced long ago that we ought not to burn up our coal and our oil and our fuel and let the water power of the United States run idly to the sea.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman thinks because I have offered an amendment to the bill that therefore I am opposed to it. He mentions the fact that this bill has passed the Senate. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that his committee deliberately took the bill that passed the Senate and amended it by striking out every word of the Senate bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Of course we did.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does that mean that the gentleman and his committee are opposed to any water-power development?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. That same thing happens every day. We were making the bill better, not trying to decapitate it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then why should it be thought any more of me that I am against the bill because I have offered an amendment to it than it should be of the committee because they have stricken out the entire Senate bill?

Mr. FERRIS. There is nothing miraculous or marvelous about that. We preserved all the good; we eliminated the bad; we preserved the salient principles. That is done every day. We think we have a better bill than the Senate bill, and if we have not, then at least we have something to go into conference with; and I hope the gentleman will be here then and exercise the same vigilance that he does now, because the gentleman knows these two bills have got to be worked out in conference; but if we strike out the commission, and failing in that strike out the powers of the commission, and bungle and chew up this bill, we will not go over to the Senate with anything. We are a long way from the home plate on water-power legislation now. The Senate does not agree with the House on water-power legislation. The Senate thinks the Federal Government has no rights with reference to water-power at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The Senate does not believe in any commission at all.

Mr. FERRIS. No; and the Senate wants to give away our water power in perpetuity. They think the Federal Government has no right to make a charge for it and they want it given away, not for a term, but forever. The House will never agree to that. Now, why not pass a bill something like bills that have heretofore passed the House, on something like correct principles, as Canada and France and many of the countries have done, and see if we can not get up a proper bill in conference? We may fail. But it is worth the trial. It is worth the effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. What seems unbusinesslike to me is the turning over of the water powers, these valuable resources, without compensation, and I think Congress should reserve the right to fix compensation for these valuable resources that are worth at least a billion dollars a year.

Mr. FERRIS. We do.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; not in the light of the knowledge we have. The bill that was presented here by the department, or by the three Secretaries, provided for a minimum charge of 10 cents per horsepower.

Mr. FERRIS. We struck that out.

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee struck that out. Of course it did not want to appear before the House as ridiculous.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then, if the gentleman agrees to that, that these valuable resources should not be turned over without compensation, why not place some safeguards in this bill to protect the interests of the Government?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HAUGEN. We have no protection whatever here. These valuable resources are to be turned over, and, if we accept the testimony of the gentlemen who have appeared before the committee, we may expect a charge of 10 cents or possibly 15 cents per horsepower, and that, too, with evidence before the committee which shows that people operating on our side of the Niagara charge $18 or $20 a horsepower more than they charge on the other side in Canada.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to reply to the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman was very vigilant in the committee, as he always is, and he is very vigilant now in seeing to it that something is charged for the water power, and I agree with him heartily in his desire. As the bill was presented to us by the Secretaries they had in it a minimum 10-cent charge. We struck that out, fearing that it might be considered as a guide for some small or nominal charge. One witness who appeared before the committee, Mr. Merrill, was of the opinion that the Government should not charge anything except a nominal charge. We did not accept that. We have always voted it down, and I do not think there ought to be any maximum charge. The gentleman is entirely right in his statement. They sell water power on the Canadian side for $11 a horsepower and in Buffalo for $24 a horsepower. There are many abuses about it. It all needs attention. It also needs to have some intelligent legislation to get development.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman join in an effort to fix some reasonable minimum charge for the water power—$15 or $20 or $10 or $8 or whatever it may be?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not believe the gentleman will conclude to do that, because he would find that that was all out of proportion.

Mr. HAUGEN. But under prices fixed by the public-service commission or as are provided for in this bill they charge double the price on this side that they do on the other side, and they charge enough on the other side to sufficiently amortize their plants in 25 years.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and they use the money to build parks there, and they have some large and beautiful parks.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of asking a question. Does this bill include boundary streams such as Niagara River?

Mr. FERRIS. I think it does. There is some question about it.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The purpose of the bill is to take in such streams as the Niagara River?

Mr. FERRIS. Not necessarily. It does not specifically exclude them.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It would do that.

Mr. FERRIS. I rather think it would, although there are some good lawyers on the committee who think otherwise.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. When the committee was provided for they specially excluded these bills that were before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and which were being considered.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman refers to certain bills, but I understood informally that some of the Committee on Foreign Affairs wanted us to leave them in. If that is an error, I care nothing about it. I think if the Committee on Foreign Affairs wanted them left out they ought to be left out. There is no disposition on the part of the Water Power Committee to take away anything that the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee wanted to retain, although I confess something ought to be done up there by somebody, and they to me are no more sacred than the rest.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I remember when the matter came before the Rules Committee that it was specially provided that in creating this committee they should have jurisdiction of certain bills, except bills over which the Committee on Foreign Affairs had jurisdiction under the general rules of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. We did not act on any of those bills that had been sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understand; but the committee has taken away from the Committee on Foreign Affairs the consideration of a bill which it has been at work upon for eight years.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee failed to specifically exclude those bills.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the committee did more than that. When I offered an amendment excluding from the bill and the control of the Water Power Committee this boundary stream the committee opposed that amendment and kept it in the bill. So that under the bill now this commission that you have created will have the power to issue the license at Niagara Falls and the Long Sault on boundary streams.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I can not understand how the bills before the Foreign Affairs Committee should come under the jurisdiction of this committee, because we have a bill that the committee is having hearings on upon which it has not reported, but on which we expect to report, and it does not look fair.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs when the bills were sent to me. I said, "Now, if there are any of these bills which you do not want to be included you, as chairman of the committee, should prepare an amendment and come and offer it in our bill excluding specifically what you shall retain under your jurisdiction. I supposed it was the Niagara Falls matter that they wanted to retain. There is no question on earth that the genleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], the chairman, understood that we would not undertake to legislate for the boundary streams, especially Niagara Falls.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. But the committee is legislating for Niagara Falls.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know about that. The bill was drawn, as the gentleman knows, by a departmental expert and submitted to the three Secretaries, and they went over it and perfected it and submitted it to the President. It never was my understanding that it was intended to include Niagara Falls. I do not know whether it would be included or not.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. In view of that statement, and the fact that the Foreign Affairs Committee has had it up so long, and it is so important a matter, does not the gentleman think that he ought to offer an amendment to exclude Niagara Falls boundary stream?

Mr. SIMS. I do not take the position that the language does include it, that it does include boundary rivers in the United States. I will say that I will not oppose any amendment of that sort.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion? It seems to me that no bill could touch Niagara Falls unless it was under some treaty. There is no treaty which allows us to touch that matter by a general bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There is a treaty.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. All the water allowed by that treaty is already taken care of.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. This complicates the thing——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to avoid complications, and it seems to me that it would be worth while to leave the bill in such a form that when a new treaty was negotiated it could simply say that the matter should be taken care of by this commission without new legislation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over without action at this time in order to give the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and the Committee on Foreign Affairs an opportunity to determine just what they want to do with reference to the exclusion of boundary waters, and what boundary waters. I understood all the time it had reference to waters included in the treaty which has been referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not add to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] a provision which will make it apply only to boundary streams?

Mr. SIMS. I would not oppose it, but the amendment he has offered applies to all the projects in the bill, which in good faith I could not accept.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The provision in the bill is that they can issue licenses, and so forth, along or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, and my amendment proposed to except boundary streams, and the committee refused to accept this. It includes now all streams, and when that was voted down I offered an amendment to require them to come to Congress, to get the consent of Congress in all cases, because you would not make an exception of boundary streams.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will change his amendment so as to provide they shall come to Congress on boundary improvement, I shall support it most heartily.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not do this: This bill is going to be before the House for two or three days yet, and I am sure that some of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs desire to have it in the bill, fearful that they can not get anything done, so I think we should adopt the suggestion of the chairman and leave the matter open, so that it will be subject to amendment at the suggestion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If they desire to go ahead and legislate by an independent bill, then exclude it; but if it develops that they want to have it in this bill so that they can get something done in this comprehensive plan, we can include it.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. My own idea is that the Niagara Falls proposition ought to be excluded from the consideration of this bill altogether.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Why not make it broad enough to cover the rapids below Niagara Falls and the rapids in the St. Lawrence River? Why limit it to Niagara Falls?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman would not have any objection to allowing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to consider it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent that further action upon this amendment be postponed.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; let us vote down this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to voting down this amendment as it is now offered.

Mr. FERRIS. That leaves the matter open for the gentleman's other proposition.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Then I ask that all further debate upon this amendment be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think after all of this offside discussion we ought not to close debate upon an important amendment in five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. But it has already been debated.

Mr. SIMS. Debate has been going on for half an hour.

Mr. WALSH. I thought this was about postponing. I thought that was what was taking up so much time.

Mr. SIMS. No; it is on the specific amendment requiring them to come to Congress upon all projects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object to the gentleman's request, this bill covers a general scheme, and if the two gentlemen from Mississippi desire to include a specific amendment excluding boundary streams, why do they not wait until we get to the proper place in the bill and at the end of section 28 insert language that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to boundary streams?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I did not know this was included; I was asking to get information, and I find it is.

Mr. RAKER. Why botch up this bill with the boundary waters and other things when you have it clear covering all of the streams, and if you want to exclude any particular stream or boundary water, when you get to the proper place in the bill, then a provision may be inserted that the bill shall not apply to boundary streams.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Why not do this while we are in this spirit of conciliation and agreement. I have no desire in the world to insist upon the pending amendment if the powers of this commission to issue licenses do not extend to boundary streams. Insert the words I suggest, "except boundary streams." It belongs there just as much as anywhere else. It does not botch it up any more here than it would to put it in somewhere else. If the gentleman will consent to let that amendment go in there so they may issue licenses on any of the navigable waters of the United States, except boundary streams, I shall withdraw the pending amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Is not what the gentleman wants that the provisions of this bill shall not apply to boundary waters?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Why not wait until we get to that provision of the bill and insert it there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Because I have already reached the place where, in my opinion, it belongs, and that is after the words "United States," in line 7, page 29.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at any time before the final disposition of the bill in Committee of the Whole an amendment may be prepared and offered by any member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs carrying out what they intended when the Committee on Rules brought in a rule covering what is intended to be excluded. I think good faith demands it.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not limit it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs—provide that an amendment may be offered

Mr. SIMS. We want them to prepare it.

Mr. FOSTER. Not necessarily.

Mr. WALSH. I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized for five minutes and yielded to the gentleman to ask unanimous consent, so my time has not commenced yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had yielded part of his time to the gentleman——

Mr. RAKER. I just yielded to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if we can not get unanimous consent, I suppose we will have to vote and be done with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded, and the regular order is upon the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the gentleman to another matter. On page 31, line 13, this language appears in the provision in which you give them power to hold hearings and other testimony to be taken as deposition at any designated place in connection with the issuance of any permits or license or the regulation of rates, services, or securities:

> And to require by subpœna, signed by any member of the commission, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence from any place in the United States.

Now, I suggest to the gentleman that he put some limitation there. For instance, take the words in line 20, "when duly designated by the commission for such purposes," but do not give to any member of this commission the right to sign a subpœna duces tecum that runs to any part of the United States against any citizen of the United States anywhere to bring any books before that commission. That is a power that ought not to be lodged in every individual member of the commission, and I suggest to the gentleman that he insert after that "when duly designated by the commission for such purpose."

Mr. SIMS. I want to say this was all very thoroughly thrashed out before the committee. The only object and purpose was that the commission as a commission would not have to be present and act on the issuance of every subpœna. They are not issued by the judges of courts; they are issued by the clerks——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. If you want a subpœna duces tecum, you would be able to go to any member of this commission and he can issue it against anybody in the United States anywhere and designate any number of documents a man might have in his possession and require him to bring them before the commission. That is a matter of sufficient importance to be submitted to the commission for them to act and pass judgment upon.

Mr. SIMS. That is what the committee fully discussed and fully considered and did not think it was of sufficient importance and that it would only delay and prevent anything like expedition in issuing a subpœna to have a witness come and bring some books that all three of the Secretaries—the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Interior, and Secretary of Agriculture—must join in signing every subpœna direct or authorize some one to do it. It is making too much out of a small matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is not a small matter at all. You can issue a subpœna against a man in San Francisco to bring all his books to Washington City.

Mr. SIMS. Any judge of any court can do it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Any court can not do it; any member of a court can not do it. It occurs to me it should be submitted to the commission to say whether they will put this man to all this expense and trouble to bring all his books here. Let the commission pass judgment upon that and authorize it to be done.

Mr. SIMS. In the meeting of the commission, of course, everything of commission character will be discussed, while the Secretary of War is at one place discharging his duties, the Secretary of the Interior is at another, and the Secretary of Agriculture is here; and must you wait in order to have a joint order of all of those to issue a simple subpœna for a man to bring a book or paper before the commission? It is placing too much importance and dignity to the signing——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the Secretary of War is to be in one place, the Secretary of the Interior in another, and the Secretary of Agriculture in another when they are performing their functions on this commission, then I think it is very desirable that some one person be required to give some little attention to the proposition regarding the rights of the people of the country who are being summoned here across the country, with all their records, books, and papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "commission," in line 13, page 31, the words "when duly designated by the commission for such purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: Page 31, line 13, after the word "commission," insert the words "when duly designated by the commission for such purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I think the provisions relative to the issuance of subpœnas in this section were taken largely from the provisions of the interstate-commerce act, the duties of which, in many respects, are analogous to those we are going to intrust to this commission. Under the interstate-commerce act any member of the commission can issue a subpœna, and the power is given to the examiners representing the commissioners to issue subpœnas wherever they happen to be taking testimony. It is done in the interest of expedition, and I believe they should have a like power in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That each preliminary permit issued under this act shall be for the sole purpose of maintaining priority of application for a license under the terms of this act for such period or periods, not exceeding a total of three years, as in the discretion of the commission may be necessary for making examinations and surveys, for preparing maps, plans, specifications, and estimates, and for making financial arrangements. Each such permit shall set forth the conditions under which priority shall be maintained and a license issued. Such permits shall not be transferable, and may be canceled by order of the commission upon failure of permittees to comply with the conditions thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

Is the purpose of this section to preserve the rights of persons who file applications for a term of three years in order that investigations might be had to determine whether the project is a feasible one and whether the party who files the application is the proper one to have a permanent license?

Mr. SIMS. I suppose the purposes of this permit can be gathered about as clearly from the language of the section as I can possibly state them.

Mr. WALSH. Now, it says, "and for making financial arrangements."

Mr. SIMS. That is something I never would have suggested putting in there, but it is in there, and it explains itself. They want to secure a permit and then investigate to see whether or not it is something they want to do, and get the information with reference to what it will cost to do it, and then go and see if they can borrow the money on the showing they can make from the survey. Now, those are my own surmises.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will permit, if I understand this provision, its purpose is to give the applicant a priority right for three years, during which he has an opportunity to make soundings, make surveys, and get the data necessary for his permanent application for a 50-year license. It is for the benefit of the Government and for the benefit of the individual.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose a man has got all that when he walks up to this commission and files his application for a permit; suppose he has the data and he has the money; but suppose the next day, after such a person files this application, somebody else comes in and files an application, and that person has not the data and has not raised the money, will the man who the day before was all ready to go ahead have to wait three years before he can get his permit, while the commission is securing this data and giving this other party who came in 24 hours later an opportunity to raise the money and make financial arrangements?

Mr. ANDERSON. I should think not.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The language itself shows that is not so. It says—that each preliminary permit issued under this act shall be for the sole purpose of maintaining priority of application for a license under the terms of this act for such period or periods, not exceeding a total of three years.

In other words, the time is absolutely within the discretion of the commission, but it shall not exceed three years. So, if a man says "I am ready to go on," the commission, I suppose, which will be composed of reasonable men, will say, "We will grant you 10 days or 20 days or 30 days" instead of 3 years.

Mr. ANDERSON. If he went ahead he would not make an application for a permit at all, but would make an application for a license.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We are assuming he will ask for some reasonable time. The length of time will be absolutely within the discretion of the commission, and they will be influenced by the circumstances as they actually exist at the time.

Mr. WALSH. The point I had in mind in making the inquiry was whether a person who was ready to begin operations under his license could be compelled to wait any appreciable length of time, three years or less, because somebody the next day after he filed his application for a preliminary permit, came in and filed another one, but was not ready to go ahead. Now, what I wanted to ascertain was, would the commission take the time to investigate the plans and financial standing of both of these parties because they had filed their applications so near together and keep the man who was ready waiting a year and a half until the other fellow could raise his money?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I should assume that under this act the commissioners would have two things in view. The first thing would be as speedy a development as possible, and the second, subject to that, would be a development upon such reasonable conditions as would be just for the public and for the Government; and, taking these things into account, they would make their determination.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That licenses under this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding 50 years. Each such license shall be conditioned upon acceptance by the licensee of all the terms and conditions of this act and such further conditions, if any, as the commission shall prescribe in conformity with this act, which said terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof shall be expressed in said license. Licenses may be revoked only for the reasons and in the manner prescribed under the provisions of this act, and may be altered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the commission after public notice given for 90 days.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: Amend, page 32, line 24, by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall just make a few remarks. The subject has been discussed fully, and there are wide differences of opinion. But it seems to me that in the development of hydroelectric power as it has been developed up to the present time we are not warranted in tying up the projects for so long a period as 50 years. In my judgment, a period of 30 years will give abundant time for length of bond for any of the interests that may desire to develop water power.

It is also my understanding, confirmed from an examination of the testimony before the committee, that bonds of this character are almost universally issued for a period of 30 years and not for a period of 50 years. Many private interests started out with the proposition of obtaining perpetual licenses, but the Congress will not listen to the proposition. They then fell back on the longest term of years possible—50 years. But, in my judgment, a 30-year period will be sufficient to make water-power bonds attractive, and we ought not to go beyond that period, and at the end of the period of 30 years the commission can make another readjustment, as conditions at that time may warrant.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Are not the gentleman's remarks adapted to a condition not presented by the bill? The bill does not provide for a straight 50-year term. The bill provides for terms varying in time, but in no case exceeding 50 years. Might not the commission find in some circumstances 30 years to be a long term, while in other circumstances surrounding another project 50 years would not be considered long, but would be necessary to finance that project? Is not that the reason why the bill is written as it is, in order to give elasticity and to enable the development of all water powers and not exclusively those that are favorable projects, such as would be easy to float for a short term?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, I realize that the House bill is much better than the bill which came over from the Senate, which provided for a term of absolutely 50 years. But I do not think the commission should take that as the term for which the lease should be issued.

This question, however, has been discussed so much that I do not care to trespass further upon the time of the committee, but I urge that the time be reduced from 50 years to 30 years.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on four occasions the House has thrashed out and pretty well adjudicated this 50-year term, each time finally agreeing on 50 years as the maximum term. Secretary Lane, in behalf of that bill, and in behalf of this particular clause of the bill, had this to say:

A 50-year tenure is advisable because engineers, capitalists, and other interests in water-power development unite in asserting that a definite and fixed tenure is essential to secure development. Fifty years was fixed as the term because a permit for that period will enable the developers to finance the projects and through amortization, or otherwise, secure the return of their investment with interest thereon.

Mr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, and at the head of the water-power department in that bureau, has this to say of the 50-year term:

The 50-year term is of sufficient length to facilitate all reasonable bond issues and contracts on which large industries may be built up. A term lease with suitable renewal features provides for continued operation, much as does an indeterminate lease, but automatically requires a review of operations under the lease at the end of the term. Material modifications not now foreseen may become highly desirable and can readily be made on expiration.

Mr. Merrill, who is in the Water Power Division of the Agricultural Department, that has to do with water power on the forest reserves, has this to say:

It is advisable to grant a lease of considerable length in order that the lessee may have an opportunity to realize the expected profits upon his enterprise. Hydroelectric developments differ from many other public-utility enterprises, such as street railways, gas plants, water-supply systems, etc., in that they involve a much larger initial investment and can not be extended to meet increasing demands with the readiness that a street railway or a water-supply system can be extended. In an entirely new enterprise it may often take from 5 to 10 years for a hydroelectric plant to reach a point where it has paid off the early deficiencies in earnings and is operating on a profit-producing basis.

In addition to that, we had ex-Secretary Fisher before us, who was the Secretary next preceding Secretary Lane. He testified that he thought 50 years was the correct time, as did Mr. Gifford Pinchot.

In addition to this, as was suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], this is not a hard and fast 50-year term; it is a maximum of 50 years. And in the little one-horse projects of the West, so-called, you need a term as long as 50 years in order to secure proper development. Perhaps some of the larger ones would not need as long a time as that.

Mr. McARTHUR. What does the gentleman mean by "little one-horse projects in the West"?

Mr. FERRIS. I have no reference to the very extensive projects in the gentleman's territory. He has more water power than anything else. We hope to help him get it developed.

In addition to this, there are two crowds who have entirely different and opposite ideas about the proper term for a water-power franchise. One crowd of people advocating water-power legislation want it to be for one day only, as it is under the present law, giving the department the power to revoke without notice or the payment of anything. The other crowd want it to be forever, want it in perpetuity, want it without regulation, want it without royalties. I think it is but fair to the House and to the adjudication that it has heretofore given the matter to stick pretty close to this maximum of 50 years. I think we can not go very far wrong on that. For that reason I think the gentleman's amendment ought to be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words, and I should like to direct the attention of the distinguished chairman of this special committee to the language in line 9, on page 33, which says:

And may be altered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the commission after public notice given for 90 days.

Under that construction it would seem that some sort of a notice would have to be given every day for 90 days. Would not this language be clearer and would it not accomplish the purpose by saying:

And upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the commission after 90 days' public notice.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this portion of the bill was put in by an amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], to whom I will now yield to explain it.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman sincerely for giving the author of this peculiar language a chance to explain it.

Mr. RAKER. It is a sort of strained construction that the gentleman places upon it—very strained, indeed, as I view it.

Mr. WALSH. Strained or strange?

Mr. RAKER. Both strained and strange.

And may be altered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the commission—

That is one condition—

after public notice—

That is another condition. There must be public notice.

Mr. WALSH. Public notice must be given.

Mr. RAKER. It says—

After public notice given for 90 days.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; it sounds like a jail sentence.

Mr. RAKER. There is no distinction in the use of language if you say that a man shall go to jail for 90 days or that you shall give notice for 90 days.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is aware that the usual phraseology is—

After 90 days' public notice.

Mr. RAKER. No; not necessarily. I appreciate the stricture made by the gentleman, but this means that there must be a notice given——

Mr. WALSH. For 90 days.

Mr. RAKER. This notice must run 90 days. No action can be taken in regard to the adjustment of the agreement, and the commission has no power to act until after 90 days' publication of this notice. You might say—

After giving notice for 90 days—

After giving 90 days' notice.

It means just the same. I am no stickler for words—results are what we are after. The amendment provides for that. The mere phraseology as to where you place these words as suggested will make no material difference. Notice for 90 days before the agreement can be acted upon is what we are after. This we will get as the bill now stands or as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is quite immaterial where you place these words, either before or after the words "public notice."

Mr. WALSH. I think, if the gentleman will permit, that the ordinary construction which would be placed on that language is that this notice would have to be given for 90 days; that is, the publication would have to be in fact for 90 days, and probably it would require the publication in the newspaper every day for 90 days.

Mr. RAKER. That is all right.

Mr. WALSH. In some communities where these water powers are developed they might not have any daily newspaper.

Mr. RAKER. There might be a weekly newspaper.

Mr. WALSH. It would not be published then for 90 days.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; it would.

Mr. WALSH. Not unless they got out an extra edition.

Mr. RAKER. No; as often as the paper was published it would remain in the paper from the first day of publication, so that the notice would be published in the paper for 90 days. It does not say in a daily or a weekly newspaper.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out in line 9, page 33, the words "given for 90 days" and insert, after the word "after," in line 9, before the word "public," the words "ninety days," so that it will read "and the commission after ninety days public notice."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 9, after the word "after," insert the words "ninety days," and after the word "notice" strike out the words "given for ninety days."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the chairman of the committee how late he expects to run this evening? The next section, I understand, may provoke some discussion.

Mr. SIMS. Judging from the past, when the gentleman from Massachusetts asks such a question as that I deem it better to move that the committee rise.

Mr. WALSH. I am willing for the next section to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That in issuing preliminary permits or licenses hereunder the commission may in its discretion give preference to applications therefor by States and municipalities provided the plans for the same are deemed by the commission to be best adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region; and as between other applicants, the commission may likewise give preference to the applicant the plans of which it finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region.

That whenever, in the judgment of the commission the development of any project should be undertaken by the United States itself, the commission shall not approve any application for such project by any citizen, association, corporation, State, or municipality, but shall cause to be made such examination, surveys, reports, plans, and estimates of cost of the project as it may deem necessary, and shall submit its findings to Congress with such recommendations as it may deem appropriate concerning the construction of such project by the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. How long does the gentleman think it is going to take to finish this bill?

Mr. SIMS. It is utterly impossible for anybody to state definitely, but I hope that we may finish it to-morrow. If we do not, I am not going to ask to have Monday, as far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reason I ask is because Members are constantly asking about the program for next week, and I wanted the information upon which to found information.

Mr. SIMS. If we can keep a quorum here to-morrow, I think we ought to finish it, but if not, certainly on Tuesday.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean by that that he expects to take the bill up Monday?

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not.

Mr. GILLETT. My understanding is that we expect to meet on Monday and take up the Unanimous-Consent Calendar.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 11, after the word "commission," strike out the words "may in its discretion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall"; in line 14, after the word "commission," strike out the words "to be best" and insert the words "as well"; in line 16, after the word "region," insert "as the plans of other applicants."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, with this amendment pending, and without waiting to take any further action by the committee, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1419, the water-power bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WINGO, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one day, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 31, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 12847) amending the Revised Statutes covering the naturalization laws; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COOPER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 12848) to correct the military record of Marion Workman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12849) granting an increase of pension to Logan Hufhines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 12850) granting a pension to Annie S. Marsh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRODBECK: Petitions of Council of Christ Evangelical Church, Spry, Pa.; of Zion Reformed Church, of York, Pa. (52 signatures); and of the St. John's Reformed Church, Red Lion, Pa. (43 signers), in favor of war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers accompanying a bill granting increase of pension to Charlotte C. Brandau, widow of Dr. Gustavus R. Brandau; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of the Church Periodical Club of New York City, protesting against the application of the zone system to periodicals. Also, petition of J. Frank Howell, president of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, of New York, against the proposed tax on stock brokers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the United Liquor Dealers' Association, of Kings County, N. Y., protesting against the proposed prohibition to the emergency Agricultural appropriation bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GOOD: Petition of voters of Tipton, Iowa, for war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Atkins, Iowa, protesting against tax on gasoline; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of R. W. Foster, Augusta, Ill., for prohibition of the use of grain, sugar, and coal in the manufacture of alcoholic and malt beverages; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Rev. Fred Reed, pastor, and the members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Augusta, Ill., for the passage of the war-prohibition bill at the earliest possible date; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of David K. Baxter, Nauvoo, Ill., and others for immediate national prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of David H. Moran, Coal Valley, Ill., to prohibit the use of grain and cereals for the manufacture of alcoholic beverages; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Rev. Frank Ferguson Ogle, pastor Presbyterian Church, Coal Valley, Ill., for "bone-dry" legislation for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HADLEY: Petition from citizens of Blaine, Wash., urging a national "bone-dry" law as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HERSEY: Petition of Mrs. Cynthia Harris and 25 other ladies of Dixmont, Me., urging war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCLINTIC: Memorial of the Ellis County Sunday School Association, favoring the war prohibition measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLEMORE: Petition from the pharmacists of Waco, Tex., asking for the passage of the Edmonds bill, creating a pharmaceutical corps in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SANFORD: Petition of residents of Albany County, N. Y., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNELL: Petition of citizens of Champlain, N. Y., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of seven Protestant churches of Creston, Iowa, concerning the appointment of chaplains in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee at the beginning of the tasks of a new day to make mention of Thy name and recognize Thy sovereignty in all the earth. We know that we can not make laws that contravene Thy law. We can not succeed in establishing justice and peace among men apart from the divine guidance. And yet into our hands have been committed the interests of unborn generations who wait upon the issue of this day and the performance of the duty of Thy servants in this Senate. Do Thou give special guidance and blessing that we may do all things according to Thy will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Kendrick	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Phelan	Sterling
Curtis	Lenroot	Saulsbury	Swanson
Fernald	Lodge	Shafroth	Trammell
Gore	McCumber	Sheppard	Underwood
Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Sherman	Wilfley
Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Simmons
Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smith, Md.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent on official business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-three Senators have answered to their names. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. NEW, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. FALL, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. BENET, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent owing to illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

NOTICE UNDER UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Senate resolution 289, submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] August 12, reads as follows:

That the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to notify all absent Members that on Thursday, August 15, unanimous consent will be asked to vacate the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on the calendar day July 30, 1918.

That resolution was ordered to lie on the table. I ask for its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PLACE OF DRAFT REGISTRATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in connection with the morning business I desire to present to the Senate something that I think ought not to be delayed one moment, and I think the Senate, and, above all, those citizens of the several States who are at present located in the city of Washington doing official business, ought to be informed of it and should know what their rights are. It appears to me that there is being made one of the most brazen attempts on the part of the local registration board of the District of Columbia to secure the registration in the District of Columbia of every one of the thousands of clerks and Government employees now temporarily located in the District.

Mr. President, on Friday, August 30, a young man from my State called at my office in reference to the matter of his registering under the new draft law. The young man had been working for some time in the Geological Survey in the Interior Department. He received with his pay slip a little notification which I want to call attention to in a short time. The effect of it was that this citizen of North Dakota should not register in North Dakota, and the real effect of the whole slip, which is sent to every one of our clerks from every State—the real declaration is that he has no right to register in his own State, the State of his legal residence, and should register in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, I want first to call attention to the law approved May 18, 1917, in reference to registration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On what page?

Mr. McCUMBER. Page 5. It reads:

Provided further, That in the case of temporary absence from actual place of legal residence of any person liable to registration as provided herein such registration may be made by mail under regulations to be prescribed by the President.

Right here I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who is conversant with all laws relating to registration, whether that provision has been modified in any way?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The only modification of it that I know anything about is the modification in the draft act which was finally passed yesterday. That is really not a modification, but it covers in part the subject. The proviso at the end of section 3 is:

That in the case of temporary absence from actual place of legal residence of any person liable to registration as provided herein, such registration may be made by mail under regulations to be prescribed by the President.

Mr. McCUMBER. So far it is the same as the old law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (reading)—

And provided further, That men registered under the provisions of this act who have served in the Navy of the United States shall, upon their own application, be permitted to reenlist—

And so forth.

It is practically a reenactment of the statute that the Senator has just read.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I understood. Now, I want the Senator to listen to this slip of paper that is being placed in the hands of every citizen of every State subject to draft who is now in the District of Columbia. This is what it says:

All men who have reached the age of 18 on registration day and who have not at that date reached the age of 46 must register. The only exceptions are those who have heretofore registered and those in the military or naval service of the United States.

Watch the newspapers for the date set for registration.

Now, here is what I want Senators to ponder over:

You must register at the designated place of the local board within the area of which you are a resident on registration day. Residence means the place where you actually live. The maintenance of a home and voting privilege elsewhere does not give you the right to register at such place.

In other words, residence and voting privileges and home in the State of Oregon, or Minnesota, or Iowa, or North Dakota does not give the registrant the right to register in those States if he is actually living in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask who signs that order?

Mr. McCUMBER. The central registration committee.

Mr. LODGE. The central registration committee of Washington has not the power to set aside the law. That sets aside the law, which specifically gives to these persons the right to register by mail in the States where they really live and where they have their voting privilege, and it ought to be stopped at once. There is no reason why men who are registering in your State or mine should be added to the Washington quota.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not half of what is in this little slip that is sent out. Not only is there that declaration which is not true, but there is a plea and a bid to each individual that he shall forget his home and register in the District of Columbia for certain conveniences that will be given him there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator that under section 55 of the rules and regulations adopted by the Provost Marshal General the rule that he insists upon is put into operation; that is, that the proper place to register is the man's permanent home.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I called up the Provost Marshal General, and he said that was right, and asked who it was who was sending out notices of that kind. It was found out, let me say to the Senator, that every one subject to draft in the city of Washington has received one of these slips, and this morning these slips were being shoved under the doors of the several offices in the Senate Office Building in the city of Washington.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I read that rule to the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Section 55 provides:

SEC. 55. Registration by mail: The proper place for filing a registration card is the local board having jurisdiction over the place in which the registrant has his permanent home. If, for any reason, it is inconvenient for the registrant to present himself in person to such local board, he may accomplish his registration by applying to the local board nearest him and having his registration card filled out and certified by such local board and himself mailing his registration card to the local board having jurisdiction over the place in which he has his permanent home. In such case the local board certifying to the registration card shall not issue a registration certificate, but the local board having jurisdiction over the place in which the registrant has his permanent home shall issue a registration certificate upon receipt of the registration card.

Where persons have attempted to register by mail and it appears that their registration cards have not reached their destination, they should promptly cause themselves to be registered as herein provided.

The Senator will see from that that the proper course of procedure for the boards here is to grant the young men the right to register here, but they have to take note of their permanent home.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the Senator will see here that, instead of that, the registration committee specifically state that these boys should not register as of their own legal residence, because, they say—

Residence means the place where you actually live. The maintenance of a home and voting privilege elsewhere does not give you the right to register at such place—

That is not true. Then they go on:

nor does registration in the District of Columbia in any way affect your voting or your right to vote in the city, town, or State from which you came to the District of Columbia and to which you may expect to eventually return.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand from what the Senator has just read that the registration board of the District of Columbia permits men who are voters in Massachusetts or Illinois, or elsewhere, to continue to vote?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it preserves to them that privilege, which the Constitution assures them.

Mr. LODGE. That strikes me as very liberal indeed.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is very considerate of them. That is not all, Mr. President. Let us see this bid now. After stating to these young men that the proper place for them to register is not in their own States, where their legal residence is, but in the District of Columbia, they go on further and say:

Registration in the District of Columbia will be of the greatest advantage to you. The local board in the District of Columbia which handles your case is within easy reach, and you can personally ask and have answered at once all questions in connection with any feature of your case. Any necessary affidavits which are to be filed in connection with your particular business, employment, or job can be made better if you register here, as your business or employment is here. The District board, which handles all appeals and industrial or agricultural claims, is also here, and you will again have the advantage of immediate action in your case.

Your physical examination can be accomplished here, both by the local board and medical advisory board, and you are saved all travel expenses incident to appearance for the physical examination. This means untold advantage to you, as the experience of hundreds of registrants of previous registrations has been that out-of-town local boards have failed to answer letters and telegrams, with the result that hundreds of men living in the District of Columbia, but registered outside thereof, have been declared delinquents or deserters from the Army, when the men were not at all in fault, but could not get the out-of-town board to act promptly.

The above regulations and conditions apply to all except transients, who alone will be permitted to register at the city post-office building.

CENTRAL REGISTRATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. President, this notice came in the pay check of this boy, who is an employee of the Interior Department, and I have ascertained that similar notices have been sent out to everyone working in that department and, I think, everyone in the city. I called up the chief clerk of the Interior Department and was advised by him that he had put this notice in the envelope of every male employee of the Interior Department, and that he did so at the request of the local draft board of the District of Columbia. I then called up the Provost Marshal General and was advised that the registration rules provided that men should register where they have their homes, and that this young man should register in North Dakota, where his parents reside, and which is his real home.

Mr. President, that is the bid and that is the declaration. Now let us again turn to the instructions to registrants and see how this cunningly devised instrument would naturally lead every one of the boys to register as of Washington, at such and such a number and street. I notice here instructions to registrants under the new age limit, which instructions have been sent to all draft boards. This is from the Official Bulletin of Wednesday, August 28, 1918, and tells how to register:

Question 2. Permanent home address. This means where you have your permanent home now.

They have put the word "now" in big capitals, but they have left the word "permanent" in the same kind of type as is the rest of the statement—not—

the place where you work, nor the place where you were born, unless that is your permanent home. Be prepared to give it this way: "100 Woodward Avenue, Detroit, Wayne County, Mich.," or "R. F. D. No. 2, Jonesville, Smith County, Pa."

Now I turn here to the registration certificate. It is a blank form already printed and is as follows:

P. M. G. O. Form No. 68.

REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE.

To whom it may concern, greetings:

These presents attest that in accordance with the proclamation of the President of the United States and in compliance with law,

(First name.) (Middle name.) (Last name.)

has submitted himself to registration and has by me been duly registered this _____ day of _____, 1918, under the supervision of the local board designated on the back hereof.

_____,

Registrar.

[Place stamp of local board on back of this card.]

The very form that is used there is a form that is intended only in cases where the applicant is registered in his own actual place of legal residence.

Mr. President, what is this for? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds will he yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator if he knows whether or not the War Department exercises any supervision over notices that are gotten out by the local boards?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know. That is the question which I am presenting at this time, in order that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who is in more direct communication with the War Department, may call attention to this, and see that this method of securing for the benefit of the District of Columbia the registration of some thirty or forty thousand clerks who ought to be credited elsewhere shall not be successful.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it looks to me as though the War Department ought to exercise supervision in all matters of that sort, in order that there may be uniformity of action by all the local boards in such cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. Even without any such suggestion whatever, Mr. President, many employees would not be able clearly to differentiate between legal residence and actual place of living or temporary residence. That being the case, this board has taken hold of them and has made it clear to them that legal residence is not to be considered at all, but only their temporary place of abode is to be considered. Their real home, therefore, probably would not be given at all.

Now, why is this done? I will tell you, Mr. President: In this way the registration in the District of Columbia will be greatly increased and the registration lists of each one of the various States will be to just that extent diminished. The District of Columbia will get credit for these men, whereas the States of which they are citizens will not get any credit. It is apparently, Mr. President, an attempt on the part of the District board to swell the registrants in the District of Columbia. Whether this is due to local pride or with the idea of relieving labor conditions I am not prepared to say; but labor conditions here are nowhere near as bad as they are in the rural districts of the United States, and especially in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would not the effect of this also be to relieve the District from supplying its proper quota from its local bona fide residents?

Mr. McCUMBER. It will not only relieve them from supplying their proper quota, but it will allow the number which would be measured by that relief to do the kind of work that is being done here all around us, where men are in each other's way, where none of them are doing more than 35 per cent of a man's work, while the whole agricultural section of the United States is crying for labor.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will call attention to this circular in order that its evil effect and unlawful purpose may be frustrated.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr.

SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4597) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12731) amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Sioux City, Red Oak, Storm Lake, Tipton, Burlington, Garrison, Barnes, Alta, Dickens, Le Mars, Kirkman, Cushing, Ottumwa, and Britt, all in the State of Iowa, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LENROOT presented a petition of prominent business and professional men of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the postponement of the submission of the woman-suffrage amendment until after the war is over, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Vorden, Cal., concerning the high cost of living, and favoring the enactment of legislation to reduce the high cost of living, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Sunday School of the Calvary Presbyterian Church, of Riverside, Cal., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRANDEGEE (for Mr. MCLEAN):

A bill (S. 4898) granting a pension to Emeline C. Starr (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A bill (S. 4899) granting an increase of pension to Jacob C. Wilson; and

A bill (S. 4900) granting an increase of pension to John A. McAleer; to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 170) to make the Star-Spangled Banner, as edited by T. Leslie Carpenter, B. Mus., the official national anthem of the United States of America (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on the Library.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On July 15:

S. 3009. An act granting the consent of Congress to the P. M. C. Coal Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across Tug River, connecting Pike County, Ky., and Mingo County, W. Va.

On July 16:

S. 4444. An act to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China; and

S. 4555. An act to validate certain public-land entries.

On July 30:

S. 3529. An act to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) regulating the operation of the act entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had occasion yesterday to suggest that under the unanimous-consent agreement no other business than the unfinished business can be considered except when that shall have been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, do I understand that the request of the Senator from Oregon is the matter that is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is about to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Senator from Oklahoma has asked may be temporarily laid aside. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order to afford the Senator from Oregon an opportunity to prefer his request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I understand the purpose of the request is to enable the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to ask for the consideration of the joint resolution which was submitted to the Senate yesterday afternoon. I do not care to be unreasonable about this matter at all, but I think that it developed yesterday that that joint resolution ought to receive consideration by the Committee on Public Lands. The joint resolution was prepared hastily; the report upon it was signed by members of the committee without any session to consider it; it was simply passed around in a perfunctory way by the clerk of the committee, as many such matters are, and I am sure that the members of the committee who signed that report have not given to it careful consideration. No harm can come by letting the Committee on Public Lands further consider the joint resolution.

Section 8 of the bill which we passed yesterday by adopting the conference report simply provided:

That any person, under the age of 21, who has served or shall hereafter serve in the Army of the United States during the present emergency, shall be entitled to the same rights—

And so on.

No rights can accrue under that provision until after the boys of the country under 21 years of age are registered and actually brought into the Army and shall have served in the Army.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is the request for unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think so, particularly now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that I am talking out of order, but I wish to explain my position, and I am sure that no Senator cares to cut off an explanation which a Senator may desire to make.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not desire to do that; but I thought the Senator was discussing the merits of the proposition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not care to discuss it except for the purpose of showing that there is no emergency for the consideration of this joint resolution, and I shall have to interpose an objection to its present consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I withdraw my request.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator states that no harm could come from delaying action for the reason that the provision of the conference report would not become effective until after registration had been had of the boys of 21 years and under. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that immediately upon the signing of the draft-extension bill there will be more than 200,000 boys under 21 years of age now in the service, who can on the next day make application for homesteads under the provisions of the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose the Senator refers to those who have already volunteered and are in the service. I am glad the Senator calls attention to that. I had in mind, of course, only the vast number of boys who will be brought into the service under the bill which we passed yesterday. Now, it seems to me that the Committee on Public Lands ought to consider this matter further, and, with the hope that the committee will do so at once, I shall have to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not understand that that is the matter before the Senate. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] asked unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business; and the Senator from New Mexico interposes an objection to laying aside the unfinished business because he does not want to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution to which he refers.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is precisely my position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as a matter of personal privilege at this moment I think I should like to make a statement with reference to this bill, the joint resolution, and the objection of my colleague [Mr. JONES]. I think this is the second time in my experience in the Senate that I have ever sought to inject myself into the proceedings of the Senate; but, in view of the fact that the debate continued at some length yesterday, at the instance of my colleague, and was continued by him, I think that I should make an explanation to the Senate, in justice to myself, as to the status of this matter at this time.

I regret very much that my action in offering the amendment which was adopted by the Senate and by the House and by the conferees did not meet with the approval of my colleague. I had no reason to think that it would be disapproved of by him, and I admit my error in not having consulted him about it before.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am making a personal statement. However, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am inclined to think that a wrong impression may prevail regarding my position if the statement just made by my colleague is not supplemented by something further.

On yesterday my colleague asked me, as I observe it in the morning's RECORD, if I was opposed to his amendment. At that time I had in mind the proviso to the amendment which had just been discussed somewhat by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and having that proviso in mind occasioned the reply which I made at that time. I did state on yesterday that the purpose of the amendment met with my entire approval, and I thought it would eventuate in effecting a very commendable thing. The general purpose of the provision which has gone into the bill, and which was put there at the instance of my colleague, does meet with my approval; but the fact that it is necessary now to pass a joint resolution concerning it shows that it is not entirely satisfactory to my colleague himself.

It is with a view of bringing about some adjustment of the matter, and framing legislation in such a way as shall meet the views of all Senators who understand the situation, and who want to accomplish the same end, that I am seeking to have the Committee on Public Lands consider the whole question.

Mr. FALL. If I may be allowed to continue, Mr. President, to correct the impression upon the mind of my colleague, he seems to think that I agree that some supplemental legislation is necessary to carry out or to perfect the provisions of the amendment known as the Fall amendment—to some extent erroneously so called—as it was adopted by the two Houses and as it has gone to the President. I was proceeding to state exactly what has occurred, and very frankly and unhesitatingly, as I always do. The Senate will know my position when I get through.

I drew this amendment, had it printed, and offered it as an amendment to section 8 of the Senate print of the bill. One of the Senators who was interested in the adoption of section 8, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], made a request of me in the Senate, coupled with a statement that he favored the amendment, but requested that I might offer it as a separate section of the bill. I yielded, of course, with courtesy to the Senator and announced that at the proper time I would offer it. There was some little discussion at this point or later in the proceedings, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], for whose great legal ability and learning we all have great respect in this body and whom we recognize as possibly being more familiar with the public-land statutes and with the statutes of the United States generally than almost any other Senator, suggested to me that under the law as it existed the purpose of the amendment might possibly be interfered with—I am not undertaking to repeat his language; it will be found in the RECORD—unless a further provision should be adopted in reference to the method through which the applicants might make their applications for entry. At that time I did not agree with the Senator, and so stated, that it was necessary to change the law. I took the position then that under its power to enact rules and regulations, having under the decisions of the courts the full effect of statutes unless contrary to the provisions of some law, the Department of the Interior itself could adopt regulations necessary to put the amendment as it stood into effect. The Senator from Montana, however, came to my desk with the law in his hands; and while he did not say positively that in his judgment it was necessary to adopt any further language, he yet thought that to clear up the matter it was best so to do. I yielded, through deference to his learning and his sincerity, without hesitation, therefore adding to the printed amendment the language with reference to the method through which these boys could apply for their homesteads; in other words, that they might make the application here or in a foreign country through anyone authorized by the laws of the State in which the land lay to take oaths or acknowledgments.

I should have made this statement when finally offering the amendment; but no opportunity presented itself to offer the amendment until after the hour of 4 o'clock had arrived, and under the unanimous-consent agreement I was precluded from speaking upon it. Otherwise, I should have then given credit—if credit can be obtained by anyone—to the Senator from Montana as the coauthor of this amendment, which has finally been adopted into legislation.

Mr. President, I was notified on yesterday morning that the Department of the Interior thought that something should be enacted by Congress, following the enactment of this legislation, in the line of the joint resolution which is now pending. At the request of certain Senators I met in the lobby of this building the Commissioner of Public Lands and Mr. Finney, and this joint resolution was there presented to me, already drafted, and the request was made that I should agree to support it. I again stated to those gentlemen what I had stated to the Senate here—that I had not thought the additional legislation engrafted in the amendment necessary to carry out the purposes of the amendment, but that if the Department of the Interior was impressed with the idea that that should have been adopted, and then should be clarified by the adoption of this joint resolution, I would adopt the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, whose suggestion I understood it to be, as explained to me by the Commissioner of Public Lands; that while I did not agree with him as to the necessity for it, I would assist to the best of my ability in the passage of the joint resolution. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] was present during a portion of the time. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was present during the entire time.

This is my position. I have nothing to do with the joint resolution here, except that at the request of the Department of the Interior I have agreed to support it, and I will do so.

Mr. President, there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of some of the Senators here with reference to what the amendment is intended to do, and the necessity for it. The law stands now, Mr. President, that an acknowledgement or a verification of a homestead application made by a soldier need not be made in the State or in the land district. It is not necessary to have it made even before an officer authorized to administer oaths, but under the statute itself it may be made before his commanding officer. Men 21 years of age are not in the condition that my colleague seemed to think when he said yesterday that he objected to boys here in Washington being allowed to enter lands in another State. They can enter lands in another State now. It is not necessary that they should be residents of the State or of the land district. Every man in the United States Army entitled to make a homestead, and who has not availed himself of the privilege, can make a homestead entry now in any State in the Union where he may find land suitable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I think I understand the law, and I will follow with a full explanation as to exactly what it is, if my colleague will allow me.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the legal question, but merely for the purpose of asking my colleague to express his opinion as to any reason for making a discrimination between the boys under 21 years of age and those over 21 years of age with respect to a relinquishment.

Mr. FALL. I will take great pleasure in explaining to my colleague my reason for this: It is simply because the boy over 21 years of age who has entered this army at this time—we are now dealing with war measures—has had his opportunity to enter a homestead. He had that opportunity immediately upon arriving at the age of 21. If he has not availed himself of it, under the law he still can do so without any difficulty whatsoever. Under the law as it stands, it is impossible for the boy under 21 years of age, without some supplemental legislation such as we have enacted, even to avail himself of the privilege granted by the law which has been upon the statute books many years, that a soldier in the service of the United States even 18 years of age should have homestead rights. That is the law as it stands; but without supplemental legislation these boys who are being drafted and taken into the service have no opportunity at all to make a homestead entry except under certain conditions. If you put them in the same category as the other soldiers who are entitled to make a homestead entry, then they could make it when absent from the land district without the necessity of obtaining a furlough to go to the land district. They can make it under one condition. It has been the law, Mr. President, for 30 years or more—something like that; I am not exactly positive as to the date, but for many years—that a soldier need not go to the State nor to the land district to make his homestead entry before some officer within the district qualified to administer oaths or to accept the application. There has been, however, a condition attached to it, which condition allowed the fullest latitude for all the frauds which have been suggested by my colleague or the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], or both, or anyone else.

The law as it stands to-day provides that a soldier may enter a homestead, having his application verified by his commanding officer, irrespective of his age, provided he is over 21, with only one condition—that either the soldier himself or some member of his family, whether a cousin, an aunt, an uncle, a parent, a sister, or some one else, whether such member of his family may have already exhausted his own homestead rights or not, may certify that such member of the family is upon the particular land which the soldier seeks to enter.

Mr. President, these are the facts with reference to the statutes as they stand.

The provision as drawn by me, with the amendment as offered by myself, suggested by and in the words of the Senator from Montana, had this object in view, and this alone, that boys of 18 years of age drafted in the Army should be entitled to have their homestead rights preserved until they were mustered out of the service.

I am one of those, Mr. President, who has been most insistent in opening the public lands, upon making easy the path by which homesteads could be obtained upon the remaining public lands, having, as I have at various times explained, in view not only the right of the homestead entryman but also the right of the State to have the land within its borders subjected to taxation.

I am aware of the fact that this amendment, if availed of in my State, may hold up, may segregate, because a homestead entry segregates the public lands involved—when the entry is placed upon the records in the filing books the land is segregated and is no longer subject to entry—I am aware of the fact that the soldier boys now in the service under 21 and over 18 years of age may avail themselves of the provisions of this act and may thus withdraw, assuming that they should avail themselves of its provisions within the State of New Mexico, very many millions of acres from entry in New Mexico, until they have had an opportunity after muster out to make their residence upon such land and to acquire such homesteads.

I can not indulge in the presumption, sir, that entries will be made for fraudulent purposes. I could not indulge in any such presumption, nor would I ever make a suggestion tending to lead one to believe that I indulge in any such presumption. However, the department has requested the passage of this joint resolution the second clause of which provides a very heavy fine and penalty for any cattleman—my colleague referred to cattlemen yesterday—who may solicit the making of an entry or a relinquishment by any such entryman, who for a consideration might perjure himself, because he must take an oath when he makes his application that it is for his own benefit, and to assume that the boys in the trenches would take such an oath for a few dollars at the solicitation of any cattleman or speculator would be for me to assume that they are perjurers, either when they enter the Army or because the Congress of the United States has offered them an opportunity to benefit by perjury.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator think that it would be an occasion for perjury if a cattleman should go to the boys in a cantonment and tell them that out near his ranch there is a large body of desirable land; if you make an entry of it, it will be held there until you come back from the war, and you shall then have a right to get title to this land from the Government of the United States, the result of the transaction being that the land would be segregated from the public domain upon the entry of the soldier, and the cattleman would have the exclusive use of it until after the war is over? That would not involve, as I see it, any perjury on the part of the soldier whatever; or, in other words, the law can be used for a vicious purpose without any violation of it.

Mr. FALL. That, of course, is a statement of my colleague, and a mere statement. I know of no law which can not be used for some vicious purposes and a violation of which law oftentimes goes unpunished.

Mr. President, I have referred to the entryman himself. I will now refer to the cattleman. I have heard in New Mexico, I may say, for many years, as well as here in this body and throughout the country generally, animadversions from time to time upon the cattle barons and others as seeking to defraud the Government and to retain in their own possession the public domain for their own use, that they sought to prevent homesteads being made upon their ranges. I have never heard them before condemned upon the theory that they would solicit the entry of homesteads upon their ranges.

Mr. President, I heard this 30 years ago in New Mexico. I recall very clearly that a propaganda was initiated there more than 30 years ago upon the theory that cattlemen and others had been defrauding the United States Government by securing the making of entries upon the public domain. I recall that there were various trials in New Mexico upon indictments charging such offense. I recall that there was one conviction, and one alone, and that was the conviction of a man charged with conspiracy in a joint indictment of 21 or 24 for such fraudulent practices, and that man was convicted because, upon cross-examination on the trial, he admitted that he was one of the men who robbed the grave of Abraham Lincoln, and he was convicted for that.

Mr. President, in so far as I am aware there have been no frauds committed by cattlemen in seeking to acquire public domain in my State. In so far as I am aware, and I have the personal acquaintance of almost every cattleman in my State, including my colleague, I can say here, sir, that I believe the cattlemen there generally would be just as honest, straightforward, and clean as would my colleague or myself, and we are both engaged in the cattle business in New Mexico. I will say, sir, that I do not believe that any cowman would find it to his interest to solicit of any soldier an entry upon that cowman's range, because the soldier might at any time take possession through a member of his family under the law as it exists now or under our court decisions through some one else representing him and deprive the cowman of the use of that land.

I can see nothing whatsoever in the fears which my colleague has expressed. I admit that I can see nothing whatsoever, with due respect to his very great ability and experience, in the statement which he has made with reference to either the amendment of the Senator from Montana offered by myself as a part of my amendment or in the objections which he urges to the joint resolution presented by the Department of the Interior through the Commissioner of the General Land Office and agreed to by myself, although I did not see the necessity for it.

With this explanation, Mr. President, I shall allow the matter to go until a necessity arises upon some future occasion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of my colleague if he believes it is necessary to pass this joint resolution at all?

Mr. FALL. I will answer that in this way, as my colleague so carefully answered my questions yesterday. If my colleague, upon whose judgment I ordinarily would depend very greatly, says that, in his judgment, it is necessary for the Public Lands Committee to report out a bill covering this general subject or amending my amendment as it has become a law, then I say to him yes, I think that it is just as necessary to pass this joint resolution as to have the Public Lands Committee authorize him to report out a bill of his own covering the subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. STERLING. I ask for a division of the question on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. It includes a number of items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, beginning with line 1, the Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out the following:

Production of beef cattle, $105,000; live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000; production of pork, $150,000; production of poultry, $129,600; production of sheep, $60,000; making cottage cheese on the farm, $52,950.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from South Dakota is entitled to have the amendment divided, and I have no objection whatever to it. I only want to say that for every dollar which is necessary for carrying on this war every Member of Congress is willing to vote. It is time to stop useless appropriations. It does seem to me that appropriations should be cut to the bone on nonessential matters.

In reading this bill over a person must be impressed with the idea that large sums could be cut out of the bill and no injury come to the Agricultural Department. I do not want to see anything done that will retard the great work of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. President, I propose, as far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to go into the appropriation bills in the future and find out how the money is being spent in this country. I know the opportune time never will come to cut out appropriations in these bills, and we might as well commence on this one.

There have been ridiculous things, it is practically conceded, in this bill, such as money to establish a market news service of live stock and meat for the District of Columbia. That has been cut out. What a ridiculous proposition it is. The people of this District know they are being robbed in the purchase of meat without any news service taxed up to them to tell them about it. The people of the District of Columbia are probably being more systematically robbed by the profiteers than any other section of the country, not only in rent but in practically everything else. You can go to Baltimore and buy many things cheaper than you can buy them here, and of course there are some things you can buy in Baltimore that can not be bought here. I will not enlarge upon that subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he is going to discuss the market proposition.

Mr. KENYON. I am through with it. I was just citing that as an illustration of the ridiculous way in which moneys are spent. It is time to stop such things.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I sympathize with the suggestions of the Senator from Iowa. I think we ought to scrutinize these items which are in the appropriation bills much more closely than we do.

I wish to ask the Senator, who I understand is a member of the committee that has had this bill under consideration, a question. I understand it is a measure to carry into effect the act of August 10, 1917, to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products. That act appropriated in a lump sum certain amounts of money for certain purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Somewhere aroupd $15,000,000, I understand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think the act appropriated that much, but I think about $11,000,000. As I understand this measure, it is to do the same thing as that provided in that act, but instead of appropriating the money in a lump sum it is itemized and details the particular line of work that will be carried out with a certain appropriation.

I take it, and I think the chairman of the committee when the bill was under consideration before stated, that a special organization has been formed in the Agricultural Department to do the work under this lump-sum appropriation, and that special organization is doing this work now and will do the work as provided in this bill.

Now, I want to ask the Senator what showing was made by the Agricultural Department as to the work they are doing, for instance, along the line of the production of beef cattle. That is one item here which the Senator moves to strike out. I take it under this lump-sum appropriation they have organized a certain force which is working along that line and that they estimate this amount as the amount necessary to carry on work during the present fiscal year. If that work is accomplishing the purpose of the act, stimulating the production of beef cattle, and so forth, I can see the importance of it.

Now, then, I should like to know if any special showing has been made what the organization is, what it has done, and what it proposes to do during the coming year.

Mr. KENYON. I will say that, as I understand it, no testimony was introduced before the Senate committee on that subject. There was testimony introduced before the House committee. I have the hearings here and started in to examine them this morning because I thought in a spirit of fairness I ought to show what had been done. I have not had time, however. Unquestionably they have done good work and perhaps it has helped in stimulating agriculture. But agriculture does not need this kind of stimulation. The farmers of the country are producing everything they can produce.

For the production of beef cattle it is proposed to appropriate $105,000; to go out and teach people how to raise cattle, for live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000. Think of it—to teach people of the plains how to raise live stock. Those men on the Great Plains and the farmers raising beef cattle know more about it than somebody sent out by the Agricultural Department, and probably now with the great number going to war those agents will have to be women.

For the production of pork, $150,000. Is it not ridiculous to send people out to the State of Iowa, for instance, or other great pork-producing States, to instruct farmers how to raise hogs, and as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] suggests to me, to teach them how to make Dutch cheese on the farm? Let us put our money into bullets and guns rather than teaching people how to make Dutch cheese?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with what the Senator says, but it seems to me that argument should have been presented when the act of August 10, 1917, was proposed.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator contend that this does not add anything to the money appropriated there; that it is merely a means of spending that money?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; this is a means for carrying out for the fiscal year the purpose provided in that act.

Mr. KENYON. Provided the money in that act will not do it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This appropriation is just for this fiscal year, I take it. The eighth section of that act reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That, for the purposes of this act, the following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until June 30, 1918.

So the money appropriated in this act has not been available since June 30 of this year; and the bill we have here simply proposes to make appropriations for this fiscal year. Therefore, all the money which was provided for in that act that has not been used reverted to the Treasury on June 30 last except as extended by joint resolution.

Now, that act provides:

For the prevention, control, and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock; the enlargement of live-stock production—and the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy, and other animal products, $885,000.

That is what these items propose to do—

That is merely a lump sum. The argument of the Senator would have been very proper, I think, if it had been presented when this general bill was being considered; and I think it is very forceful now, unless there is a special organization that has work mapped out for this fiscal year which will result in good and that can not be carried on without this money.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; work that will do some good and result in some benefit commensurate with the money expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. I take it that the House of Representatives was satisfied with the reference to that. Like the Senator from Iowa, I have not had time to examine the hearings which were had in the other House, but the Members there evidently were convinced that there ought to be additional appropriations for this purpose for the ensuing year. I do not know whether or not the Senate Committee on Agriculture had an opportunity or had time to look into that on its own account or not.

Mr. KENYON. I tried to attend all of the meetings of the committee, but I do not remember the evidence on that question.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. GORE. I desire to have read into the RECORD at this time by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] the explanation of the estimate of the department touching these particular appropriations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] still has the floor?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose. If for that reason he would lose the floor, however, I shall not prefer the request.

Mr. KENYON. Why not have it read at the close of what I have to say? I am not going to take much of the time of the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have made these motions not because I thought there was much chance of cutting down the appropriations—that is almost impossible—but in the nature of serving notice, so far as I am concerned, that a more rigid investigation of these appropriations will be had in the future. In last night's paper I find this item:

LARGEST DAY'S WAR EXPENSES.

The Government yesterday paid out $156,000,000 for ordinary war expenses, making the largest single day's expenditure for these purposes in the Nation's history. That was in addition to disbursing $20,000,000 on foreign loans and a number of minor expenses.

I am not citing that to criticize the expenditure in any way, for the people of this country are willing to spend every dollar which is necessary for the war, but I am quoting it that we may halt and take an invoice as to where we are going on needless appropriation bills; that is, as to the appropriations for nonessentials. They may be right in times of peace and wrong now. How ridiculous it is, in the face of such things as that, to be appropriating for the making of cottage cheese!

Another item in last night's paper is as follows:

NINETEEN BILLIONS A YEAR.

At the present rate of expenditure the war this fiscal year will cost America approximately $19,000,000,000.

Secretary McAdoo, however, anticipating that coming months will see a rise in the war cost, estimates the year's toll will be $24,000,000,000. To meet this vast expenditure $8,000,000,000 is to be raised by taxes, leaving from $11,000,000,000 to $16,000,000,000 to be raised in three liberty-loan campaigns to be launched during the year. Of these loans, the first probably will be from $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. The second probably will be somewhat larger, and the third the smallest of the three.

We will meet these obligations cheerfully. We have no right now to add anything to the people's burdens by nonessential appropriations.

Lack of military enthusiasm and skill on the part of this country will never lose this war. If we get into any troubles it will be over waste and industrial breakdowns; but a war which may go on for five years, at the rate of expenditure at which we are going, will be a very serious matter to the people of this country. It necessitates individual and national economy. While these items are small—my motion, if agreed to, would cut out about $750,000—if every appropriation were closely scanned and all the saving on nonessentials were brought about that we could, the total would be very large.

I have advocated—I am going to keep on advocating—a national budget system, and I shall move to discharge in a few days the Appropriations Committee from the consideration of a joint resolution providing for a commission to investigate and report to Congress on a budget system. I have previously urged that on the floor. We are the only civilized Nation on the earth that does not have such a system. With expenditures of billions upon billions of dollars, and no cooperation and no coordination we ought to pause and consider whither we are drifting. It is a crime for Congress not to take some action looking to intelligent cooperation between committees and the intelligent expending and auditing of the money of the people. Let us look at a few other financial jokers in this bill.

On page 5 there is a small item:

Control of rice insects, $3,000.

What will that do further than paying some one a salary to look wise and travel around the country?

On page 9 I find.

Poultry and egg demonstrations, $40,000.

Well, for what is that? Do the farmers need any demonstration as to how to raise poultry and how to produce eggs? They are doing fairly well at it now. I do not want to be overcritical, Mr. President. I am on this committee and am entitled to just as much blame as is any other Senator. We apparently did not have time to go into these things thoroughly, and we have brought from that committee a bill, I think, full of indefensible propositions along the line of waste. There are many good things in it, especially war-time prohibition, and I shall support the bill, but shall vote against various items therein that seem to me an almost criminal expenditure of money in our present situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. PHELAN. I ask that the Secretary state the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I rose for the same purpose, Mr. President, to ask what is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 of the House text of the bill, Mr. KENYON proposes to strike out the following—

Production of beef cattle, $105,000; live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000; production of pork, $150,000; production of poultry, $129,000; production of sheep, $60,000; making cottage cheese on the farm, $52,950.

Mr. STERLING. I ask for a division of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state on what part of the amendment he desires a division? He is entitled to a division.

Mr. STERLING. I desire a division of this question, there being several different items involved in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator ask for a division only as to one item?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On which one of the items does the Senator desire a division?

Mr. KENYON. As to one item only?

Mr. STERLING. That will be satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota can ask for a division on one item at a time.

Mr. STERLING. I ask a division on the item providing an appropriation of $100,000 for the production of live stock in the Great Plains region.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the item to which he refers be divided.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be other requests for a division on this question, and in order to have one such request cover the whole matter, I ask that each item be voted on separately. Then we can get through in a very little while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I think it but fair to the Department of Agriculture to say that a detailed explanation of each item of this bill was before each member of the Agricultural Committee when the bill was being considered. As to the item relating to the production of beef cattle, the department has the following to say, and this explanation was placed before each member of the committee.

It is proposed to place beef-cattle specialists in different sections of the country to assist farmers and cattlemen in conserving all good breeding cows and to emphasize the necessity of breeding for a maximum calf crop, preparing permanent pastures, building silos, and preserving all available foodstuffs. The corn belt possesses an enormous supply of feed in its corn fodder which has never heretofore been completely utilized. It is estimated that there is in the Southeast this year sufficient feed to take care of between 400,000 and 500,000 cattle in addition to the number normally provided for. It is highly important that the work along this line be greatly extended during the fiscal year 1919.

Then follows a detailed statement as to the number of men employed and for what purpose, and as to how this appropriation is to be expended.

The Department of Agriculture has performed a splendid and patriotic work in endeavoring to increase the food supply of the country during the war, and I do not think that the department would propose for a moment a project that was palpably ridiculous and wasteful.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I think this is the most extravagant, the worst, and the most ridiculous appropriation bill I have ever seen since I have been a Member of the Senate. I do not know whether I shall vote for the bill or not. If I do, it will be solely on account of the prohibition provision which it contains.

I wish I had the time to take the bill, go through it item by item, and explain in my own way to Senators present the bill as I see it.

The amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is a good amendment, whether it shall be acted upon as one amendment or whether it shall be divided and the various items voted on separately.

I wish to refer briefly to another portion of the bill. There is a section carrying an appropriation of $2,500,000 to provide loans to farmers and money to buy seed. That is followed up by a provision that no farmer shall receive more than $300, and that before he receives that $300 he must put up as security Government bonds or have the guaranty of a national or State bank for the debt.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Government-bond provision was stricken out on motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. That is my impression.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It appears in the bill which I have.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the Senator from Utah offered an amendment when the amendment reported by the committee came up to strike that provision out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Very well; I am glad to hear that; I did not know that had been done. I only cite it, however, as one instance. I believe you can take this bill and go through it from beginning to end, with the appropriations of over $6,000,000 which it contains, and cut off the millions and then cut off the thousands and the real actual good and benefit of the bill to the producers of the country can be estimated in the remaining figures. It is a ridiculous thing. I never have seen anything like it, and I can only see one purpose in putting such a bill before a body of men for consideration.

They tell us that as a prohibition measure we must destroy the grape-growing industry. We say, "Well, we will willingly do that for the benefit that prohibition may bring." We are told that we must eat less bread; the farmer is told that the price of his wheat must be fixed, and then we turn around and appropriate thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars for something that is not worth 10 cents on the dollar.

I repeat that I do not know whether or not I shall vote for this bill—and it has almost reached the stage where it is ready to be voted upon—but if I do there will only be one reason for my action, and that reason will be the prohibition provision which it contains.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator says he is disposed to vote against this bill, and is only deterred by the fact that it involves the prohibition amendment. The Senator will recall that the amendment which finally prevailed prevents the sale of beers, wines, and liquors after the 30th day of June, 1919.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; I am familiar with it.

Mr. PHELAN. But the committee is agreed that the national prohibition amendment will be in effect in March, 1920, about eight months later. So the Senator can well satisfy himself, believing in prohibition as he does, that prohibition will be in effect not later than March, 1920. Now, if he believes, as he does, that these items in the appropriation bill are indefensible and he wants to vote against the measure, I should think he could do so in good conscience because he will aid in defeating this, in his judgment, nefarious measure and at the same time will be sure of the prohibition within a short time of malt, vinous, and spirituous liquors.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, as I have said, I am not yet clear in my own mind how I will vote. I am in favor of war-time prohibition. I would be willing to vote for prohibition to take effect to-morrow, and then I would want the Government of the United States to appropriate an amount to pay those whose crops are destroyed by our action here. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to have the prohibition provision go into effect in January instead of June, because I could not see any real benefit that would be given to the men whose business is going to be destroyed by postponing the operation of the prohibition provision for six months.

I shall not take up now any more of the time of this body on this subject, except to state that I am in thorough sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa; and, Mr. President, I come from one of the greatest agricultural States in the Union. There is no State in the Union to-day whose crops will excel that of South Dakota in proportion to area, but I do not believe that there is anything in the bill that the people of my State, if they were here to-day, would ask me to vote for. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will prevail.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to correct a statement made by me. I stated to the Senator a while ago that I thought the provision with reference to bonds as security had been stricken out on motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I find I was mistaken; his amendment did not carry, so that that provision remains in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then, Mr. President, I wish to call specifically to the attention of the Senate the foolishness and the ridiculousness of attempting to loan to the farmers of the United States $300 apiece to enable them to secure seed, and then, before they can get that amount, to compel them to put up Government bonds as security or to have national or State banks guarantee the amount. Is there a Senator here who imagines that if a farmer could do that he would need to borrow money for seed wheat?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] made an inquiry upon that point yesterday, and it was explained that the President had concluded to advance $5,000,000 for this purpose, so that the farmer would not be driven to the point of giving up gilt-edge securities, which in many cases he can not do, having already pledged his crops and his farm. I think the RECORD will disclose that that situation has been met by the President taking $5,000,000 out of his emergency fund for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then, we certainly ought to eliminate this $2,500,000 item from the bill and rest on the emergency appropriation provided by the President.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to observe that the Senator from South Dakota did not answer the question which I think I put to him in categorical form; and I should like to ask him, if he will be so good as to answer me, whether or not he agrees with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as to the time when the Federal prohibition amendment will be in force and effect. Has he any doubt on that subject?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have no doubt whatever on that subject, Mr. President.

Mr. PHELAN. Then, I should like to ask the Senator, as he believes there are many items in this bill which should not be passed—wasteful, extravagant, needless drains in war time upon the Treasury—if he will not vote against this bill, and at the same time satisfy his mind on the prohibition provision by postponing the effectiveness of that provision for eight months?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, as I stated a while ago, I am not clear in my own mind how I shall vote on this bill. There is a great pressure for prohibition throughout the country. I belong to that great body. I realize that the men who had this bill in charge could not accomplish what they wanted to accomplish; but I believe that they worked earnestly, and accomplished the best they could for that measure. Further than that, I do not care to express myself at this time.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not know that under ordinary circumstances it is against the Constitution to pass sumptuary legislation; and, furthermore, does he not recall that the Chair ruled that a rider providing for prohibition upon this general appropriation bill was out of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I am a farmer, not a lawyer, and I do not know much about the Constitution, and therefore I can not intelligently answer the question of the Senator from California. I have understood that that is the contention.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the only reason why prohibition was sought to be effected by constitutional amendment was because that was the only method known to the Constitution and laws for prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor. A statute on the subject invades the rights of the States, and there is no authority in the Constitution for the passage of a statute on that subject. That is fundamental law. Now, notwithstanding that, in the matter of wine—which involves the saving of no foodstuffs—the proponents of the Sheppard substitute sought by this devious and indirect and perhaps unconstitutional way to prohibit the manufacture and sale of wine. In view of that, I hope the Senator, whose mind is not yet made up, will see fit to vote against this measure.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I have been rather surprised at the widely divergent views expressed here on this motion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. As one of the Members of this body, I believe in the Agricultural Department and the splendid work that it is doing. We have heard criticisms here of these different appropriations on the ground that they are provided for in other appropriations embraced in the general Agricultural bill. We all know that that bill has not yet become a law. In fact, it was submitted to the President and disapproved by him; and we know that the Agricultural Department is at this time depending upon a joint resolution continuing the old appropriations for the money to defray its expenses.

As I understand it, Mr. President, these appropriations are intended to take care of special work which has been urged by all of the departments of the Government to bring about an increased food production; and, as one of those who have come in contact with the work of the department, I am compelled to believe in its force and its efficiency. I do not believe that any appropriations made at this session of Congress will have more direct effect and influence for the purpose for which they are made than will this one.

It must be a matter of some gratification even to Senators to have noted within the past few days reports from the countries of Europe as to the relief afforded them by this Nation in the way of food products. There is only one way in which we can secure the best results in the production of food products, and that is by proceeding along intelligent lines. These great agricultural crops have not been produced under the old order, but they are produced under a new and entirely different system. The extension work that is mentioned here is just one way of bringing scientific farming, as taught in the colleges, to the farms themselves; and those of us who have had to do with the agents of the Agricultural Department in the actual field work have not the impression that has been advanced here as to the extravagance of that work and the way it is brought to the farm. My experience and observation is that the Government is employing in this work some of the most capable young men I have ever known in any line of endeavor, and they are going about the work in a very earnest, intelligent, and industrious way. They are also making themselves very useful and very essential to the farming interests of the West, at least, and I believe to the whole Nation. In this book that I hold in my hand there are hundreds of letters, written by men from 24 different States of the Union, including the State from which the distinguished Senator from Iowa comes, indorsing to the fullest extent the work of these agricultural agents, and I am sure it would be in opposition to the wishes of the great majority of farmers in the country to-day to have any of this work discontinued.

It is largely, I think, a question of viewpoint, after all. These appropriations look large; but if one considers the immense territory in which they are supposed to be employed and their far-reaching influence, they represent but a very small amount proportionately, and under no kind of circumstances could they fail to return a larger percentage of benefits, if they are properly applied, than any other appropriations that may be advanced here.

Take this appropriation for the production of beef cattle: As was very correctly pointed out yesterday by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the entire situation in regard to the production of beef cattle on the western plains has undergone a complete change, from a few men with large holdings of live stock to many men with small holdings. In this period of transition there has been, of course, much lack of information on the part of those who are embarking in that enterprise. It is a new country; these are new people in a new country, and with them it is a new venture; and under no circumstances could the information that is furnished by the department fail to be of incalculable value to them.

We are not content nowadays to go along under the old order of every man paying the price of his own experience. The highly competitive system of production makes that sort of thing entirely out of date and impossible. I can not answer for the results that the Agricultural Department is obtaining in other States, but in my State of Wyoming it has been wonderfully helpful.

Finally I want to say in regard to this matter that at this particular time, when the demands for meat products are greater than they have ever been in the history of the Nation before, when our allies and our own armies in Europe are calling upon us for amounts of 100,000,000 to 120,000,000 pounds of beef a month, and when orders come to this Government for as much as 50,000,000 pounds at a time of certain specific kinds of pork products, it is no time for us to be hesitating about appropriations that are to be applied in a direct and efficient way.

I hope the motion will not prevail.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

During the delivery of Mr. KENDRICK'S speech,

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not ask to temporarily lay aside this bill in order that I may call up a joint resolution which has just been received from the House of Representatives and is now on the desk, so that it may be laid before the Senate and passed? It provides for a necessary continuing appropriation. Will the Senator from Wyoming kindly yield to me for that purpose? It is very important. Unless a joint resolution on the subject passes to-day the Agricultural Department will not have any money on Monday.

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the joint resolution ought to be passed to-day, so as to be signed by the Presiding Officer before we adjourn to-day, I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the joint resolution referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, such will be the order. The Chair lays the joint resolution before the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have seen a sufficient number of the members of the Appropriations Committee to know that they favor this action, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, except so far as they relate to the support of the Army and of the District of Columbia, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of September, 1918.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 13, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the statement has been made here that the President has set aside a fund to meet the emergency regarding the seed-wheat situation. Some days ago I sent over to the Department of Agriculture some information from a section of my State which would seem to demonstrate the necessity for some sort of aid in that locality.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Would the Senator object to having a vote on this amendment of mine and disposing of that before we enter upon the consideration of another subject?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am only going to take a minute, if the Senator will pardon me. What I have to say, of course, goes more particularly to the bill in general.

This bill makes a provision whereby two and a half million dollars may be used in making loans to farmers for the purpose of buying seed wheat if the farmer puts up Government bonds or the indorsement of the bank. That is the extent to which it goes. The amount thus appropriated is only two and a half million dollars. An effort was made by several Senators to get relief from the President's emergency fund, and the sum of $5,000,000 was obtained from that fund, as stated in regulations which have been promulgated for its use. I presume it was supposed that that would be a sufficient amount to take care of the situation generally; but in response to my specific appeal to the Department of Agriculture, and to my great amazement, I received a letter from the department, signed by the Acting Secretary, in which he refers to the provisions of this bill and rather intimates that until this bill is passed there will not be available sufficient funds to take care of the situation. Then comes a remarkable statement with regard to the fund of $5,000,000 obtained from the President. I quote from the letter:

With the very limited fund, however—

Which was $5,000,000—and with the advisability of restricting its use to those districts in which it is felt that wheat growing is a fairly stable industry and warrants encouragement, it did not seem possible to apply any of this fund outside the limits of the recognized wheat belt in the southern Great Plains, comprised in Kansas, Oklahoma, and a few counties in the adjacent portions of Texas.

So that is to be the use to which $5,000,000 is put, and if $5,000,000 is necessary in Kansas, Oklahoma, and a few counties in Texas, I should like to inquire how much good the $2,500,000 in this bill, even if appropriated under circumstances that would make it available to the farmers, will do to all the rest of the country.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is under a misapprehension as to the provisions of the pending bill. It carries about $6,000,000 for the purchase of seed. The major part of it is to be used for the purchase of seed and the sale of seed to farmers for cash. That is made a revolving fund. The $2,500,000 is to be used for the purchase of seed and the sale of seed to farmers on time and not for cash, and carries a provision which makes it a revolving fund. So $2,500,000 is a revolving fund and $6,000,000 the entire amount carried. However, the revolving fund might go many times further than $5,000,000 or than $6,000,000 in the purchase and distribution of seed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not understand that $2,500,000 to be alone the revolving fund.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; it is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. How often do you expect it to revolve in one year?

Mr. GORE. It provides that the security taken from the purchaser——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Is there any provision in the bill whereby the security taken from the purchaser can be disposed of?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; it can be used for borrowing money to be used for the same purpose.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not understand that. I should like to have my attention directed to the provision of the bill which does that.

Mr. GORE. It is a part of the proviso, and I will say to the Senator it was a matter under discussion yesterday.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator from Oklahoma would speak so that we may understand his explanation upon this side of the Chamber as well.

Mr. GORE. I apologize to the Senator from North Dakota. I was explaining to the Senator from New Mexico, who was complaining that this bill carries only $2,500,000 for the purchase and distribution of seed, that the entire amount carried by the bill is something more than $6,000,000 for that purpose, and the major part of it is to be used for the purchase of seeds and the sale of seeds for cash only. That is made a revolving fund. Two million five hundred thousand dollars of the amount of $6,000,000 can be used for the purchase of seed and for the sale of seed on time, the security taken for which when sold on time can be used by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the borrowing of money to be used in the further purchase and distribution of seed, so that that is a revolving fund.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the provision of the bill as I read it. After providing that they can loan this money with Government bonds as security the section of the bill provides:

That the Secretary of Agriculture may use such obligations of the United States as collateral to borrow money for supplying seed to farmers for cash in pursuance of law.

Mr. GORE. I had overlooked the fact that the word "cash" was inserted. I did not have that in my mind. It could be used only once.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was absent during the lunch hour yesterday when, I understand, this amendment was adopted. There will therefore be no opportunity, I presume, for an amendment.

Mr. GORE. May I say to the Senator that the pending amendment is in regard to the appropriation to encourage the production of meat.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I mean the amendment we have just been discussing was, I understood, adopted yesterday.

Mr. GORE. It was adopted yesterday.

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment on pages 3 and 4.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, I want a little explanation and to make some suggestions concerning this particular amendment.

Mr. GORE. May I say to the Senator, the pending motion is to strike out the appropriation of $100,000 to encourage the production of meat, and after it is disposed of I intend to offer an amendment appropriating several million dollars to be loaned to farmers when that question will come up for consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I will defer my remarks at the request of the chairman of the committee until we reach that amendment.

Mr. GORE. I believe that would be the better course.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, who has moved the amendment to strike out certain lines on page 3, why he did not include in his motion the utilization of creamery by-products? That is not included in the Senator's motion, I believe.

Mr. KENYON. That might as well have been included, but I thought I had gone about as far as I would be sustained in going.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, on page 3, line 1, to strike out the words "production of beef cattle, $105,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will please state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 1 and 2, strike out "live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when the Senator from Iowa made his motion yesterday to strike out these several items, I stated at the time that I had not then ascertained the basis for the recommendation by the Secretary of Agriculture of an appropriation of $100,000 for live-stock production in the Great Plains region. I opposed a vote at that time upon that portion of the amendment. Since then I have received a statement from the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture in regard to this item, and I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? There being none, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY TO THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

During the last year a careful study of the situation in the Great Plains region, which includes that portion of Montana east of the Rockies, indicated the desirability of placing the agriculture of that section, as far as possible, on a live-stock basis. If the large crops of feeds which were produced there during the years of sufficient rainfall had been stored in silos, the drought which caused such losses during 1917 could probable have been borne without serious difficulty. Straight-crop farmers in that region have had nothing to carry them through periods of drought. If they had live stock and means to support such stock, they could tide over these periods. The only way in which this can be satisfactorily done is to utilize silos on an extensive scale and put up such roughage as can be secured. The situation in all the dry area from the Mexican border to the Canadian boundary is one which should receive close and persistent attention. The activities of the department and of the colleges should be directed toward the development of a national system of agriculture based on live stock in the entire area. As soon as a crop is assured, a strong campaign should be inaugurated for the construction of silos, especially the pit type, on every farm where the conditions are favorable.

The 1919 food-production act as it passed the House contained an item for $100,000 with which the bureau intends to employ 30 beef-cattle specialists to assist farmers and cattlemen in conserving all good breeding cows and to stimulate and emphasize the necessity of breeding for a maximum calf crop and preparing permanent pastures, building silos, and preserving all available foodstuffs in the Great Plains region. These men can be effectively used in carrying out this work of stimulating the development of a national system of agriculture in that region based on live stock. The proper proportion of these specialists will be detailed to Montana as soon as the appropriation for the work becomes available.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply want to say that under this statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry I think this appropriation is entirely justified, and I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, as it pertains to this item, will not prevail.

Mr. President, this Great Plains country has to a large extent—especially in my State, and I think that is true in many other States—been largely settled by homesteaders within the last comparatively few years. Men have taken homestead tracts of 160 acres, or, under the enlarged-homestead act, of 320 acres, or, under the stock-raising homestead act, of 640 acres of land, and the land is no longer now in the exclusive possession of the ranchmen or big cattle raisers, as was the case years ago.

These people have not had success year after year, as everybody knows who knows anything about the climatic conditions in this country, in the raising of crops. The object of the Department of Agriculture is to put agriculture there in that semiarid region on a stock-raising basis. It would be a great boon to that country if farmers could but realize that their principal resource is in the raising of stock rather than in trying to raise wheat under the conditions that exist in regard to rainfall, and so forth.

The purposes for which the appropriation is to be used, as stated in this memorandum from the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, indicates the great benefit the use of that money will be to farmers in caring for stock, in the breeding of stock, and in the use of forage crops in feeding stock.

I trust that this item will be allowed to remain in the bill. One hundred thousand dollars is an inconsiderable item for the Great Plains country. My own State, as I said, west of the Missouri River includes a part of the Great Plains region, but the whole region extends from the ninety-seventh or ninety-eighth meridian westward 300 to 500 miles to the Rocky Mountains, and, I believe, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico; all this is included in the Great Plains region, and for that region the paltry sum of $100,000 is sought to be appropriated for the purpose of live-stock production.

Mr. President, there is one other feature about it. Yesterday in a colloquy with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] reference was made to other appropriations in the general Agricultural appropriation bill and the inference sought to be drawn was that this was a duplication of some other item or items in the Agricultural appropriation bill. But, Mr. President, this is not a duplicate of any item in the general appropriation bill at all. It stands alone for the development of that particular industry in that particular section of the country and is not duplicated in this or in any other bill.

I sympathize with a great deal of the criticism made against many of the items of Agricultural appropriation bills. I myself have sought on different occasions to prevent the enactment of some of them, but I must confess, Mr. President, that I had very little encouragement, if any help at all, on the part of those whom I now find objecting to some of the items of this bill. It seemed to be taken for granted by Senators that since the bill had been reported by the Agricultural Committee, since such a large portion of the country, particularly the South, was benefited by the items, it would be useless to object, and they were allowed to go through. This one item, pertaining as it does to a region about which I know something of the conditions which have existed since that western region was opened up in my State for settlement in 1908 and 1910, is a most meritorious proposition and I hope it will be retained in the bill.

We should further consider, Mr. President, that this is outside of the ordinary Agricultural appropriation bill. The purpose is to aid and encourage food production. The result from an expenditure of this kind in this region will be almost immediate. We are advised to raise more wheat with a view to help in the winning of the war, and so here is another way to help in the winning of the war, namely, in the production of a kind of food needed just as much as wheat is needed.

I hope the amendment to strike out that item at least will not prevail.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from South Dakota has really analyzed the meaning of the statement which he has just had read from the Department of Agriculture. What does it say? That statement says, If you will give us $100,000 then we will tell the farmers of eastern Montana, east of the Rockies, where they get burned out once in a while with hot winds, that it would be to their interest to raise cattle and to save their better class of stock and go into cattle raising. Really, is there any farmer in Montana or anywhere else who does not know that? Do we need to expend $100,000 to have the Department of Agriculture tell the farmers that? Here is land burned out with hot winds. The farmer knows that just as well as the Agricultural Department can possibly know it. He knows that if he can raise corn and have stock on hand at the present prices he should build silos and put his corn into the silos. Of course the Agricultural Department does not say anything about how long a season we have up along that line to raise corn and the proportionate number of years it would be frosted out before we could raise any corn, which the farmer probably does know, and he has probably found it out by an actual test of the question.

I can not see that there is anything informing in that statement. If the Agricultural Department could tell the farmer who has been burned out how he can buy stock without having any money to buy it with, and any credit to buy it with, it would be giving him some very useful information.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose the Senator has voted before for appropriations of $600,000 or $700,000 for live stock and dairy demonstration work. He might just as well ask the question with reference to an item of that kind as to ask why should the farmer be instructed in regard to raising live stock in the Great Plains region because it is farm work and it is dairy work. So there is scarcely an item in the Agricultural appropriation bill to which the same argument would not apply.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose the cottage-cheese matter will go out of the Agricultural bill. I do not think I ever voted to send women over the country at a cost of eight or ten or twelve dollars a day, driving automobiles, and with an additional expense of $45 a week, to instruct the farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese. It is a good article, I will admit, but I can not see the necessity for any of that expense. What the farmers are suffering from is the fact that they have not the money to invest in young stock. They know that it will require them from three to four years before they will begin to get a return upon their investment, whereas if they sow wheat in the spring, in 100 days—if they have a crop at all—they will get a return. Of course, they would go into stock raising now if they had the money to invest in it and could find some way by which they could live through until they would get their returns from it. I really do not think that the Agricultural Department can tell them anything about that for which we need to pay $100,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the remaining items on page 3, I think, could profitably all be taken out, although I am not sure about the item for sheep. It is possible that some benefit could be derived from that. I am disposed to vote for this $100,000 appropriation, as I did for the appropriation of $105,000 for production of beef cattle, and to permit it to remain in.

There is a shortage of stock cattle in the United States. In every region that serves as the source of supply the receipts of cattle at all the yards where are the principal central markets of the country indicate a constantly diminishing supply of beef cattle. The packing houses, both large and small, have many times communicated not only with the department but with many other public officers, including Members of both Houses, calling attention to the shortage of the stock cattle.

We are apt, if this war unfortunately should continue for two years, to find ourselves short of beef supply. The same danger does not attend the other varieties of live stock. Hogs can be produced on comparatively short notice. I do not believe the item of $150,000 for pork production is needed. I think that is a waste of money. I think the farmers generally, wherever hogs can be profitably produced, will produce to the extreme limit of their capacity. I do not think any stimulant from Government inspection is necessary for that end. What is needed is to give the farmer a chance; leave him alone with his help, and he will do the rest. The sum for the utilization of creamery by-products, I think, would be a waste of money. Cottage cheese I have heretofore remarked on, and I will not duplicate anything I said on that subject.

Production of poultry, $129,600. I will take all these together, because I do not wish again to occupy the floor or the time of the Senate. It ought to go out for the same reason. Everybody, wherever poultry can be raised, is raising up to the limit now, where it is profitable to raise either for the meat in the poultry or for egg production. There will not be, in my judgment, any increase in the supply of any of these different varieties of food because of these appropriations.

The live-stock situation for beef purposes is a very serious condition in the United States. We must continue to have the requisite quantity of beef to go abroad for military and for naval purposes. So I will take a chance on that rather than to make any statement against it, and support the items, including that of $100,000. All these matters relate to food production.

There has been a direct assault on the agencies of food production in this country by one of the official branches of the Government.

The Federal Trade Commission prompts me to suggest the revival of the ducking stool. It has very largely assumed the function and performed the duties of a common scold. At the common law that active but pernicious brand of citizen, male or female, furnished a proper subject for immersion by the ducking stool, and I do not know of any other way to cool off the radical members of this Trade Commission than to apply the old-fashioned common-law remedy to them. This may be due to the transitory as well as the effervescent qualities of some of its membership.

The commission has accomplished a measure of good in the industrial and commercial world. Its activities in assaulting and seeking to discredit various legitimate industries are likely, however, to neutralize the good to its credit.

The commission accounts that day lost when it has not discovered a vast industrial conspiracy somewhere in the country. As at present constituted, the commission's rhetorical powers are frequently far in advance of its ability to regard or assimilate facts. Of late, its reports indicate literary propensities rather than industrial knowledge. Even a casual reader would suspect that some of the members of the commission considered the sensational volume known as The Jungle, written by a somewhat sensational private investigator several years ago, as better authority than the decision of the Federal courts defining the private rights of American citizens against practically a John Doe search warrant.

Some of the official phenomena observed on this commission may be due to the fact of a hitherto overlooked practical use of this body in the public economy. It is an incubator for United States Senators and other officers. Many candidates have been hatched in this nest. It seems to be taken for granted that while the act of Congress creating the commission made no reference to this public service it was one of the incidental powers growing out of a formal grant specifically enumerated. Like many other liberal constructions, the incidental powers become of more consequence than the enumerated ones. It seems to be well understood that a great multitude of people using a given article of merchandise are much more useful in politics than the limited number who produce the merchandise. Candidates are very partial to numbers. If an official duty can be performed in such a way as to obtain favor with many at the expense of nobody but the few serving the public, it becomes a grateful and eminently desirable task. Men whose principal exploits are performed with a fountain pen in lurid newspaper columns fairly revel in such services. The less one has done in constructive work of any kind in private life the better qualified he is to instruct those who have founded and managed great undertakings on how little they know about them. The authors of books and those gentlemen heretofore subject to a very large run-off of words in the sensational press enjoy managerial powers over some of the principal industries of the country.

For some years Wall Street was their theme. It afforded many a knight of the lead pencil an unfailing source of revenue and profitable fiction. The public have wearied somewhat of this article. Wall Street is merely a place for an exchange of values between gentlemen who entertain widely different views thereon. It involves a continual readjustment of bank accounts, and occasionally bankruptcy courts. Nothing is actually produced within the purlieus or center of this celebrated place to furnish food, clothing, or shelter. The Street has, however, been able to survive and even to furnish members on some of the numerous boards, bureaus, and commissions of this administration. It seems even sometimes that Wall Street has been granted absolution for its financial sins and to have gained somewhat in favor even with those who at one time hunted its habitues in their lair.

But, of course, the activities of such critics can not be stayed. If they do not manifest themselves in one form, it must be some other. It seems, like an elemental force, to be impossible of suppression. It is merely a question of how it will exhibit itself. Just now it is the fashion to sally forth from Washington into the Middle West and assail some enterprise located there. Of late the commission seems to have selected Chicago and Illinois as its hunting ground. It is a poor day when the commission can not discover some horrible affair in that section of the country to report to the President. The more sensational the better, because it commands headlines in certain of the public press. It causes great rejoicing in the socialist newspapers that have recently confessed their sins to the administration and been restored to publication and postal privileges or released from jail.

Just now the packers are the object of the commission's hue and cry. Their principal offices are in Illinois. Chicago is the place of residence of the individual packers. Illinois has not been unduly favored by this administration in many ways. Although its facilities for furnishing supplies, especially foodstuffs, surpass anything in the country, it could not prevent the Washington authorities from falling under the obsession that everything had to be done along the Atlantic coast or in the Capital; hence the congestion in Washington and the coast region, where, as impartial investigation shows, the cost of every species of merchandise and of living generally is higher than at any other point in the United States and greater than it is in the city of London, England. Thus it is that we are impressed with the powers of regulation for the benefit of the private consumer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask a question for information. I have had some conversation with persons connected with the Food Administration in the District of Columbia; and a great many persons residing within the District, perhaps because I am a member of the District Committee, have appealed to me with a view to securing a reduction of prices, particularly of food that is sold in this District. I ask the Senator from Illinois whether, from his investigations, the Food Administration of this District is exercising all of the power which it possesses for the purpose of securing proper prices of food products for those who are resident within the District?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator's inquiry is most timely. Within the last four days I think five dealers in foodstuffs have had their licenses revoked, and commission men and wholesale and jobbing houses have been notified, so far as notice can be given, not to sell to such dealers, and they have been temporarily removed from business. Whether or not they have been permanently removed I do not know; but they are not now in a condition to transact business because of having charged excessive prices over the reasonable ones which ought to have been charged. That has been done within the last four days and is the only healthy activity that I have seen to relieve the private consumer. I commend it and hope it is the beginning of relief. Of course the consumer has had the benefit of prices fixed very largely on staples by the Food Administration, but outside of flour and a few wheat products, there have been no general regulations followed by decisive action attempted for the private consumer until the time indicated. I sincerely hope that the Food Administration will from this beginning commence to relieve the excessively high prices which prevail in this Capital, for they have become a national scandal.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, does not the Senator think that the District Committee possesses some power under which it could act to bring about a proper regulation of restaurants and hotels and the fixing of such prices upon the part of hotels and restaurants as would not permit the extortionate charges which have been made in the city, and which are still being made, not only upon those who are called here for war purposes but upon those who come here for legitimate business purposes?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is no doubt about it, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. From the very little investigation which I have made, it seems to me that the District Committee, as well as the Food Administration, have not exercised the powers which they possess for the purpose of remedying the evils that are so manifold and to which the Senator has so forcefully referred.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no doubt the District Committee could initiate legislation that would very materially improve the situation, and I should myself be very glad to support some legislation similar to the Saulsbury joint resolution, which has accomplished material good, although, generally speaking, most of the landlords are paying no attention to it, so far as serving notice for and attempting to collect an increased rent is concerned. I think everybody whose lease expires by the 1st of October next will receive very early, if they have not already received, the usual 30 days' notice under the lease. The Saulsbury resolution, we have been advised by some lawyers in the District, is not valid, and they propose to litigate it. If they can litigate more than we can legislate, if needed, they will be quite busy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Illinois, with relation to the attempt to control the price of food articles which are for sale in grocery stores, that that effort has been made by the Food Control Department for more than the last four or five days. I have known of several instances where stores have been closed and where notices have been posted upon them that they were closed by reason of the order of the Food Control Department for the violation of certain prices at which they should have sold their goods. I have known that to exist for at least two weeks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was going to ask the Senator from Colorado how long it has been since that effort has been made. It had not fallen under my observation two weeks ago, and I am glad to have the Senator add that information to what I have already given. Such cases falling under my notice have been within the last four days.

The first result of the immense collection of business in the East and along the Atlantic coast was a tremendous congestion last winter. The next seems to be a general attack by the commission on the meat industry, the headquarters of which are in Illinois. Contracts for Government supplies were placed in eastern cities. The contractor not only for food supplies but many other kinds of merchandise in many instances was obliged to draw from the West to supply his contract needs, so that the contractor along the Atlantic coast actually drew his merchandise to fill his contract from western sources. This disturbed radically the normal relation between a source of supply and the point of assembling it for shipment overseas. The Department of Labor alone has moved over 500,000 men, approximately, up to July 1, 1918, to other points outside the Middle West.

In the single State of Illinois our supply of labor has been depleted by 500,000 men. This State contains within its limits the greatest manufacturers of agricultural implements in the world. Without their product food supplies can not be produced. It is a vital industry. It has been delayed and hampered by inconsiderate departmental action in Washington. It has been harassed and impeded by investigation and threats of further hostilities. Their essential supplies of material have been curtailed, while the same material has been permitted to go to nonessential industries without limit. It is only now after a year of such conduct that pleasure automobiles are to be curtailed.

Over a year ago in this body, Mr. President, I called attention to a 50 per cent reduction in the metal supplies of an agricultural implement house and to the fact that pleasure automobile manufacturers were allowed a full supply of metal for the manufacture of their vehicles for purely pleasure purposes. This limitation became a very practical one. Recently the manufacture of automobiles for other than essential purposes has been eliminated, so as to use the supply of sheet steel and other metals for more essential purposes.

Illinois contains the greatest live-stock market known. With its packing industries Illinois has made possible meat supplies for our allies before we entered the war and for our country and them since. The history of the packing houses and stockyards of Illinois is the history of the development and use of such utilities in the live-stock and meat interests of the country and of the world. Many years ago fresh meats had a limited market zone from the place of slaughter. In warm weather the temperature fixed the limit of the diameter of that zone. Hammond probably is the first man who presented the possibilities of the refrigerator-car service. The packers saw its potential use. The rest of it is history; and I have lived through that period in the area subject to these influences in my short life. They went to the great railway companies and asked them to build refrigerator cars for fresh-meat shipments by the packers. The railways declined. They did not wish to assume the risk of what seemed an experimental undertaking. The packers were literally compelled to build their own refrigerator cars. This vital truth is forgotten in the attacks on the packing houses both large and small. It made it possible not only to supply fresh meats from Chicago and other packing centers of the West, but it opened up the possibilities since developed of the refrigerator-car service for all perishable merchandise to be distributed in such cars. Criticism is made that the refrigerator lines are the means by which the packers hold the monopoly of interstate trade in products requiring such service. As a matter of fact, the railroad companies will transport, under similar contract, all such freight tendered them for carriage. Any concern in this country that will tender to a steam railway a refrigerator car loaded with any kind of merchandise can have it transported at the usual rates. There is no monopoly in this save that which comes from an established business as against one that begins anew. Yet it is stated that this monopoly can only be broken up by the Government's assuming certain agencies now utilized in the distribution of fresh meats.

There is no monopoly save in the established business and good will. If the five large packers that ordinarily are singled out for criticism own 91 per cent of the private car lines used in the trade, it is because they have been willing to take the chances in developing a new industry when the other shippers and steam railways would not.

The so-called "big five" packing houses do not have control, under liberal estimates, of over 35 per cent of the entire meat business in the United States. The local houses furnish about 65 per cent of the total supply of meat. There is always competition between the local butchers and the packers. The 70 per cent control by the packers assailed in the commission's report is limited exclusively to interstate trade. Local butchers can not go beyond a local market into interstate markets unless they are willing to embark enough capital in the business for the necessary refrigerator-car service. The packers, through the refrigerator service, serve a wider market necessarily for fresh meats. Instead of attacking such an industry and seeking to break it down, if there are practices to be discontinued let them be pointed out by the commission; let it make its recommendations, and in due course of administration or of legislation the regulations will be made. If regulations are to be made, give the industry the regulations. My observation and the experience of those who are in authority is that such regulations will be obeyed. It is forgotten that every packer doing an interstate business in this country is already under Government supervision. Their profits are fixed and minute regulations are made for the conduct of their affairs.

The impression is left on the public mind that 70 per cent is the part of the entire meat business controlled by the five Chicago packers, when, in fact, the 70 per cent applies exclusively to interstate trade. It is recommended, of course, that the Government take refrigerator-car lines, the stockyards with all their incidental property, live-stock cars, cold-storage plants, and warehouses. It is but a step, of course, to a complete acquisition by the Government of the packing business. It will follow the way of the steam railways, telephones, and telegraphs, along with the life and fire insurance business and all other forms of indemnity. Even if refrigerator cars are placed at the disposal of the small packers, it would not give them an interstate market unless they utilized the animal by-products so as to sustain a competitive business.

The investigation itself was ex parte and a mere formality. The commission is joining in the general tendency desired by the administration. The Government proposes to own as well as control ultimately all of such undertakings unless checked by an aroused public opinion.

Why single out the profits of the packers? Are they inordinate? The Food Administration limits the return on meats to 9 per cent. During the prewar years the hundred and forty million dollar profit referred to by the commission was earned on aggregate sales of over four and a half billion dollars. This is about 3.11 per cent on each dollar's worth of business transacted. If the consumers of merchandise could buy their necessaries, with only this profit absorbed in the cost price to them, the expense of living would be the lowest ever known.

The return on the invested capital in the meat business has been limited to the 9 per cent referred to. The statements in regard to the large dividends on the entire amount of money invested in the business, including both meats and all other packing-house lines, are not only unfair but untrue, and were either known to be so by the commission when made, or the report is based on inexcusable ignorance or inability to understand facts. War conditions and rising prices of live stock have required very large increases in capital investments. Inventories have risen until they show from two or three times the prewar value. If the dividends be computed on the total investment of the business it will be found that 10 per cent, in case of Swift & Co. to illustrate, is correct. The huge investments required by present prices or any surplus resulting from its use can not be estimated as profits at this time. A tremendous risk attaches to war values of all merchandise in which capital and surplus are invested. A decisive victory or a peace treaty would send war prices precipitately to a lower level and obliterate overnight the mythical profits found by the commission. All inventory values are subject to this hazard of the market. Swift & Co., for instance, found that after paying 10 per cent dividend to more than 20,000 stockholders in 1917 and after putting the balance of its profits back into the business, it was compelled to issue additional stock to raise money for the maintenance of its war business. It was also required to increase its borrowings from banks by over $75,000,000 compared with prewar times. Its inventory values before the war of $50,000,000 have now mounted to over $150,000,000. Similar conditions attach to the business of all the other packers.

In July, 1918, the average wholesale price of beef in Washington, for a given week, was 21.27 cents a pound to the retailer. From the packing houses out of the refrigerator car the average price to the local meat market of all cuts of beef was 21 cents and a fraction. There is very little of that wasted, Mr. President; there is scarcely a pound of the bone in the beef wasted. It is cut up by the adept, if he knows how to cut meat on the block, in such a way that nearly every pound of the bone is sold with enough meat attached to it to carry a sale of the bone. It becomes a soup bone, known to the thrifty housewife in the kitchen as one of the good ways of getting over Sunday with a supply of something that will fill up the family. Practically there is but little waste on the whole of the quarter of beef or on the entire beef when reduced to salable quantities on the block.

For a good part of my life, in connection with certain associates, I bought beef in carload lots every day. We bought from the packers, large and small; we bought from some packers in Iowa, smaller packers than those known in Chicago, and we bought from St. Louis occasionally, and sometimes from the branch houses of the Chicago packers, and sometimes from others. We bought both fresh and preserved meat. I bought for my kitchen the same brand and cuts of meat from my local meat-market man that I was buying at wholesale prices from the packer. In those days when round steak from the packing houses was sold to us in carload lots for 6.89 cents a pound, or 7 cents at the outside, I paid for my kitchen 14½ cents for exactly the same cut of round steak. We sent the entire car load to our cooling room, taking it out of the refrigerator car for that purpose. The same train that brought our refrigerator cars of dressed meat to that point also brought the supplies of fresh meat to the local meat market there for exactly the same price that we paid; but when I went to buy it I paid an increase of 100 per cent, which shows that the increase in price is caused by the local handler, who must stand a little loss, must furnish the help, the delivery wagons, and the like for conducting the business. The same beef that was selling in July, 1918, at 21.27 cents wholesale reached the consumers at Washington at some 50 to 62 cents a pound, an increase of more than 150 per cent added on every pound of the meat that was sold and retailed in Washington. The packer made an average price of 3.11 cents on each dollar's worth of business, and was limited to 9 per cent dividend on the year's meat business. The retail meat dealer in Washington, instead of making 3.11 cents profit on each dollar of sale to his customer, as the packers have done, gets from 57 cents to 60 cents out of every dollar's worth of meat he handles between the packers' refrigerator car and the delivery to his customers. If the packers made the same profit that the retailers do the commission would be justified in making a severely critical report that would rival the one that has been recently forthcoming, and it would then have the advantage of being based upon a market truth; but up to two weeks ago, according to the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], and up to four days ago, according to my observation, the Government has shown little or no activity in curbing the inordinate profits of the retailers in Washington. What they will do hereafter I hope and believe will be of a more satisfactory character.

To what agency could the Government apply to obtain meat supplies for the Army in such vast quantities if it were not for the packing industry of the country? Let credit be given to all packers, both large and small. I protest against singling out the largest plants in the business as a target against which prejudice and distorted figures are directed. On July 22, 1918, the Government delivered to the packers a meat order which broke the world's record. It called for 99,560,000 pounds of bacon and 134,000,000 pounds of canned meats for the Army. The cost will run to about $140,000,000, of which $130,000,000 will go to live-stock growers. The deliveries are to be completed by January 1, 1919. No small packers and no small business combination, Mr. President, would have been equal to the emergency.

Some complaint was made a few months ago about a quantity of meat delivered at a certain camp which had spoiled. An investigation was had, and it was demonstrated that the meat had left the packing house, the consignor, in first-class condition, but because of delays in the transportation service on the part of the carriers managed and controlled by the Government, and the lack of reicing on the road, the meat was unfit for use when it finally reached its destination. That was not due to the condition of the meat when shipped by those who sold it, but due to the delay in transportation, connected with the lack of refrigeration or reicing on the way.

There was another brilliant stroke of policy connected with the delivery of this meat order. The head of the department or bureau having it in charge conceived that it would be something worthy of Mr. Creel's exploits if it were given to the public; so, instead of keeping this 99,000,000-pound order of bacon and 134,000,000-pound order of canned meat where it could be carried out without undue disturbance of the market, they hastened to publish it to the world, and it went out with the ordinary publicity agencies furnished by the Committee on Public Information. Here is what immediately happened because of this masterly stroke of business from a desire—very laudable, no doubt—to show what the Government was doing: Both in the pasture and where the stock was being fed grain preparatory to final shipment, everybody, either the stock raiser or anybody who had meat supplies on the hoof or otherwise on hand, was directly or indirectly instrumental in causing an increase in the market. It is estimated that the imprudent publication of the purchase by the Government of these millions of pounds of supplies cost the Government, in subsequent purchases of necessary meat supplies, of which this is only a part, more than $30,000,000, as the amazing exploit of these business gentlemen who sit at the heads of bureaus and who are more martinets in discipline than they are observers of markets!

The large packers are entitled to the credit of utilizing what formerly was a waste product. If they have made it a source of profit to themselves, they have made it a source of profit to the country as well. One who saves is equal to one who creates, for preservation is but another form of creation of value. The small slaughterhouse can not avail itself of these advantages. It is an economic misfortune for the latter and for the general public, because that much of the country's by-products is lost utterly. It is only because of a high development in the use of every part of the animal that the large packers can buy a steer on the hoof, slaughter it, and sell the dressed beef back to its former owner for less than the original cost of the live animal.

The agricultural-implement manufacturers of Illinois, all other manufacturers as well, and the packers resident in Chicago are the constituents of my distinguished colleague [Mr. LEWIS] and myself. I protest against the unfair treatment they have received at the hands of our Government, to which they have shown 100 per cent of loyalty in the conduct of the war and in the sacrifices they have made.

Why have the large industries of Chicago and of Illinois been singled out for invidious discrimination? The Ford Motor Co. of Michigan holds over $300,000,000 in Government contracts. Some of the contracts of that company required advances from the Government Treasury. Material is supplied by the Government. Ford is paid on a 10 per cent basis, with a 25 per cent allowance for anything saved on the price of each unit. Ford will make, on present contracts, more than $30,000,000 out of the Government, which in part finances his contracts. Recently he has expressed a willingness to cover all of the profit into the Treasury. He is not the first candidate I have known to forego all profit connected with any public transaction. The courts of several States have said that such promises are as morally reprehensible and as full of turpitude as the actions of the man who goes out and buys an individual vote on election day; and they have condemned without stint such offers made to release lawful profits or fees in consideration of the releasor being engaged in a strenuous campaign and desires votes for election to public office. I would have thought more of the atonement of Mr. Ford if he, out of the generosity of his system and the goodness of his heart, had released all his profits before he became a candidate.

If the packers made as much off of the public as Ford does off of the Government they would have averaged $450,000,000 of profit during the prewar period of 1915 and 1916 and 1917, instead of the $140,000,000 complained of by the Trade Commission in the three years. Ford is a public benefactor for making three times as much as the packers, a public benefactor taking more than three times the profit charged to the packers by the commission, and then he becomes fit to be a candidate for Senator not of one party, which might be pardoned, but he wants to run on both, or be put in a position where he can elect!

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILFLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think Mr. Ford can be of much more benefit to the country where he is than he could be in the Senate, and for that reason I should be sorry to see him elected, but I think, in justice to Mr. Ford, in view of what the Senator has just said, that I would perhaps be excused for making public a private conversation which I had with Mr. Ford during the first week of last June, on which occasion he said that it was his intention to cover back into the Treasury of the United States all the profit that he would make on Government work during the war. That was before he became a candidate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before he became a candidate? I am very glad to hear it. It somewhat purifies his motives. Let me see. Ten per cent on the amount I have named will be $30,000,000. In a small measure that will help undo the damage he did when he was a pacifist, before we entered the war, and even after we entered the war, and before he experienced a change of heart. It will credit something on a tremendous debit account he has incurred. It will not, however, remove him from the group of dependent fathers which I shall now comment upon.

Mr. Ford's son is 23 years of age, and so long as he has intruded these matters upon public attention, it is entirely proper to comment upon them. Without any express exemption by superior authority, such conditions have been created that he has not been mustered into the service. It is upon the plea, upon various procedures had before different circumlocution offices in various parts of the country, reaching all the way from Detroit to Washington, that the son is indispensable to the father in the management of the factory and that the factory has large war contracts. In that event it would be a shameless waste of man power and brains to elect the father to the Senate and let the burden and the mantle of this entire business fall upon a 23-year-old stripling in the person of young Ford. So I think the best thing would be to muster the son into the service, like my neighbors' sons have been sent, like my relatives and your relatives of draft age have been sent, and who claim no privileges of that kind; to let the son go where he can bear the usual burden, without regard to parentage or social standing or wealth, and let the father, the original charter member of the Club of Dependent Fathers in the United States, remain in charge of his factory.

Mr. President, for 18 years the only law partner I probably will ever have had in my life and myself got along very pleasantly in our private affairs. A year ago this last winter he died. He left an only son and his widow. By the fortunes of the drawing of numbers from the urn the son drew the number that sent him into the military service; and his widowed mother, in Illinois, bereaved in a double sense, but with undiminished loyalty and with a sincere wish that her son may do his entire duty, like the Roman mother of old, sent him into the service with her blessing, to return either with his shield or upon it. That is one of the "short and simple annals of the poor." The blood of young Ford is no better than the blood of my partner's son, no better than the blood of my relatives or your relatives in the service, no better than the blood of hundreds of clerks who have gone from railway offices, and hundreds of sturdy men who have gone from the factories, mines, and from the fields of our country. But this gentleman, 23 years of age, who has become the sole support of his millionaire father, is the reason why Henry Ford became the original charter member of the distinguished and ancient Order of Dependent Fathers.

Let me read a little more, as long as Mr. Ford has injected himself into public affairs. He voted for Garfield in 1884, when Garfield had been dead nearly four years, showing that it is remarkably fortunate that he knows more about jitneys than he does about politics. Let me examine his affairs a little more. In the evidence taken in some litigation of certain gentlemen with Mr. Ford, wherein they differed on business matters, it appeared that in 1916 Mr. Ford's company made over 30 per cent dividends on the invested capital stock. Here is the report, taken from the sworn evidence. In the year ending July 31, 1916, the total of business done was $206,867,347. The total profit on the business of that volume was $59,994,118. The percentage of profit on the business in 1916 was nearly 29½ per cent, or, to use round figures, nearly 30 per cent. There is no packer, there is no carnivorous concern in Wall Street, there is nothing in St. Louis or Chicago that can show a fairy tale of expanded capital stock and profits like this concern. Here is the further evidence:

The Ford Motor Co. was incorporated in June, 1903, with a capital stock of $150,000. Thirteen years afterwards, on the 1st day of July, 1916, its net assets were $114,000,000. If the packers had made profits of that kind, the Federal Trade Commission would have been speechless with rage and indignation. The English language would have been vain to express their outraged sentiments. They no doubt would have reported, recommending criminal prosecution and even capital punishment for men who were such shameless profiteers in war or any other times.

Mr. Ford's record as a pacifist shows that he spent liberally of his large profits in 1916 to oppose preparedness; so, when he stated to the distinguished Senator from Colorado that he intended to turn back to the Public Treasury all of his profits made on war contracts, I regard that merely as conscience money, if he has any article of that kind concealed about him anywhere; that the $30,000,000 will help undo the damage of the advertisements in the papers warning us against preparedness, against war, against taking any steps that would make us prepared to defend ourselves in the event that war became necessary.

Mr. Ford's record as a pacifist, therefore, will not be balanced even by $30,000,000 of donations of profits. Mr. Ford—and I will go into that some time, if it ever becomes material here, because I have the entire record—is now a patriot, while some of his former associates in his pacifist campaign are under bond or in jail. Some of them have changed their minds. Haywood changed his mind when he was on trial in Chicago. He said he did not believe in violence. While he was associated with the Western Federation of Miners out in the Rocky Mountain country he had no convictions of that kind; and if he does not believe in violence, it is since he has been indicted and put on trial in Chicago that he has a remarkable change of heart. He did not change it any quicker than Henry Ford changed his mind. Why send Haywood to the penitentiary for 20 years and attempt to send Henry Ford to the United States Senate? I insist that the punishments are not well graduated. [Laughter.] I commend to the Federal Trade Commission his activities and record before he experienced a change of heart.

There are many hundreds of corporations whose war profits exceed those of the packing houses and other industries in Illinois. The President's message last May referred to much profiteering and suggested that it be seized by high taxes. If the Federal Trade Commission wishes to render a public service, let it relieve the great multitude of private consumers by endeavoring to reduce to a more equitable basis the present high prices that most of us pay. That would be a general benefit.

I am growing somewhat weary of the Trade Commission's continually camping in Illinois, and I propose to pay my respects to them, not only in the Senate but elsewhere, in public speech and in private conversation as well. I hold no brief for Chicago more than any other part of the country; but I commend Chicago to the country, and Illinois as well, as an example that might well be emulated by others. When I look over the private or public life of the members of this commission and what they have done I find that the active, vociferous end of it is more distinguished for destruction than for construction. They have been no great builders in private life. Why, there is many a Senator who has done more in private life than any member of the commission who is now engaged in trying to destroy some of the principal industries of the country; and none of us here ever refer to our private affairs as any reason why we should be placed in charge of public ones.

Illinois has given 140,495 men to the National Army. About two-fifths of those have come out of the city of Chicago. That is about the ratio. It exceeds the number from New York or Pennsylvania up to the 1st day of July, 1918. I have no particular apology to make for Chicago. It needs none. It speaks for itself in its growth, its business, and its sturdy men. I do not live in Chicago. I live 185 miles from the city. It is only by stress of conditions that I am compelled to spend at long intervals the larger part of my time in that city. When I am not otherwise engaged, I leave it and get out into the rural districts with great pleasure. Politically Chicago is Democratic. Politically, every time I run, it returns against me an abnormal majority. Politically I owe it less than down State. I am only saying this by way of explanation. The last time I ran, Chicago beat me by 60,000 majority in the city limits, but I never lose my affection for the city by the lake for what it has done in an industrial and general constructive line of effort. It does not make any difference how big the majority is in Chicago; anybody who knows the State can always go down State and defeat them. We always can figure out in the 35 wards of Chicago about how large the majority will be against any country candidate, and then we simply go out in the country and get a bigger majority, whatever it may need to be. [Laughter.] So I have neither fear nor worshipful reverence in politics, but always respect, for the metropolis on the lake. I am only saying this out of a sense of justice to Chicago.

The other two States named—Pennsylvania and New York—lead all others in the Union, with the exception stated. The men of Illinois are found in 10 great camps of the United States. They are on the French frontier, wherever there is service to be rendered or danger incurred. When volunteers were called, before the conscription act, her men led the way to the recruiting station. Whether drafted or volunteered, whether in military or civilian life, the State is entitled to better consideration from the administration than it is receiving. It does not welcome to its borders sensational rhetoricians and writers of sanguinary fiction under the guise of fiat statesmen on commissions which demonstrate the imbecility of government rather than its efficiency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. THOMAS. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out from the House text the following:

Live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I remarked yesterday, when an effort was made to defeat one particular part of this amendment, that I did not see why so many items should be coupled in one amendment. The proponent of the amendment, however, has seen fit since to separate the different items, and I am willing to admit that many of them attach to industries in which the people engaged in them are well versed—for instance, the production of beef cattle, the production of pork, and the production of sheep. No doubt in the production of those three classes of animals the people are in general terms very well educated; but this particular item, live-stock production in the Great Plains region, to-day applies to a very great region that is undergoing very material change.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], with his keen satire, thinks that this is not useful. The same system of satire could be applied to almost this entire bill, and in fact to the entire annual bill of the Agricultural Department. In the years past, when on several occasions I had charge of the bill on its passage through the Senate, the attacks on forestry would use up from three to seven days. I observe, however, that of those who attacked it originally and said that it was an invasion of the rights of the States, and said that it was iniquitous in every degree, ninety-nine one-hundredths are now holding out their hands for extensions and for rentals. They endure the raising of prices and all of that, as they appreciate the privileges of grazing in the forests.

We had originally great herds of cattle on the western plains, ranging over land that was largely that of the United States. Settlers have entered and taken up quarter sections, half sections, and sections here and there, and thereby have destroyed in a great measure the efficiency of the so-called great cattle and sheep ranges. In fact, it has come to a pass now where the business must be broken up or conducted in a different manner, and if it is to continue, and if the Great Plains country is to furnish the great quantities of beef, mutton, and wool that it has been producing, it has got to be done in another way. It has got to be done by the handling in small numbers of these animals by those engaged, at least partially, in farming, so that they may have the feed for winter, where formerly, with the open and unrestricted range, the animals were able to winter without help.

Coming into the States, of which Wyoming is perhaps almost the center, there are people from eastern farming communities who are unacquainted with the so-called dry-farming system of tilling the land, which consists of deep plowing, the land lying fallow every other year, so that the farmer must have just twice the usual amount of land, half of it fallow and half in crops, where he has a slight rainfall and, in most cases, no irrigation. Of course, there has been proven long since the great productivity of that country wherever water can be supplied sufficiently to cover the shortage of rain.

At the present time not only are farmers coming from sections where they have seen none of this so-called dry farming, but young men are locating there, starting out in life, coming from the great centers, the crowded cities, coming from the different industries. They know very little of general farming, and nothing at all of this peculiar kind of farming. Now, it seems that the farmer who takes a portion of land that is dry takes the risk of perhaps losing one or two crops out of three, in addition to the fact of having half of his land fallow. He must have a horse or two for his team, and he should have, commencing with one cow and increasing to as many cows as he can take care of, so he can get a start with the calves and young stock, and also so that he may get the product of the milk every day of the year, and send it to the dairies nearest by, and sell it at wholesale or deliver it in the towns and sell it at retail. Now, he will probably get enough grass from the range to take care of those animals in summer. In the winter the seasons are short, and the question put by the Senator from North Dakota becomes pertinent. Corn can not be raised to maturity in a great part of that country, but corn can be started and go along sufficiently to make it a very valuable product to go into a silo. Now, the State which I in part represent may have half a dozen silos in the entire area of 98,000 square miles. It has not to exceed that number, in my opinion. I do not suppose there are 20 farmers in the entire State who know anything of a silo except from what they have read. With silos they can prepare for young stock, for cows in the winter, and they can take the immature crops, corn, oats, or barley, or whatever they have, and put them in it, and they can use either mature or immature grain; also various natural weeds and grasses, which grow in abundance. Unfortunately, some of these growths are poisonous, and instruction is necessary for those farmers to learn how to sort out and destroy those and save the others, and how to provide for and how to run a silo. They want instructions in the first place regarding method of eliminating all that is poisonous and that has no sustenance for support of the stock. Selections have to be made. Then they determine the component parts, the size they should undertake to make their silos, and all that.

That region is nearly a thousand miles square. This $100,000 is a mere pittance. Even if there were only $100,000, and only 200 men in all that domain should learn how to start and run their crops into silos and handle their business successfully, the money would be well expended, because they in turn would show their neighbors. So in this particular time, in this particular country, there needs to be some money expended judiciously by the departments in teaching these farmers how to start in the production of live stock.

Of course, I said in considering this last evening that perhaps this whole bill might have been dispensed with, but I observed, I think, that this paragraph in what it contains is about the best of it. Of course, I overlooked perhaps what was the main feature of starting this bill, and it has been the main and great important feature of the bill, and that is prohibition. The prohibition measure, which was unanimously carried without a roll call only two days since, but came up under an appeal to the Chair the other day, or, rather, a few weeks ago, I should say, to decide whether or not it was competent under the rules to attach it to this bill in the particular way and at the particular time it was offered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the Agricultural appropriation act of July 13, 1918, and particularly to this provision of that measure:

> For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in dairy industry, cooperative investigations of the dairy industry in the various States, inspection of renovated-butter factories and markets, $364,390.
> For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses, $308,680.

I find another provision:

> For all necessary expenses for scientific investigations in diseases of animals, including the maintenance and improvement of the bureau experiment station, etc., $124,560.
> Meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry: * * * $477,200.

A much larger appropriation. I was going to ask the Senator, Can not the appropriations to which I have called the Senator's attention be devoted to the very purpose suggested by the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. I was speaking on another angle of the bill entirely, and, if the Senator will wait, I shall take the subject up later as to his particular inquiry.

I desire to say that this measure of prohibition was as popular when it was up 60 or 30 days ago as it was when it passed two days since. Many of us sustained the Chair when he ruled that it was not in order to offer it in the way it was offered. Many of us who sustained the Chair would have been as glad then as we were yesterday to vote for prohibition. I remarked then to my good friend sitting behind me [Mr. JONES of Washington], father of the prohibition amendment, that whenever we could vote on prohibition squarely I would vote for it. The Senator who sits two seats from here on my left [Mr. SMOOT], in his speech regarding it, said that he would vote to sustain the Chair, but when it came to a vote on prohibition he would vote for it. Many of us felt that way.

I happen to be one of the oldest members of the Committee on Rules. I should think very much less of myself if I did not vote to sustain the Presiding Officer when he makes what to my mind is a correct ruling, for I have some respect for the rules of this body, although I admit that others differ and think it is a perfectly fair advantage to take to vote against the ruling providing they can succeed in any way in making a point by the breaking of the rule.

If this measure was introduced for the purpose only, as it might have been, of adding prohibition as an amendment in the House and changing it here, it is still worth while. So I am not going to condemn the bill, but when we come back to this particular item, if there is anything in the bill at all, aside from the prohibition feature, which is worth while, then it is this appropriation of $100,000.

Now, coming to what the Senator from Utah has brought to mind, he might bring up hundreds of thousands and even millions that we have appropriated, and might condemn it all. For instance, the bills have for many years contained from $500,000 to a million dollars each year to eradicate or control the boll weevil in cotton. He does not grow any cotton in his part of the country nor do they grow it in mine, but I have never yet objected to those hundreds of thousands of dollars in the interest of the cotton growers, nor have I inveighed against or in any way opposed the great appropriation for the cattle tick, which does not affect us at all in our part of the country.

Now, as to the great inspection of cattle, I was formerly interested in the cattle business, and we have as a Member of this body one who is the largest, in fact, the last and largest, of all the Great Plains holders of range cattle. We have seen the time when we were independent of all these diseases and appropriations, when we got to the market at $30 a head steers that now bring from $150 to $200 and sometimes $230. Now, inspection has been one of the great conducive elements to that price. Of course, the war has had its sway, and they have arrived at a figure more than twice what they brought before the war, but before the war their value had doubled, largely brought about by the efforts of this great Agricultural Department in initiating its great system of inspection, whereby the inspector stands at every place where cattle are slaughtered and where the meat is to cross the State lines. We were formerly barred out of foreign countries as to our pork product. We were barred out of some foreign countries as to our beef product. In fact, I have had returns from the cattle market in early years which did not show over $10 a head net. Why? Because we had no foreign market. That market has been opened since, and it is ours to-day, and has largely been established on the good faith of this Government, because they knew that every quarter of beef and every animal they got had been inspected by the officers of this Government and O. K.-ed before it could be shipped.

Now, in order to maintain this great product of beef we must begin at the bottom. We must encourage the raising of calves. Take the dairy interest, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will give me his attention. He read of the large amount appropriated for dairying. This particular item under discussion is not for dairying. The dairying is where the cows are used for milk and not to raise the young; the calves are killed when very young. But these young farmers—young or old, but young in the business at least—who start in that dry-farming country there with one, two, or three cows, keep them both for milk and the young. In that way they make up for the loss in stock cattle, but it has got to the point where there are few engaged in the cattle-breeding business now. The range men confine their business to steers. They go south to Texas and other points and buy steers and fatten them on the range and let them go. The consequence is that they are liable to go out of business very soon, unless farmers, both dry farmers and regular farmers, turn their attention to the rearing of the young.

Mr. President, I hope the motion as to this particular appropriation will fail to be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I find here seven items aggregating $619,400, of which the item to which the Senator from Wyoming has just referred is one. I will read them:

Production of beef cattle, $105,000; live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000; production of pork, $150,000; production of poultry, $129,600; production of sheep, $60,000; making cottage cheese on the farm, $52,950.

There is no appropriation for making cheese off the farm.

Utilization of creamery by-products, $21,850.

Total, $619,400.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator did not notice that I addressed my remarks to the one item only.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; that is the only one the Senator is interested in, and he will vote for the others in order to get it.

Mr. WARREN. I trust the Senator does not put it on that basis. I hope he does not represent only the interest in which he is particularly interested, and he certainly should not put his colleagues on that basis.

Mr. THOMAS. If I said anything offensive, I withdraw it.

Mr. WARREN. It is not at all offensive, but I have no interest in that item more than I have in the others, except that I was undertaking to show the necessity in that great region of country of that particular item regardless of the others.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator has said all in behalf of it that any man could offer, and yet he said one thing which, in my judgment, destroys the force of everything else that he has urged in favor of it. He has just told the Senate that not long ago beef cattle brought about $30 a head and now a good, big steer he says will bring from $150 to $200 in the market. Mr. President, is anything needed more than that situation to encourage the production of beef cattle? Is it possible that when the price of a good steer now is $200 Uncle Sam has got to appropriate $105,000 out of his nearly exhausted Treasury for the purpose of producing beef cattle, or $100,000 for live-stock production in the Great Plains region? To state such a proposition, Mr. President, is to refute it. There never was such an encouragement to the live-stock industry as there is to-day in the tremendous prices which live stock of all kinds bring in the market.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, of course, understands that not only live stock but every other commodity, and other commodities far more than live stock, have been advanced in price on account of the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I know that.

Mr. WARREN. It is a temporary increase. We hope it is, at least, and we have every reason to expect that prices will go back if not to the old figure to a normal scale. The expense of raising and fattening cattle is more than twice its prewar cost. The Senator overlooks the fact, perhaps, that I said the increase had been very great before the war because of the opening of the market and largely through the undertaking of the Agricultural Department. Now I am covering the point we are weakest in, the care of calves and the raising of young stock, which is quite apart from the maturing and selling of beef steers.

Mr. THOMAS. I listened to the Senator with interest and I recall his argument, I think, very clearly. It is true, Mr. President, that everything in the United States has risen since we entered this war except Senators' salaries. I think they have remained stationary, and any slack in those salaries has long since been absorbed by the Washington landlords.

Mr. WARREN. May I state to the Senator——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. We have at last arrived at a point of agreement at least upon the one statement as to a Senator's salary.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator and I agree upon a good many things, and I am very glad to note that the item to which I last referred is comprised within our general mutual understanding. I still insist, Mr. President, that there can be no greater inducement to the live-stock industry and to the production of live stock than the enormous price which now prevails in the market and which, of course, will not always prevail, at least I hope not.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. With pleasure.

Mr. KENDRICK. I should like to ask the Senator if the high price now prevailing for live stock does not suggest the necessity of providing every possible encouragement in the way of information and intelligent effort to increase the production in order to lower the price to the consumers?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and I think the Senator from Wyoming can do more in that regard than the Department of Agriculture can. I think he is doing in his sphere of action as much as anyone can in the United States.

Mr. KENDRICK. While I am complimented by the statement of the Senator, I am not convinced of its correctness. On the contrary, I am sure from a lifetime's experience in this business that no industry in the country requires as much of instruction and as much of direction as the live-stock industry, and about which there is as little of direct information as there is among live-stock growers in spite of the multitude of men engaged in the industry, and I make this statement after a lifetime spent in the business.

Mr. THOMAS. I am satisfied the Senator did not so intend, but assuming the correctness of that statement—and I have no doubt of its correctness—it is somewhat of a reflection upon the Agricultural Department, because we have been appropriating money for that identical purpose for a long time. I do not think the Senator's success in the live-stock industry has been due to instructions received from those who know less about the business perhaps than he does, but upon his own understanding of that business and the application of his energy and of his talents to its development.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Will the Senator allow me to ask unanimous consent to submit a conference report?

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing to do so, provided there is no discussion upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not think there will be any discussion upon it whatever. I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside until the report is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say that I am not going to object to laying aside the bill at this time for the consideration of the conference report, because I recognize the necessity of getting the bill through promptly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I want to give notice that hereafter I am not going to consent to laying this bill aside until it is disposed of, unless something imperative as a war necessity comes on.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator recognizes the importance of immediate action on the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its chief clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 61.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$70,030, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS U. SISSON,
JAMES MCANDREWS,
CHARLES R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. Does that mean that the Senate has abandoned what is known as the Keller claim?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is taken out.

Mr. LODGE. I regret that very much.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I can say to the Senator from Massachusetts he does not regret it any more than I do. We did all that we could. We think it is a just claim. We think Mr. Keller ought to have had his money; that he is entitled to it; and the Senate thinks he is entitled to it. But the House refused to pass a resolution extending the appropriations for the District of Columbia, and unless we pass the bill there will be no appropriations for the District of Columbia and there will be no means of running the government of the District of Columbia. So we were forced to do what we have done. I think the Senator's view about the matter is in accord with that of every Member of the Senate, that it was unjust and Mr. Keller ought to have had the money.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator agrees with me that it is a just claim; perhaps a little more than that. I think really wrong has been done, and I can not understand why the House should stand out in that way against a claim of such merit, which involved a trifling amount of money, and which has the very unusual support behind it of an absolutely unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. I am certain under those circumstances the House never would have given way, and I do not see why we should be forced to do it. If they are ready to take the responsibility of letting the District appropriations go over because they will not yield that claim, I would be disposed to let them do it.

Mr. THOMAS. Right you are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask for a division.

On a division the report was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Simmons
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Benet	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Kendrick	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	King	Phelan	Sterling
Culberson	Kirby	Poindexter	Sutherland
Curtis	Lenroot	Ransdell	Swanson
Fall	Lodge	Robinson	Thomas
Fletcher	McCumber	Shafroth	Trammell
Gore	McKellar	Sheppard	Underwood
Henderson	McNary	Sherman	Warren
Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Shields	Wilfley

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained on important public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I raised the question of no quorum because I thought the Senate ought to have an opportunity to vote on the matter of the Keller claim. It was my intention to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted, but I have no desire to delay the District appropriation bill to which the Senate has given its consent. I very much regret that they did so because I do not like to see these threats always come from the side of the House of Representatives and the Senate always yield. This is not the only case where that has occurred. Under the circumstances, however, I do not think I should be justified in making the motion to reconsider, and I will not make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I heard the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I wish myself to submit a statement in connection with the matter to which he has just referred. The conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill has been held up for some months by a difference between the two Houses on three amendments. One of the amendments as to which there has been a disagreement, as is well known, was the amendment relating to what is known as the half-and-half plan. One of the other amendments was what is known as the Keller amendment. From the time that I first investigated the Keller amendment I had no doubt that it was a just and a fair proposition, and I think the other Senate conferees took the same view of the matter; in fact, I know that they did. Aside from the position which the Senate took concerning the subject, the Senate conferees wanted to see that amendment agreed to, and we did everything in our power to induce an agreement touching the amendment.

It is also known that the continuing joint resolution exempts the District of Columbia from its provisions, and that it is therefore necessary to secure the immediate passage of this bill, else the greatest inconvenience will result to the public service of the District of Columbia. I am as much interested in and as much convinced that the Keller amendment ought to prevail as is the Senator from Massachusetts, but I am unwilling, and other Senate conferees are unwilling, to occasion the inconvenience that must result from the failure of this bill under the circumstances I have stated.

For that reason, and for that reason alone, and in a sense of justice to the District of Columbia itself, to the thousands of employees whose compensation is carried in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the Senate conferees finally yielded upon that provision.

I think that comprehends everything that I care to say concerning the subject at this time. I do not think it would be proper for me to characterize the conduct of those who have taken a contrary view of the subject; I am certain it would not, in view of the manner in which it appears to my mind at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 11692. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 324. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when this little diversion occurred I think I was in a colloquy with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] regarding the proposed appropriation for the production of beef cattle, and I had said upon that item all that I cared to say. What I have said is quite as applicable to the item which formed the subject of the discussion of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The inducement which necessarily flows from the enormous demand and consequently from the enormous price for live stock is all that is necessary and all that ought to be necessary for the young farmers and the old farmers in Wyoming and Colorado who now propose because of that fact to go into the business, or who for some other reason have gone into that business heretofore. I do not think that the farmer who is engaged at present in the raising of live stock in a small way in Wyoming and in other States of the Union is so innocent, so inexperienced, and so ignorant of all of the things which he should know if he is to be a farmer at all as to require a Government appropriation of $100,000 to teach him how to raise a calf. If he does not know enough to raise calves, he ought to be sent to a lunatic asylum or to some reformatory institution instead of attempting to produce grain, hay, and cows and calves upon a ranch in the region which is known as the Great Plains.

I should dislike to think that when a man locates his claim and proceeds to cultivate it it is necessary for the Government of the United States to take him by the hand like a little child and to instruct him in the A, B, C's of his business. If he is as badly off as that, I think his neighbors will take care of him; and if he is as badly off as that, the sum of $100,000 would not be a drop in the bucket. The geographical magnitude of the Western States is something which does not strike the average individual at all times. The Senator spoke of the extent of his State. My State has an area of 104,000 square miles. It is about as large as the State of New York added to all of the New England States and a part of New Jersey.

Mr. GORE. And nearly as big as Italy.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; it is nearly as big as Italy. It is an enormous State. The State of Wyoming, I think, is a little larger; the State of Montana is twice as large; and if all of these new farmers and old farmers, attracted by the price of live stock, must be taught how to feed a calf and how to carry on the industry, $100,000 is farcical. Ten million dollars would, perhaps, be inadequate for the purpose, although I should despair, Mr. President, of improving the energies of such a large class of people by this course if it were needed. I am satisfied for the present, however, that it is not needed.

Now, there is $150,000 proposed to be appropriated for the production of pork. I suppose that industry is universal. Everybody is raising hogs who can. It is very easy to raise them; it does not cost much to raise them. They are natural scavengers; relatively they bring as much money in the market as do beef cattle; and yet we are going to appropriate $150,000 under those circumstances for the production of pork! Surely the farmers in the State of the Senator from Wyoming, needing the instructing and guiding hand of the Agricultural Department in order to teach them how to raise calves, know enough to raise pigs; but yet for the production of hogs we propose to spend $150,000 of the people's money.

But that is not all. It is proposed to appropriate $129,600 for the production of poultry. Poultry is so high, Mr. President, that it is very hard for the traditional darkey to reach the tail of a rooster, even when he is standing upon stilts. I paid 35 cents for a plate of chicken soup the other day and it only had two feathers in it—just enough to give the liquid the flavor of the chicken. [Laughter.]

Chickens, Mr. President, have been grown in America ever since the landing of the fathers at Plymouth Rock; in fact, I think they brought a chicken with them by that name, which has flourished and grown exceedingly ever since. Everybody is engaged in raising chickens now, because they are worth their weight in gold. If you get a spring broiler in Washington it will break you, or come very near doing it. Notwithstanding that, $129,600 is to be appropriated by this bill for the production of poultry. Of course, the term includes ducks, turkeys, guinea hens, peacocks, and other domestic fowl too numerous to mention, perhaps. I wonder if the farmers require $129,000 worth of information in order to enable them to produce poultry or whether it is to be expended upon people who want to go into the business but who know nothing about it and who want the Government to teach them how in order that they, too, may take advantage of war prices and possibly, some of them, obtain exemption from the new draft law upon the ground that the raising of chickens is an essential industry, in which they are experts.

But let us go on:

Production of sheep, $60,000—

Let me suggest there, Mr. President, that there is a remarkable difference in these several sums for these purposes. I do not understand why it requires $129,600 to teach people how to raise poultry and only $60,000 to teach them how to raise sheep. I should think it would be more difficult to raise sheep than to raise poultry, but it seems that it is more than twice as difficult to impart needed information regarding the production of poultry as it is regarding the production of sheep.

I do not think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will claim that it is necessary to instruct the people of his State how to raise sheep, whether they have been there very long or not. I think he was once referred to as the greatest shepherd since Abraham. If any information of that kind, therefore, is needed, I am sure he will be able to supply it, and to supply it prodigally, between now and the next shearing season.

Mr. President, the production of some of these animals may need encouragement——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Colorado referred to the senior Senator from Wyoming in connection with sheep raising. My colleague [Mr. KENDRICK] sits yonder, and I sincerely hope the Senator from Colorado will apologize for having omitted in his statement any reference to my colleague in connection with the raising of sheep.

Mr. THOMAS. I never heard the junior Senator from Wyoming referred to as a shepherd at all; I thought that he was more familiar with horned cattle.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask the Senator a question, but first I should like to make a brief observation. I admit that the Senator is a man of great learning and a leader of the bar in his own State and perhaps in the entire western section of the country. I will admit that the senior Senator from Wyoming and perhaps both Senators have been engaged more or less in the raising of stock.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is to their credit.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator. But although some years older than the Senator and having been engaged in the raising of live stock ever since I was able to follow along with a shepherd dog, I do not know yet how to construct a silo, in what manner to fill it, and how to feed out of it—knowledge which is so necessary to new farmers. Some of them may be learned in the law, but not well versed in farming, and without instruction they might not be able to proceed very far. This particular appropriation of $100,000 has no possible reference to the production of pork or sheep or to poultry.

Mr. THOMAS. It says "live stock."

Mr. WARREN. Well, the Senator knows that live stock usually differs from poultry.

Mr. THOMAS. I know it includes hogs.

Mr. WARREN. The term used here is intended to apply to the raising of live stock, mainly cattle, that must be wintered and fed largely from silos. With all the Senator's information, with all his wit, will he tell us if he knows how to build a silo, how to fill it, and how to feed the stock from it.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; I do not know any more about building a silo than I do about the teaching of singing. I do know, however, that the Agricultural Department has issued pamphlet after pamphlet and circular after circular to the people of this country telling them how to build silos; and if I were in a business requiring the construction of silos, I am satisfied that I could get all needful information upon the subject by writing to the Agricultural Department for their circulars upon the subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator also if every State agricultural college has not given the people of the respective States information on that subject?

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. It is not necessary to write to Washington; all that is necessary is for a man to apply to the agricultural college of his own State and obtain it; and the same thing is true with regard to instruction about raising chickens and raising calves.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit a further interruption?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Notwithstanding the paper instructions which they receive in the way the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from North Dakota have suggested, the Senator from Colorado knows that we have been sending out demonstrators all over the country in connection with different products.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. We have sent out demonstrators in connection with the raising of cotton and the destruction of the boll weevil; we have sent them out to teach the people how to combat various animal diseases. It requires some demonstration further than the paper instructions that one can get to enable him to proceed along many lines of agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not say that it requires it. I concede that demonstrators are sent out by the Agricultural Department upon the slightest provocation, and I have no doubt that the time will come when demonstrators will be sent out by the department to teach the farmers how to blow their noses. I do not know of anything in the line of farmer's actions or farmer's production that has not become a subject of demonstration by the Agricultural Department. A great many of these demonstrations are necessary, but if the day has come to pass that we must send demonstrators all over the country in order to teach the farmers how to build silos then it must be said that we have wasted a great deal of money in our previous appropriations providing for the printing of instructions and their circulation through the mails, so that every one might be supplied at his door with the needed information. The same thing is true, Mr. President, of the literature and of the efforts of the various agricultural colleges of the respective States. I again say that if it is necessary to do this work, $100,000 is an insignificant and wholly inadequate sum.

We now come to making cottage cheese on the farm, for which there is an appropriation of $52,950. I do not know why that particular amount of money is necessary for that particular purpose. I had occasion, Mr. President, when a somewhat similar appropriation was up for consideration some time ago to call attention to the injustice of providing an appropriation for the making of cottage cheese on the farm and providing no appropriation whatever for the making of cottage cheese off the farm. Anybody can make cottage cheese on the farm, or at least I presumed they could until I saw that it was necessary for the Government to go into the business of giving instruction how to make it; but it is rather a difficult thing to make it off the farm. At that time I offered an amendment to the bill then pending appropriating $60,000 for the making of cottage cheese off the farm.

Is it possible, Mr. President, that the agriculturists of this country have become so helpless that we must donate to them $52,950 for the making of their cottage cheese? The same question would apply to the utilization of creamery by-products, for which $21,850 are proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. President, in all seriousness should we make appropriations like this at this time when we are face to face with the necessity of levying burdensome taxation upon the free people of this country the like of which was never before borne by any people? Is it possible that we should for a moment think seriously of taking any portion of this money, wrung from the toil and the sweat of American manhood and American womanhood, and squander it as these items propose to squander it?

The Senator from Wyoming says that this is an insignificant sum, and so it is; but I do not think that the day of small things has gone. Great things consist of the sum of small things; the millions upon millions of dollars which the New York City transportation system collects and pays its expenses and its dividends with are represented in units of a nickel. The question is not the sum so much as it is whether that sum or that appropriation be needed; and I submit, Mr. President, in all seriousness, that it is a waste of the public money to appropriate this $619,400 or any of it; and I would oppose it as earnestly if it were $1, or if it were $6,000,000, as I oppose it under the present circumstances.

I have not called attention to the first three items for the eradication of cattle ticks, the eradication of hog cholera, and of other diseases, because I am satisfied that I would attack them in vain, although I do not believe, Mr. President, that they are necessary. We have been eradicating cattle ticks for many years, and it will be a great affliction upon those who absorb this appropriation if we ever succeed in that task. Cattle ticks are a nuisance; hog cholera is extremely dangerous; doubtless the appropriations for hog cholera are necessary, and also those for the eradication of other diseases which frequently attack animals in the mass. Let those appropriations stand; but the appropriations designed to encourage the production of commodities for the production of which there is already an incentive far greater than any possible legislation can afford should be eliminated from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out "live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000."

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smoot
Benet	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Thomas
Culberson	Kendrick	Shafroth	Trammell
Curtis	Lenroot	Sheppard	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Sherman	Warren
Fletcher	McCumber	Simmons	Wilfley
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ga.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday at noon.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KENYON, Mr. NEW, and Mr. OVERMAN answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. PHELAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn. It is Saturday afternoon, and nearly 5 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California and the Senator from Utah move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for a division.

On a division, the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

After a little delay, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. KING, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, while we wait, I renew the motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 31, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name.

Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

Give us this day our daily bread;

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the Kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12731) amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments still in disagreement to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, had requested a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. CURTIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4598) further extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912, as extended by an act approved June 30, 1916, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12731. An act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On July 12, 1918:

H. J. Res. 313. Joint resolution providing for the disposition of moneys represented in the Alfred Bernard Nobel peace prize awarded in 1906; and

H. R. 10021. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

On July 15, 1918:

H. R. 12100. An act to amend the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes."

On July 16, 1918:

H. J. Res. 309. Joint resolution to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

On July 18, 1918:

H. R. 10069. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10852. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads;

H. R. 12099. An act to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12229. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

On July 20, 1918:

H. R. 12002. An act for the establishment of Bar Harbor, in the State of Maine, as a port of entry and delivery for the immediate transportation, without appraisement, of dutiable merchandise; and

H. R. 8839. An act for the establishment of Oswego, in the State of New York, as a port of entry for immediate transportation, without appraisement, of dutiable merchandise.

On July 15, 1918:

S. 3009. An act granting the consent of Congress to the P. M. C. Coal Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across Tug River, connecting Pike County, Ky., and Mingo County, W. Va.

On July 16, 1918:

S. 4444. An act to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China; and

S. 4555. An act to validate certain public-land entries.

On July 30, 1918:

S. 3529. An act to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4598. An act further extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912, as extended by an act approved June 30, 1916, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

APPROPRIATIONS—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments 61 and 83 to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 11692) and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments 61 and 83 and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS.

LADIES' AUXILIARY, ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the complete organization made up of the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and all of the directors of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians, are here in convention. Yesterday they passed a resolution extending hope and cheer to the boys of their blood on the other side. The resolution is less than a page in length and is signed by the ladies with their official titles. I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a certain resolution to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, has this anything to do with any action that Congress has taken?

Mr. FERRIS. Not directly; although they are here to select a site for the erection of a monument in honor of the nuns who have fallen on the field of battle, and it is only in completion of a site that Congress gave them, but has no direct bearing on Congress other than that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

A message from the mothers of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians, representing American mothers of Irish blood whose boys have gone forth from America to fight the cause of freedom and democracy for the nations of the world, great and small; to the mothers of the boys fighting in the ranks of the allied nations:

Whereas militaristic leaders of central Europe have forced on the democracies of the world the issue of world's supremacy through the barbarous test of steel and bullets; and

Whereas the sons of the democracies of North America have enlisted in this fight to help the allied democracies of Europe and are gallantly, gloriously, and triumphantly giving their lives and shedding their blood in this great war which is being fought out thousands of miles from their homes and mothers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, representing the mothers of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, whose sons constitute a large portion of the American Army and Navy, and who are now fighting with the American Army and Navy abroad, appeal to the mothers of the boys fighting in the ranks of the allied forces to do all they can to safeguard and protect as only mothers know how our American boys.

To the mothers of Ireland, where so many of our American boys have from time to time found rest, recreation, and respite from peril, we desire to send a particular message, we are grateful to them for the motherly care and solicitude with which they have surrounded our boys, and we feel we do not have to appeal for a continuation of the hospitality for which Irish mothers the world over are noted, for we well know they will continue that gentle motherly care to all American boys, so that they who are so far from home will not be too lonesome for the mothers they have left in America who are praying with the mothers of the world democracies, "God, prosper, guard, and protect our boys."

Mary McWhorter, Chicago, Ill., National President; Adelia Christy, Cleveland, Ohio, National Vice President; Susan McNamee, Charlestown, Mass., National Secretary; Margaret McQuade, Pittsburgh, Pa., National Treasurer; Sarah J. Robinson, Richmond, Va., National Director; Mary Arthur, Indianapolis, Ind., National Director; Ada K. Gannon, Davenport, Iowa, National Chairman of Irish History; Ellen Ryan Jolly, Pawtucket, R. I., National Chairman of Monument to the Nuns of the Battlefield.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter in the nature of a question of personal privilege, in order to discuss it now so as to save time when we get into the consideration of the water-power bill. Day before yesterday the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] made a statement criticizing my action as chairman of the committee in which he said, in substance, that I had secured a letter from the President for the purpose of submarining my colleagues on the committee. I would have brought it up yesterday had it not been for the appropriation matters coming up. I want to make a statement concerning it, and I think it will save time, because I do not want to have to do it when we get into the Committee of the Whole. I have conferred with a leading member of the committee on the other side as to whether I ought to do this now, and he says it would be best to do it now.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing that the gentleman should take the time to make these explanations, and consume as much time as he pleases, but for the sake of precedent I think I should state that to my mind he has not stated anything that is a matter of privilege. I suggest that he ask unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. SIMS. Very well, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I could not possibly do it in five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Let the gentleman take all the time he wishes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House ad libitum. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is not here. Undoubtedly he will be here soon. If there are other questions that the gentleman is going to discuss, I suggest that he discuss them first.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold for five minutes in order to permit me to proceed for five minutes to discuss Exhibits A, B, and C found on pages 9657 and 9658 of the RECORD, and in the meantime Mr. ANDERSON could be notified to be here?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, there is a good deal to say about this that is not necessarily a matter of privilege and it is pertinent. I agree not to refer to what the gentleman from Minnesota said until he comes in, unless he delays too long.

Mr. GILLETT. Very well.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to state just what occurred as near as I can recollect—and I am human and my memory is fallible—pertaining to the formation of this special committee; also as to what the President did with reference to the two letters he wrote me and the indirect and direct criticism of the President for doing so. This is not an ordinary case. It is not as it usually occurs or has occurred when criticism of the President has been made. The facts are that for many years we have been trying to pass a water-power bill. All bills for that purpose, authorizing the construction of water-power dams on navigable rivers, of course, were properly referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the discussion and consideration of those bills were confined entirely to the question of navigation improvement. They depended upon navigation improvements and were incidental to and grew out of them. On the other hand, many bills with reference to the development and improvement of water-power structures upon public lands were introduced, which bills all went to the Committee on Public Lands. Several bills have passed the House and the Senate coming from each of these committees, but they never have reached the stage of enactment since the general dam act was passed in 1906 and amended in 1910 or 1912. I do not remember the exact date, but some time I think near the Christmas holidays last winter or just after them the President requested members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, members of the Committee on Public Lands, and members of the Committees on Agriculture and on Rules to confer with him at a particular time. We accepted the invitation. There must have been 20 or 25 members present. Numbers of them are here present now who were present then. The President, in substance, stated to these committeemen that in order to get action, in order to secure legislation that he had thought it wise that all the legislation should be included in one bill, in one act. In view of bringing about such a result he stated to us that he had asked the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture to have prepared a bill providing for the construction of water powers on the forest reserves, which were under the immediate jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, on the public lands, which were under the immediate jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and on navigable waters, which were under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and that he had requested a bill to be drawn up and that he had the bill there then, and he wanted to know if the members of these several legislative committees were willing to have a special committee created composed of an equal number of members of those legislative committees to consider the bill looking to the development of water power, and that he had asked the Committee on Rules to be there so as to advise whether or not a rule could be secured or could be formulated that would accomplish this purpose. He went over in detail not all the provisions, but the basic, fundamental principles. For instance, he said this bill provides for a term of not exceeding 50 years; it provides for a charge to be made by the United States; provides for the Government to either take over or grant an additional license at the end of the license period and provides for recapture based upon a fair value of the property so taken over not exceeding the actual cost plus such severance damages as might occur to the owner of the development by severing the water-power structures proper from property not taken over.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Was that the President's idea—to allow severance damages?

Mr. SIMS. The President said that that was the basic fundamental proposition embraced in the bill which he had had drawn up and which he was then presenting to us.

Mr. SINNOTT. He insisted upon it?

Mr. SIMS. He did; that is, he said that was provided for in the bill. Now, he wanted to know if we were willing to do so, the members of these several committees. Mr. LENROOT, who is now a distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, was present, and I do not remember whether Mr. ANDERSON was or not. Was the gentleman present?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. ANDERSON was present and quite a number of gentlemen were also present. I remember distinctly Mr. FERRIS, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, said that his committee had no objection and was willing to cooperate; that Mr. LEVER spoke up and, seemingly with a purpose of having a little fun at the expense of the other two committees, said his committee had never considered water-power legislation, but if it would materially help to get water-power legislation that his committee was willing to lend its assistance. I was the last one to speak, and I rose to my feet and stated distinctly and emphatically, and nobody could be mistaken about what I said or meant, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had always had jurisdiction of water-power legislation or the construction of dams for navigation purposes on navigable streams; that it was a committee of great importance; that we regarded it in the nature of a premier committee, and I did not know whether the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would agree to this proposal or not, and that in the absence of such knowledge I would not agree to the forming of such a committee or to a rule to do so, but that I would submit it to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and if they agreed to it it would be satisfactory to me. But I distinctly said to the President while on my feet, and every member of the committee heard it, that I did not see that there was any great urgency for water-power legislation when the cost of material and labor were such as practically to prohibit the development, and that if a project was developed with such high cost of material and labor that it would be unfair and unjust to have the rates made for the whole period of the license based upon such cost, and that in recapture, if actual cost was to be paid on the basis of war cost, that it would practically be prohibitive on recapture, and that if we passed legislation at this time providing for recapture upon a fair value of the property, as mentioned by the President, that it ought to be provided in the bill that so far as rate making was concerned and recapture whenever it took place under the bill it should be actual cost based upon the usual or normal conditions in peace times. The President said in reply to me that most of what I had said was true, and that he did not expect that there would be any immediate development under the bill with the present cost of material and labor, but he thought it was very important to have legislation passed so that as soon as the war was over and excessive high prices were reduced that development might then be made, in which, of course, I acquiesced.

The chairman of the Committee on Rules said they could form such a committee if the House would adopt the rule, but he did not know whether it would or not. It was something new and would establish a precedent. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee was there, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. POU, Mr. FOSTER, and Mr. LENROOT, at that time a Member of the House, was there. That bill was handed to Mr. POU by the President himself saying at the time in substance that he would not hand it to any one of the committees which now claimed jurisdiction as he had absolutely no preference between them. The President further said in advocacy of this proposition to establish this special committee that he hoped when the bill got to the Senate that the Senate would take similar action, and if they did not establish a special committee that the conferees might be appointed from the several committees having jurisdiction of the same matter that is proposed by this special committee.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMS. I do now.

Mr. GILLETT. I was going to ask the gentleman if this is the first conference he had with the President on the subject of water power?

Mr. SIMS. The first I heard of it was when I was invited to attend this meeting. I might have heard that it was coming up, but I never saw the President or talked with him?

Mr. GILLETT. About the water power?

Mr. SIMS. About the water power. All that occurred right there and then.

Now, when I brought the matter before my committee some of the Members who were present were not kindly to it, but they decided not to oppose it. Mr. POU came back to the House and had published 1,000 copies of this proposed bill—drawn up by the three Secretaries—and it was given out broadcast to the whole country as being the administration bill for water-power development, and the basic provisions of the bill were approved by such radical conservationists as Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Was not a bill of that nature introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. SIMS. It was not introduced until after the special Water Power Committee was appointed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Which is the bill that the special committee considered? Which was the bill that occupied the time of the committee?

Mr. SIMS. I will state that, because I wish to make it a part of my statement.

Mr. POU had that bill printed before any special rule was introduced, and the country had the benefit of it and the House Members had the benefit of it and knew what it was. And when the rule was brought in to form this special committee, that committee was sought to be appointed to consider the bill which Mr. POU had printed and which was given to him by the President of the United States, to which there was nothing added and from which nothing was taken. The rule was reported, as I remember now, and adopted on the 11th day of January, 1918. The committee was appointed by the Speaker on January 16, 1918. The first meeting of the committee was on January 21, 1918. My recollection is that Mr. RAKER introduced his bill, the administration bill, on the 15th of January, or the day before the committee was appointed, although I am not sure about that.

Now, after the committee had been appointed—and I had the honor of the chairmanship of the committee—and after it had had its first meeting and organized and decided to take up the Senate bill and offer the administration bill as an amendment to that bill, Mr. Merrill, who was the chief engineer of the Bureau of Forestry in the Department of Agriculture, came to see me rather late one afternoon and stated that the three Secretaries wanted that bill referred back to them. "Why," I said, "that can not be done. Their bill as we are going to treat it is to be a substitute for the Senate bill and it is not in shape for me to order it sent back by committee action." He stated the reason was they wanted to suggest some amendment to make the purpose and meaning of some provisions of the bill more clear and simple. I said, "Take the bill; go back to the Secretaries and tell them to suggest any amendments they see proper to put in the bill, and bring it back, and I will lay them before the committee for the committee's consideration as suggestions of theirs to the bill which they themselves had prepared."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman does not intend now to further complicate this situation by casting insinuations against the integrity or purpose of Mr. Merrill, of the Forestry Service?

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman wait until I get through? I am stating facts, and we will let the facts determine the matter.

Mr. SIMS. On the 27th of February, as I now recall, Mr. Merrill came to the committee room late one afternoon and handed me a letter signed by the three Secretaries, and the bill with the amendments indicated and marked on the bill, and that are in Exhibit B to this report, and said, "Here are the amendments that have been suggested in the interest of clarity and simplicity by the three Secretaries."

Of course, but one thought came to me, and that was that the amendments had been submitted to the President and had his approval. These three Secretaries were the men called on to draft a bill. That bill was the basis of and for the creation of the special committee, and never could I have assumed for a moment that that bill would be materially changed or the amendments proposed that would materially change it without submitting them first to the President, or at least to have said in the letter addressed to me that the amendments had not been submitted to the President and did not have his approval.

I had the letter published in the RECORD. Immediately I had a thousand copies of it printed for the Members of the House and had a thousand copies of the bill printed. I had never read the letter or the bill with the suggested amendments. I had no time then to read it. I was busy with the railroad-control bill and was suffering from a broken shoulder and arm, and only had strength to do what was pressing at the moment. I knew no better for several days afterwards, when Mr. FERRIS said to me, "Have you considered the amendments suggested in the bill as sent up by the Secretaries?" I said, "No; I have not read them." He said, "I think some of them are very material, and I ask you to read them." At the first opportunity I did read them, and I agreed with him they were very material—that they were not simply in the interests of clarity and simplicity. But still I had no thought that these amendments had been prepared and sent up by the three Secretaries without having consulted the President, whose agents they were, and who had asked them to frame the first bill. And when we were having the hearings, and for a long time while those hearings continued, I knew no better. Finally Mr. FERRIS called me over the telephone and said that he had called up Secretary Lane, and from what Secretary Lane said he could not see how he could have given them his approval, and that he did not believe Secretary Lane had given them careful consideration.

Now, the facts further are that at the time this letter was brought to me Secretary Baker was not in the United States. I do not know whether he was in Europe then or not, but I know he was not here. That fact was made known to me by Mr. Merrill, and that, while Secretary Baker did not sign it, he authorized some one to do so for him, and that some one so authorized did sign his name. And as to those amendments, while I was opposed to them—and every question I asked of Mr. Merrill and the other gentlemen who appeared before the committee showed that I did not believe in and did not agree to those amendments—I did not know at that time they never had even been presented to the President.

We disagreed to nearly every one of the amendments, except what is known as the net-investment amendment—I mean the committee did.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that this net-investment amendment was stricken out by the committee and stood stricken out for 10 days, until it was reconsidered?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not in order to state what occurred in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SIMS. After the bill had been ordered reported——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. I understood, when the gentleman from Tennessee got unanimous consent, that he had a matter of personal privilege that he would submit to the House. I supposed so; otherwise I would have objected.

Mr. SIMS. I had. I was asked to wait until Mr. ANDERSON came in.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen will suspend. The gentleman from Tennessee first intimated that he wanted to rise on a question of personal privilege and started in to tell what his question of personal privilege was, and after he had proceeded for two or three minutes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] impinged on the scene and suggested that he did not have any question of personal privilege, and that he had better ask unanimous consent to proceed, which he did. The Chair announced that he had five minutes. He said that that was not enough. Then the Chair said he could proceed for more, and he has been proceeding. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. By unanimous consent. Now, after the bill had been ordered reported, but before the report had been drawn up and filed, there developed, as you all remember, an agitation in the House for a joint-resolution recess, and I opposed it bitterly, for the reason that I wanted the water-power bill considered before any recess was had, because I was afraid that otherwise it never would pass. Finally the newspapers published a statement to the effect that Senators MARTIN and SIMMONS and Mr. KITCHIN, of the House, had been to see the President, and they had assured him that a recess would not delay or prevent the passage of the water-power bill but would expedite it. That is the substance of it. I had been doing all I could to have it passed before the recess.

I went to see the President before the 28th of June; I think about the 15th, or somewhere about the time that the statement was made. I went to see him for one purpose, and one purpose only, and that was to know whether or not he had acquiesced in deferring the consideration of the water-power bill until after the passage of the revenue bill. I think he also said—although I will not be sure of that—that Mr. KITCHIN had assured him that the water-power bill might be made a special order, following the revenue bill. I stated to him what my fears were, that after the revenue bill was passed we could not hold a quorum here, and I said, "What I want to know, Mr. President, is, do you object to having the water-power bill considered before the recess?" He said, "I do not; I will not interpose any objection."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. He objected to the recess because of the importance of the water-power bill, but as I notice your statement now, did not the President agree that this water-power bill was of no value until after the war was over?

Mr. SIMS. No. I will state just what occurred. There were some twenty-odd witnesses there, and if I misunderstood him or make a mistake I will be glad to be corrected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. No. It breaks me up. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not my intention.

Mr. SIMS. I had called up the White House and made an appointment four days later than my call, which was as soon as I could get in from the time I asked for the appointment. After I had made the appointment I learned that Mr. FERRIS had an appointment two days earlier. I conferred with Mr. FERRIS and asked him if it was about the water-power legislation or the recess, and he said, "Yes," and I said, "I want to see him about that recess. Why not make it together?" He said that was all right, and the time was changed so as to be put two days earlier, so as not to provide a separate date for me. In the meantime Mr. FERRIS had fallen ill, and when the time came for me to go, on the date set for the appointment, Mr. FERRIS sent over to me by messenger what was stated to me to be his minority views. I never read them. I have not read them yet. I knew what they were, because he had discussed them before the committee ad libitum and had given notice that he was going to file a minority report at the time. I was asked to take them and give them to the President. I did, but in discussing the matter with the President I never referred to that fact. I only talked about the recess, and nothing but the recess until I was ready to leave, and then I handed him the minority report, that had been handed to me, and the letter, and I said, "Mr. President, Mr. FERRIS asked me to give you this letter and the draft of his proposed minority report." But in discussing the fact that I believed the bill could be passed in a very few days, I said to the President that there was only one hotly contested matter in the bill and that was the question of recapture, with which Mr. FERRIS's minority report dealt; and I said, "That is the only matter of contention, and I think we can get the bill through in three or four days."

Then the President said most earnestly, "I know what Mr. FERRIS's position is"—I am only trying to state the substance—"and I agree with him. Those amendments were never submitted to me, and I do not approve of them."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to his colleague?

Mr. SIMS. I do.

CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not wish to disturb the gentleman's argument or statement, but I want to ask the gentleman if he will yield to permit me to offer a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) in reference to continuing appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the next month? I make that request in view of the fact that the Senate is about adjourning for the day, and I am in hopes the matter can be transacted without delay.

Mr. SIMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, if it does not take the gentleman from Tennessee off his feet——

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I offer on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, except so far as they relate to the support of the Army, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of September, 1918.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the resolution by striking out the words "and of the District of Columbia," in line 5.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to modify the resolution by striking out certain words, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent has not yet been given for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GOOD. Let the resolution be read as modified.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. I object, Mr. Speaker, for the present, for the same reason that I stated yesterday.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am going to move to strike out the words "and of the District of Columbia."

Mr. GILLETT. If it is understood that this joint resolution is simply to apply to the Department of Agriculture, I have no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the only intention I have in offering it. By oversight those words were not stricken out of the resolution which I sent to the desk.

Mr. GILLETT. If that is the intention, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee moves to amend the joint resolution by striking out, in line 5, the words "and of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that the title ought to be amended.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The title is all right, Mr. Speaker. It was modified before it was presented.

The SPEAKER. The title is all right.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TOWNER, for six days, on account of making patriotic speeches in Iowa.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CONTINUED.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. It breaks me up in my statement, and I would prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman has answered any number of questions covering this same matter.

Mr. SIMS. I know; and I would be here two hours if I answered all the questions that gentlemen might ask.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have got all day now.

Mr. SIMS. All right. Ask your question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not a sample of what happens whenever we undertake to have legislation enacted outside of the Halls of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SIMS. I am coming to that. I will answer specifically.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. When the unanimous consent was granted I was sitting here and would have objected, but I understood that the gentleman was going to speak to a question of personal privilege, but only desired to do it in this way instead of reading some things that would be necessary to show the personal privilege. Now, the gentleman is speaking about all sorts of things——

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation—the Chair stated it awhile ago: The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] started in on a question of privilege, about something that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] had said about the gentleman from Tennessee torpedoing his committee. Well, after he had proceeded about two minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] arose and suggested that he did not have any question of privilege, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts had made the point of order the Chair would have sustained it; but the gentleman from Massachusetts suggested to the gentleman from Tennessee that he ask unanimous consent to proceed, and that is the way it is being done.

Mr. GOOD. So the gentleman can wash all this linen for an hour now?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the gentleman's own taste to determine.

Mr. SIMS. I will determine it, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. GOOD. How much time has the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. He has all the time he wants.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Massachusetts said he did not care how much time it took.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Neither do we.

Mr. GILLETT. I had supposed that when anybody got the floor in this House, at the expiration of one hour his time would expire.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold that.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that, and that is the reason why I do not want to be interrupted, or else I can not reach the question of privilege before the hour is up. I decline interruptions until I complete my statement.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, we on this side will ask the same amount of time that the gentleman consumes.

Mr. SIMS. I have just finished what I said occurred between the President and myself. That was before June 28. I do not remember the exact date.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he has already occupied 40 minutes and has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. SIMS. If I am not interrupted I can get through, but not if I stop to answer every gentleman who wishes to ask me a hypothetical question. I am trying to state facts only. I say I never knew until the hearings were practically concluded, I never had even heard that these amendments had not been agreed to by the President; but the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], a member of the committee, a few days ago made a speech during general debate, published in the RECORD at page 9298. The gentleman from Oregon, among other things, said:

I am at loss to know why a constant reference is made in the minority report to the fact that the "net investment" idea was not in the administration bill; that it has been accomplished by an amendment added to the administration bill. Four times reference is made to the administration bill, leaving the inference or implication that the net investment idea is in conflict with the administration plan. The fair value recapture clause "agreed upon by Secretaries Lane, Baker, and Houston" is referred to. The "recapture proposal, known as the net investment amendment, as provided for by the majority members of the committee," is referred to. Why these repeated insinuations? Are they calculated to prejudice the House or are they mere inadvertences? I know of no better way of getting the views of the Secretaries on the "net investment" plan than by listening to their testimony and reading their letters in favor of this plan. This I have done. I know of no better way—at least for a Republican—to learn whether or not a bill or an amendment is an administration measure than to find that it has the approval of three members of the President's official family and Cabinet—the Secretaries of War, of the Interior, and of Agriculture. I hope that no one in the House will be misled by the devious language in the minority report.

I want to say, in justice and fairness to the gentleman from Oregon, that his conclusions are based upon sound logic and reason; for nobody would suppose that the three Secretaries who had been asked by the President to draft a model bill would then afterwards redraft it practically, and send it out without having referred it to him, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] undoubtedly was justified in making the argument he did, he, like myself, not knowing what the President had said about it, or that he had expressed himself in disagreement to that provision of the bill.

Now, in order that I myself might have something on which I could rely, and knowing as I did that the President had said he was opposed to the net investment provision, I wrote him a letter on the 22d day of this month, which was printed in the RECORD day before yesterday. The President wrote me on the 22d. As I stated before I did not have his letter and he did not have mine at the time these two letters were written on the 22d of August. Those letters have both been read and are in the RECORD. I wrote my letter because the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] claiming, with much show of reason and legitimate inference, that the bill as amended containing the "net investment," was the President's bill as much as the first one was, because it was drafted by the same members of the Cabinet who drafted the first one. Then I immediately wrote to know the facts that I might use them, and signed my name to the letter as chairman of the committee.

On the 23d I received the letter that the President wrote on the 22d, the letter which I read first, but which was printed last in the RECORD, and on the 27th I received a reply to my letter. The gentleman from Oregon on the day before yesterday, in connection with the letter that I had read, quoted from a book written by President Wilson before he became President—a splendid book, a splendid statement—but it has absolutely no application to the present case.

Now, why should the President be criticized for writing these letters when he had first invited us all beforehand and asked us if we were willing to do what we did—to create a special committee, if we were willing to accept this bill as a basis for legislation? Afterwards when the bill had been amended without his knowledge or approval, and when the gentleman from Oregon claims that it is as amended an administration bill, did he not have the right, and was it not his solemn duty to write the letter to me which he did on the 22d? Did I not have a right to ask for the facts when the gentleman from Oregon was arguing that the bill as amended had the administration's approval?

Now, about the Secretaries. The letter was signed by them. I do not know who wrote it, but a document signed is presumed to have been written by the person or persons signing it. With the war work that all three of the Secretaries were charged with, they had no time in which to hunt up banking experts and confer with them as the letter says, and suggest amendments as the result.

Now, as to the point of the gentleman from Minnesota, as far as the custom and rules of the House are concerned, I think I would be justly censurable under ordinary circumstances. But I ask him, when I knew that the bill which had been given to us by the President had been materially changed and which was charged up to the President as an administration bill, did I not have a right and did not the House have a right to know the facts? I was not submarining my colleagues, but was simply trying to remove the effect of the gas poison that had been injected into them by this amendment coming in in the way it did. He says that I submarined the committee. Then we are even, as I was "gassed." I want to say that when we get to that part of the bill I shall oppose the substitution of the net investment amendment and contend for the provisions of the bill as it was given us. The Secretaries and Mr. Merrill, with others, drafted the first bill. Why did not Mr. Merrill then have time to consult with banking experts? Why did he bring in the bill that he did with over 30 amendments, in order to clear up the first bill? You need not tell me that a scientific expert, an expert engineer, as is Mr. Merrill, did not know that it then had all the defects, if they are defects, which he speaks of afterwards in justification of these 30 amendments. I do not charge him with sole responsibility. I know the Secretaries have to rely on the facts given to them as a reason for the proposed amendments. That was why I said the gentleman from Minnesota charged me with having submarined my colleagues by seeking a letter from the President for that purpose. I have a right to give facts in the case and also explain what I had reference to when the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] said what he did the other morning.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yesterday, when I asked a question of the gentleman as to whether or not he had seen the President within 10 days or 2 weeks, the matter of the exact time was not material to me. When I read the letter from the gentleman to the President—and the letter evidently contained full, free, and candid information concerning the whole matter; the letter written on the 23d—and knowing that the gentleman some time prior to that discussed the matter with the President, it struck me that there was certain incongruity between the amplitude of the letter and the fact that he had discussed this matter before with the President. The President must have known a great many things in connection with the genesis of the bill. That is the reason I asked the gentleman if he had not had a consultation with the President. It seemed to me that the writing of the letter was a wholly unnecessary thing to do, as the President had all that information.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman must remember that I wrote the letter on the 22d of August, just following the time the gentleman had made the speech on the floor of the House.

Mr. SINNOTT. And the conference was when?

Mr. SIMS. Between the middle and the 28th of June. I am making no complaint of the gentleman's statement. I only intended to explain that I had not had a consultation with the President in the way of an argument to induce him to write the letter of the 22d.

Mr. SINNOTT. There is no discrepancy between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. SIMS. I see none, Mr. Speaker. I have finished.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Tennessee yielded the floor?

Mr. SIMS. I do yield the floor.

CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings had a few moments ago, when the joint resolution extending the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture was adopted. I do that, if the Chair will permit, for this reason: The suggestion was made when the resolution was offered from the Clerk's desk that it contained the words "in the District of Columbia." Without reexamination of the resolution, which was then on the Clerk's desk, I agreed at once to modify it so as to strike out those words, but upon a further examination of the resolution I find that the words "in the District of Columbia" are a part of the title of the resolution which is being extended. For that reason it is necessary and proper that they be included. I therefore ask unanimous consent to vacate those proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which House joint resolution 323 was just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is unnecessary to vacate those proceedings in order to correct the title.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not the title; this is the body of the resolution. The words referred to a resolution which is recited in the body of the one I offered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 324, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled, "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, except so far as they relate to the support of the Army and of the District of Columbia, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of September, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was engrossed and ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CONTINUING DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution making appropriations for the support of the District of Columbia for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, so far as they relate to the support of the District of Columbia, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of September, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if there are any reasons, other than those he gave yesterday, why this resolution should now be passed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Only this: I have been given to understand on very good authority that the Senate is likely to soon adjourn for the day. If it should do so, then it will be an impossibility for the District of Columbia appropriation bill to be passed to-day. As the gentleman knows, the joint resolution which this resolution seeks to extend expires at midnight to-day, and if the bill is not passed, then unless some resolution is passed continuing the appropriations for the District of Columbia there will be no money available for next month. I have offered this because I do not think that Congress should put itself in the attitude of depriving the District of Columbia of any money necessary in the administration of the District affairs. It is likely to cause confusion and chaos if something of this kind is not adopted. I prefer that somebody else take the responsibility, and if the gentleman, representing his side of the House, desires to take that responsibility and that risk, of course he can do it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has ample time to pass the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and I understand it is practically agreed to except the two amendments to which the House disagreed. I think it is fair to the House to assume that the Senate will do its duty, and the responsibility should not be charged to the membership of this House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true; but the gentleman knows that a resolution of this kind must originate in the House. I have just stated that it is doubtful if the District appropriation bill will be passed to-day. This resolution must originate here, and if we pass it now I think the House will have rid itself of any responsibility in the matter, and the Senate will have to take entire responsibility.

Mr. HAUGEN. I fully agree with the gentleman that the resolution should originate in this body; but, after all, the time has been extended already for two months, and it seems to me there should be some action taken on these appropriation bills. It is up to the Senate or whoever is responsible for the delay of the passage of them to now act and dispose of the matter. We have just extended for another 30 days the Agricultural appropriations, and these things ought not to be done.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the Senate is clearly responsible and only responsible for the failure to pass the District of Columbia appropriation bill, if it fails to yield on those two amendments to which the gentleman refers. That responsibility is clear and distinct and I do not think that this House ought ever for one moment to think of yielding in conference on the two amendments in dispute, especially one of them which is simply a private claim. If the Senate desires to take the responsibility of defeating the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia merely for the purpose of forcing payment of a claim which is disputed and to which the House conferees have objected and to which the House has objected, then, of course, it can do so. But the House is responsible in the matter of whether or not the appropriations now in force shall be continued during the next month, because, as I stated, the resolution must originate here, and unless we adopt this resolution and send it to the Senate then I do not think the House can wholly escape the responsibility of failure to take steps to continue the present appropriations in the event the pending appropriation bill should not become a law. I simply wanted to present this resolution and let those who care to do so take the responsibility of objecting to it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman has stated concurs entirely with my own view. He says the responsibility is up to the Senate to pass the appropriation bill, and I am sure he, as well as I, recognizes that it ought to become a law to-day.

Now, it is just as easy for the Senate to pass the appropriation bill as it is for them to pass this resolution, and the only reason they will not pass that bill is because we send them this resolution. I will not so discredit the Senate as to believe that they will not pass this important appropriation bill to-day, the last day of the month; and therefore, Mr. Speaker, not representing this side, but on my own individual responsibility, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, FAIRMONT, W. VA.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4597) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at Fairmont, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4597) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved April 17, 1916, to be built across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va., by the city of Fairmont, are hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from the 17th day of April, 1918.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NEELY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE SPECIAL WATER POWER COMMITTEE.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has used his own artillery and ammunition this morning instead of the mustard shells furnished from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. [Laughter.] Somebody torpedoed the special Water Power Committee. If it was not the gentleman from Tennessee, he has labored for an hour this morning in vain to demonstrate that he did. As far as I am concerned I prefer to reserve my fire until the gentleman from Tennessee sends the infantry over the top when we reach the disputed item in the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachuetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I think the speech which the gentleman has just delivered well illustrates the wisdom of that rule of the House which says that executive communications intended for the use of committees should be sent to the Speaker of the House. I think the practice, of which this is no single instance, of communications from the executive officers which are delivered to this House through the mouths of members of committees, generally through the chairmen of committees, as an indorsement of their projects and as an argument why the House should adopt or reject certain measures, does not conduce to good legislation. It contradicts the excellent excerpt which the gentleman from Oregon read yesterday from that very able work on congressional government by Woodrow Wilson when president of Princeton College, and I think it contradicts the necessity which we all feel, that the legislative and executive branches should be independent, an independence which has been more encroached upon in the last 6 years than at any time within the last 40 years. And I think this illustrates not only the wisdom of that rule, but the remarks of the gentleman illustrate also the wisdom of another rule, that the proceedings of a committee are secret. It is not well on this floor to have statements of personal conversations and of committee proceedings. It leads to contradiction, to disputation, to suspicion, and to mutual recrimination, and it is much better that all of those rules should be lived up to because they were adopted for a wise purpose, and they have been departed from of late, in my opinion, very unfortunately. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee, who has expressed so much eagerness for the passage of this bill, has used almost an hour in informing the House of facts of which we have been elaborately apprised before, and he repeats in extenso the valuable information which he sent to the President in that long letter of his which appears on pages 9657 and 9658 of the RECORD. I confess that I am somewhat surprised by the difference between the letter of the gentleman and the letter of the President. When the President writes to Mr. SIMS in his first letter he writes him with apparent diffidence, as if it were doubtful whether he ought to approach him on the subject of legislation. To be sure they had talked it all over in advance and they each knew——

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman himself has said so—each knew the other's attitude, and yet the President says in his letter, with great courtesy and respect:

MY DEAR MR. SIMS: I am going to venture to say to you as chairman of the special Water Power Committee what I hope you will not think I am taking too great a liberty in saying—

And so forth.

Mr. SIMS, in his response, does not seem to consider that he is taking a liberty. He makes no such modest avowal, but he begins right off—

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: General debate on the water-power bill has closed.

And then in the next paragraph of this long history of the incubation he takes pains to inform the President of the views of the present chairman of the Democratic congressional committee and of the ex-chairman of the Democratic congressional committee, and those are the only two persons he refers to and whose views he apparently thinks would be of interest or of weight with the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will not the gentleman go a little further? Does not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in that letter put the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] himself, on one side, against the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, on the other, and thus submit the matter to the President to be the arbiter, and Congress left out as if its opinion was of no consequence?

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly. In fact, in the whole discussion of the gentleman this morning, he seems to think that it is wonderful presumption on the part of Congress or of anyone to dare to differ from the view which the President has taken, and he seems to take it as great effrontery on the part of those three members of the Cabinet to dare to submit their views when they have not assured themselves carefully in advance that they are in accord with the view of the President. And although in the opening of his letter he was not as deferential as was the President, yet he shows later that this was a mere matter of form and not of spirit, for when discussing the report made by the Secretaries he said, "Assuming that the amendments had been submitted to you by the three Secretaries and approved by you, I never even read the bill or the letter, but went immediately to the floor of the House and had a thousand copies printed." When he thought it had the presidential approval, he did not even stop to read it, but he leaves us to guess with what contumely he would have treated it if he had known the Secretaries had been so audacious as to think for themselves.

And he seems to think that no amendment ought to be offered or considered here in opposition to the President's suggestion. He says in his letter:

I feel absolutely sure that neither the committee nor the House of Representatives would have suggested any such amendments or would have consented to them on any other theory than that they have received your consideration and approval.

Why, gentlemen, can subservience go further than that? Have we reached a pitch where the only thing we must consider in adopting a bill is whether or not it has received sanction from the White House? That would seem to be the conclusion which we must draw from the gentleman's speech.

He says:

It is evident to me that the Secretaries never considered these amendments as thoroughly as they should have been considered.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is strange that the gentleman should make that declaration, considering the discussion that was had before the committee by the Secretaries—by the Secretary of Agriculture, for instance, when he was examined and cross-examined, and showed an extraordinary familiarity with the subject. Does anyone believe that the President has examined the subject so exhaustively? But the chairman of the committee seems to think that if anybody differs from him and the President, then it must be that they have not fully considered the subject.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I have been sitting here for half an hour trying to get some light on what the question is. I have heard some discussion about these amendments, and I would like to hear of the merits of them.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has taken 50 minutes in discussing these general propositions, which he himself, as well as others, had thoroughly discussed before, and I thought perhaps it was not an undue intrusion upon the House if I should take five minutes to makes these suggestions, of which the purpose generally is to point out, in accord with the criticism of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], that we have wasted a great deal of valuable time in simply bringing before the House the record of conversations and interviews, which undoubtedly were very agreeable and flattering to the gentleman from Tennessee, between him and the President and other Members, but which personally I do not think were pertinent to this debate. I think the bill should be discussed and determined on its merits and not on the opinion of it which may be held by anyone, no matter how lofty his position or extensive his patronage. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman and will not impose upon the House any further.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the letters presented by the distinguished chairman of the special committee on water-power legislation, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], appearing on pages 9657 and 9658, for the reason that when the disputed "fair-value" section of this bill is reached in the debate perhaps some time late to-day, although that is hardly probable, as much of the day is gone, these letters will play an important part in the discussion. Therefore, I think they should be fixed in the minds of the Members who will spend the afternoon here, as Exhibit No. 1, the letter of the President, Woodrow Wilson, dated the 22d of August; Exhibit No. 2, the letter of the chairman of this Water Power Committee, of August 22; and Exhibit No. 3, the letter of the President, dated August 26.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of suggesting to the membership of this House, as we come into that intense debate upon this question on which the chairman of the committee, without the knowledge of his committee, apparently, has taken one stand, and with him stand Mr. FERRIS and Mr. DOREMUS, while against him stand Secretary Lane, Secretary Houston, and Secretary Baker, that the Members of the House refrain from speaking of these distinguished members of the Cabinet as the "three Secretaries." That is hardly dignified. In this Exhibit No. 2, the letter by Mr. SIMS, the words "the three Secretaries" appear five times, and the names of the Secretaries not a single time. And during the debate for the rest of the day that the letters first made official appearance frequent reference was made to the "three Secretaries." Thoughtlessly I made the reference once. But in the explanation made this morning by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], for nearly an hour, the term "three Secretaries" was used by him over and over again, perhaps 20 times, without once naming the distinguished members of the President's Cabinet who have earnestly tried to bring about a compromise that would give the Nation water-power legislation.

Now, thoughtlessly we may get these distinguished gentlemen, Members of the Cabinet, into that position where by continually referring to them as the "three Secretaries," we will have them known and designated, as have been many others in history and literature, even as "The Three Wise Men from the East," or the "Three Little Maids from School," or the "Three Black Crows," or "The Three Musketeers," or "Three Blind Mice," or even, my friends, as "Three Men in a Boat." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back any time remaining.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday I may have leave to address the House for 40 minutes on a subject foreign to the water-power bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that on Monday he may have leave to address the House for 40 minutes on a subject foreign to the water-power bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, can you not give some more detail as to the subject than that?

Mr. FERRIS. It is on the achievements of the war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. On the achievements of the war and politics? I want to be advised so as to be sure to be here in order to hear it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROBBINS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for to-day, on account of important business.

WATER POWER.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], in his address, said that one of the impelling reasons which caused him to write the President was certain remarks in my talk of the 20th. The remarks were these:

I know of no better way—at least for a Republican—to learn whether or not a bill or an amendment is an administration measure than to find it has the approval of the members of the President's official family and Cabinet, the Secretaries of War and Interior and Agriculture.

He contends that I made a claim by this language that the amendment was an administration amendment or measure. If that is one of the impelling reasons that caused him to write to the President, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact—and I feel rather slighted over the matter—that there is no reference or mention made of that speech of mine in the letter of the gentleman to the President.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, the water-power bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 1.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The vote is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, answered "present" 1, not voting 212, as follows:

Mr. MAHER with Mr. SLOAN.

During the roll call:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 207, present 1, making altogether 208—not a quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, we lack so few of having a quorum that I would be glad for the roll to be called again. How many do we lack?

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eight to 218 is 10 lacking.

Mr. SIMS. We could probably get them in a little while.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and sixteen is a quorum. There are four vacancies.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk may call the roll again. Or I am perfectly willing to wait if I thought that might help.

The SPEAKER. The request for calling the roll again is out of order. You can not turn a wheel without a quorum. The Doorkeeper will ring the bells again.

The Doorkeeper again rang the bells.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the affirmative.

Subsequently nine additional Members entered the Hall and voted.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighteen Members are present—a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last night there was an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], to section 7, on page 33. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan for five minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I will not consume time in the discussion of this amendment, because I think it speaks for itself, and its purpose is understood by all the members of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit the amendment to be read again? I should like to ask the gentleman a question about it.

Mr. DOREMUS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be read again for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 11, after the word "commission," strike out the words "may in its discretion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall"; in line 14, after the word "commission," strike out the words "to be best" and insert the words "as well"; in line 16, after the word "region" insert "as the plans of other applicants."

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, section 7 as it is now written would place States and municipalities at a disadvantage in the event they desired to file applications under this bill. It would require them to show to the commission that the plans they submitted were better plans than those submitted by private applicants. The effect would be to work a discrimination against States and municipalities that desire to compete with private applicants for the privileges extended under this act. The sole purpose of this amendment is to place States, municipalities, and other political subdivisions upon an equality with private applicants. Hence the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the effect of the gentlemen's amendment will still leave it optional or discretionary with the commission as to whether this preference shall be given?

Mr. DOREMUS. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken about that, because it makes it mandatory upon the commission to grant the license to the State or municipality, if the plans submitted by it are, in the judgment of the commission, as good as those submitted by the private applicant.

Mr. WALSH. That is just it. The State or municipality might submit plans that were better, and yet the commission might deem them not to be as well adapted to serve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources, so that you still leave that proviso in there under which the commission in passing upon these plans might still give the preference against the State or municipality. Now, does not the gentleman think that some language ought to be devised so that the commission could not escape simply by passing an unfavorable judgment upon the plans offered by the State or municipality?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will pardon me, if you strike out the words "to be best," as suggested, and not insert anything, that will meet the difficulty.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Michigan proposes to insert the words "as well."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But if you leave out the words "as well," so that it will read—

Provided, That the plans for the same are deemed by the commission to be adapted to conserve and utilize, in the public interest, the navigation and water resources of the region—

Mr. DOREMUS. I would be glad to accept that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Just strike out the word "best" and not insert anything in the place of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Of course, you want the resources to be properly utilized and the plans to be properly adapted.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. RAKER. If I can get the opportunity from either gentleman it will be equally delightful.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is sure of the privilege of the floor from either gentleman.

Mr. DOREMUS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman. The suggestion is made that if you make it mandatory, would you not practically defeat the very purpose of the bill, so that if the municipality filed an application for a permit, irrespective of what its plans might be, whether they would care to take in all the system, or whether they would develop all of the water in that community or not, the application of the State or municipality would have to be granted——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes, so that I may complete this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Irrespective of what the application of the municipality was, and irrespective of what its plans and purposes might be, the commission would be compelled arbitrarily to grant the permit to the municipality.

Mr. DOREMUS. Is the gentleman's question directed to my amendment or to the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAKER. To the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOREMUS. It would only operate against the private applicant in the event that the State or the municipality also desired to apply, and in a situation of that kind I am clearly convinced that the preference should be given to the State or the municipality.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman did not quite get my question. The gentleman's amendment leaves the discretion with the commission, so that if the plan presented by the municipality is in good shape they must grant the application.

Mr. DOREMUS. I think they ought to.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but under the suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, whether the plan was workable or not, if the municipality made an application the commission would be compelled to grant it.

Mr. DOREMUS. You have got to leave the discretion to determine whether the plans are adequate to serve the public interest with somebody, and necessarily it must be with the commission created in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. That being the case they should be allowed that discretion, and not be directed absolutely to grant the application.

Mr. DOREMUS. They would still have the discretion to determine whether the plans submitted by the State or municipality were adapted to conserve the public interests.

Mr. RAKER. Under the gentleman's suggestion, I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment and the purpose to be accomplished.

Mr. DOREMUS. No; even under the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Under the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. RAKER. I did not realize that the gentleman from Mississippi had made any suggestion. If he has I know that it should be considered.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is not necessary to repeat that. Here is the way it would read:

That in issuing preliminary permits or licenses hereunder the commission shall give preference to applications therefor by States and municipalities provided the plans for the same are deemed by the commission adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region.

What objection can there be to that?

Mr. RAKER. There ought not to be any.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out, in line 14, the words "to be best."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 11, after the word "commission" strike out the words "may in its discretion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall." And in line 16, after the word "region," insert the words "as the plans of other applicants."

Mr. ANDERSON. That is in lieu of the language in the amendment?

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes; and it should be further modified by striking out what I proposed in line 16, because it will become unnecessary on account of the change in line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his amendment again?

Mr. DOREMUS. Page 33, line 11, strike out the words "may in its discretion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall." And in line 14 strike out the words "to be best."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the gentleman's entire amendment?

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 11, strike out the words "may in its discretion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall"; and in line 14 strike out the words "to be best."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the original amendment is withdrawn and the amendment just reported is offered in place of it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "likewise" in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 33, line 17, strike out the word "likewise."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is substantially the amendment that I indicated some days ago I was going to offer to this paragraph. I have supported the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan instead of offering one of my own. However, since that has been adopted we ought to strike out the word "likewise" since the word is not necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Michigan a question with reference to line 17.

As between other applicants, the commission may likewise give preference to the applicant the plans of which it finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region.

Should not the word "may" also be "shall"?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In such a case as that the word "may" is construed to mean "shall."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) making appropriations for certain operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

THE WATER-POWER BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. That no transfer of any license, or of the rights thereunder granted, except by tax sale, shall be made without the written approval of the commission; and any successor or assign of the rights of such licensee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise shall be subject to all the conditions of the license under which such rights are held by such licensee and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original licensee hereunder.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, add the following proviso to section 8:
"Provided, however, That the commission may pay any delinquent taxes on the property of the licensee, and such payment shall be a first lien on said property for the repayment of said taxes."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, the commission ought to have the right to protect the property against any tax sales as well as by paying the taxes.

Mr. DOREMUS. Does not it make it mandatory on the commission to pay the taxes?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; it does not.

Mr. WALSH. Read it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I think the universal interpretation of that language by the executive department would make this mandatory. Wherever the word "may" is used, it is, I think, universally interpreted by the department to mean "shall." Whenever it is desired to really leave it in the discretion of a subofficer the custom is to add the words "in their discretion."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask to insert, after the word "may," the words "in its discretion."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8 the following proviso:
"Provided, however, That the commission may in its discretion pay any delinquent taxes on property of the licensee, and such payment shall be a first lien on said property for the repayment of said taxes."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the committee has really thought what that means. It leaves it up to the commission to pay these taxes, and there will be no tax sales. Is not that right?

Mr. SINNOTT. No.

Mr. RAKER. Under the amendment it is provided, if the party does not pay his taxes, that the commission should pay them. Is not that the purpose of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. The commission may, if it sees fit, and the taxes are charged up as a lien against the property of the licensee.

Mr. RAKER. Then that avoids the tax sale, if a man fails to pay his taxes. If he grows delinquent, he could go and say that the commission's duty is to pay the taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, it is not. The commission's duty is no such thing. This makes it discretionary with the commission. It is wholly optional with them.

Mr. RAKER. The man would let his taxes go from year to year. He would not ever pay them. Is not that right? They would charge it up against him.

Mr. SINNOTT. The commission would charge delinquent taxes against his property.

Mr. RAKER. This is a peculiar provision, and I do not think there is any other law in which you will find such a thing. If it is a going concern, one that is successful, the man will pay his taxes. If there is any doubt about it, he will let his taxes go, and you provide in the bill that the commission shall pay them.

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, no; not that they shall pay them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is within their discretion.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, just wait until it gets in operation and you will see that it will be the duty of the commission to see that these taxes are paid at all times. You permit the property to be sold, and it ought to be sold for taxes. Where are you going to recoup yourself? The commission has already made the application. How are they going to pay taxes, and where are they going to get the money with which to pay them? All the man has is in that real estate, in his dam, his project, and let us say that there are $60,000 in taxes charged up against him and there is no sale made. He will go into court and say that it is the duty of the commission to pay the taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. We can not be held accountable for a man taking that unfounded position.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the committee's attention to why you should not write such a provision in a piece of legislation of this kind, that the granting power, the power that grants the permit, that owns the property, that appoints a commission to handle its business, is to go to work and see that taxes are paid if the individual, association, or corporation that has it leased failed to do so. That is all there is to this, because the Government will not be paying any taxes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In the State of New York the ordinary mortgage provides that the mortgagee may pay the taxes and insurance and charge them and add them to his mortgage debt.

Mr. RAKER. But, my dear sir——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just let me finish the question. Here is a purely discretionary power giving this commission in such instances and circumstances, and in such instances and circumstances only as they see fit to do so, the right to pay taxes, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The man that goes into court and says that this discretionary power is a mandatory power, would go into court figuring that either the court had no knowledge of law or he himself in going there is going without knowledge of law.

Mr. RAKER. But the gentleman is entirely wrong. In most of the States the mortgagee can pay the taxes if the mortgagor does not. Of course, it is to his interest. It is to the interest of the mortgagee to pay the taxes, because if he does not pay the taxes and the property is sold at a tax sale, the purchaser at the tax sale takes the entire property and the mortgagee has lost all his property. So as a matter of fact, the mortgagee is always interested in seeing that the taxes are paid.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And so here you would lose your recapture rights.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no. The gentleman is simply leasing this property, and now you turn around and say that the Government shall pay the tax rather than let it be sold at a tax sale, so that some third party can get the property and then have the license transferred to him and use it in his business.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is merely for the purpose of enabling the commission to protect itself and to protect the Government against further embarrassment that would ensue from a tax sale to some one else. They should have that right to protect themselves. It is wholly within the discretion of the commission whether they shall do this or not.

Mr. RAKER. How is the Government going to protect itself? It owns the property and you can not sell the Government property, but you must advance money by appropriation and provide appropriations for that purpose, to pay these taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman's premise is wrong. The Government does not own the property.

Mr. RAKER. If it is sold at tax sale the man who purchases it takes the property and takes the entire project and the Government is protected.

Mr. WALSH. How does this property come to be taxed if it is Government property?

Mr. RAKER. That is another reason why such an amendment should not be agreed to, but this includes the property owned by the licensee in his own name, as well as that obtained by the permit or license. The tax covers it all, and to use the "project" you must not permit it to be separated or divided in any way.

Mr. WALSH. Why should there be a tax sale if the Government owns the property? Who is taxing it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment. It occurred to me when the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] first read the amendment that it was a very proper amendment, but when I began to think about it closer I changed my mind. Now in the first place the licensee does own the structures which he put there and they are all that are taxed, and there is no appropriation in this bill or provided in this bill that would be available to the commission to use for any purpose except in executing the powers and duties of the commission, and so I do not believe it ought to be done. If the United States owned the physical structures, if it owned what the licensee put there, then I could see why we should protect it, but the purchaser of the licensee's property will take it as a matter of course subject to the restrictions and provisions and terms of the license under which the licensee held it.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will permit, the purposes of section 8, if I understand it, or one of the purposes, is to prevent the transfer of a license or a project to a licensee that is not satisfactory to the Government. Now the gentleman from Oregon conceives the idea it would be possible, by collusion under a tax sale, for some person or corporation to buy in at a tax sale who would not be a satisfactory licensee to the Government. Now he seeks to prevent that by permitting the commission itself to buy in at a tax sale. That is the purpose; whether he has accomplished it by his amendment may be a question, but there is in the provision itself a possibility that by collusion the project might come into the possession of a licensee who would not be satisfactory to the commission.

Mr. SIMS. Well, if that is the object and purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon, to prevent use of a tax sale as a means of having a licensee whose license has not been approved, why there is a very good reason for it, but if it is true it ought to go further and provide that the commission might so use the funds of the commission for such a purpose. But there is no appropriation——

Mr. ANDERSON. Is not the appropriation carried in the bill available for any purpose in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. When we reach that section, or rather we have already passed it, we appropriated $100,000, and I understood it to be applicable alone to the payment of the expenses of the commission.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman may be right.

Mr. SIMS. Now, if this is, then the commission would have no funds it could use for that purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I just desire to ask the chairman a question. Is there any general provision in the bill under which this money, although it constituted a first-mortgage lien, can be collected? Is there any special provision in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. I do not remember of any special provision applying to such a situation in line with the question of the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the commission pays the taxes, it becomes a first lien on this property, and there ought certainly to be some way by which that can be enforced; otherwise it might run through the term of the lease.

Mr. SIMS. That is one reason why I have come to the conclusion, after thinking about the matter, that this amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It occurs to me it might be a good thing to adopt the amendment, but first to perfect it.

Mr. SIMS. I started to say, without going further and providing the means——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Provide some means whereby the Government could be reimbursed. I do not know whether it ought to be adopted at all or not. I have not any very fixed opinion on that, but if it is to be adopted there certainly ought to be some provision whereby the Government can reimburse itself out of the proceeds of the enterprise.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I think.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Did the chairman of the committee say that if the licensee, after having conducted his business for three or four years should get it into such shape that it had to be sold for taxes, that it did not terminate that license altogether?

Mr. SIMS. We speak here of assignees——

Mr. WALSH. I am talking about the licensee.

Mr. SIMS. Well, the licensee may transfer his right.

Mr. WALSH. With the consent of the commission. Now, I mean, suppose his property is sold for taxes, does not that terminate his license?

Mr. SIMS. It terminates his ownership; there is no question about it.

Mr. WALSH. Then if the property of the licensee is sold for taxes, and the commission should buy it in, and this should be made a first lien upon the property why is not the commission or the Government protected?

Mr. SIMS. Well, as I was going to say, it seems to me that the gentleman from Oregon would accomplish his purpose not by offering the amendment he does offer but to strike out the words "except by tax sale," and then the commission would have to approve——

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, the purposes of section 8 are that no court could enter a decree of foreclosure to order a sale of this property unless the commission gave it permission?

Mr. SIMS. Written approval; yes.

Mr. WALSH. So the courts are to be subject to the three Secretaries' approval in that respect, but they can hold a tax sale without the consent of the commission?

Mr. SIMS. According to this section; yes.

Mr. WALSH. And if a tax sale is held the license that was granted to the owner on the property terminates when the property is sold?

Mr. SIMS. So it seems to me.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does not the language intimate that is not the intention; but it says—

That no transfer of any license or of the right thereunder granted, except by tax sale, shall be made without the written approval of the commission.

That plainly contemplates by tax sale there may be a transfer of the license.

Mr. WALSH. That is the point I am trying to clear up, and I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for directing my attention to the language.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the question of the mortgage foreclosure, it does not require the consent of the commission. Of course, that goes on without any question. And I want to call the gentleman's attention to this amendment. This attempts to make a lien on property by virtue of the commission in its discretion paying taxes for somebody else. You can not make a lien by law that will deprive a prior lien holder on the property of his rights. Suppose bonds were given, and the mortgage given on the property with consent of the commission to secure the bond issue, and the taxes become delinquent? The only way the Government could get hold of it would be by virtue of a sale and purchase at the sale under the delinquent taxes. But you attempt in this amendment to say that they voluntarily pay the taxes and there is no sale, and then you place the subsequent payment as to a prior lien on the mortgage that has been given or on the bonds issued by the corporation, which clearly can not be right.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand the amendment, then. Is the word "prior" in there?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. It says:

Provided, however, The commission may in its discretion pay any delinquent taxes on the property of the licensee, and such demand shall be a first lien on the said property.

Now, think of it. Here is a proposition where a corporation——

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer the question. Here is a proposition where a corporation has borrowed money to the extent of, say, half a million dollars, and given bonds which are secured by a first mortgage. The notes of a licensee that deliberately sold the property may be delinquent. The property is not sold voluntarily. The commission goes to work and pays them, and this bill is a prior lien on the property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. SIMS. I want to see if we can get an agreement to close debate. Does the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] wish some further time on this?

Mr. SINNOTT. I want about two minutes in which to just reply to the last remark of the gentleman from California.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments to this amendment shall close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have in mind an amendment I would like to offer. I do not know whether it would be an amendment to this. I think it would be, rather, a substitute for it. I would like to have some time on that if possible.

Mr. SIMS. Do you want to offer it to this amendment or as a substitute?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My idea was to offer it as a substitute for this.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman wish to offer it now and then debate it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not know whether it would be in order to offer it now or not. If so, I would like to offer it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does that assume that I may be granted unanimous consent to have a few minutes more?

Mr. SIMS. You are to have five minutes, I understand. That is all you asked for.

Mr. WALSH. I have not permission to have that. The gentleman will yield me that, I presume.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], I believe, asks for three minutes. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that debate close in 17 minutes. That will give the gentleman from Massachusetts seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 17 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the language of this section, if it is not clear and plain, ought to be perfected so as to provide that if any licensee should permit his business to get in such shape that it is to be sold for taxes, irrespective of whether the commission pays those taxes or permits the tax sale to be held, or a tax sale is held without his permission, it ought to terminate the license. I do not think people should come in and get a valuable license from the Government for a long term of years and so neglect it or permit it to get in such shape that it has to be sold for taxes, and that then they could still hold that license. It seems to me that the license ought to terminate and the purchaser at the tax sale should be given either a new license or he should be given a license for the balance of the term.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Suppose the licensee puts a mortgage on his property and later permits it to be sold for taxes, and the sale for taxes will wipe out the license, what becomes of the security held by the mortgagor? He has security, then, on property to which no one has a license.

Mr. WALSH. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is included in the section, the commission would then come in and pay those taxes, and then they could give permission to the person holding the mortgage to foreclose under the language of the section.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the first right should be given to the holder of the mortgage security. The holder of the mortgage should have a right to pay the taxes or purchase the property at a tax sale, and that right should be prior to the right of any individual or company, or even the Government itself.

Mr. WALSH. That would be permissible under the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon. It is only discretionary upon the commission to pay these taxes. Now, it may be that the taxes go unpaid without fault or neglect on the part of the licensee, and that the commission may come to his rescue temporarily and pay these taxes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But it would not be right under those circumstances to make the amount of money paid by the Government a prior lien or a lien prior to the mortgage.

Mr. WALSH. No. I am inclined to agree with the point raised by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is evident that the main purpose of section 8 is to prevent the transfer of licenses without the consent of the commission. Why would it not cure the defect here if you struck out "by tax sales"?

Mr. SIMS. And make no other amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would obviate the suggestion of the gentleman, that he does not think it would be right by tax sale to transfer the license and at the same time not surrender it.

Mr. SIMS. I want to answer the gentleman's suggestion by saying that I believe the gentleman is right, that the corporation or municipality that will not pay its taxes should not hold the advantages and benefits of a license while the United States water-power commissioner pays the taxes with money the United States taxpayers have to provide. The licensee can get money to pay taxes, unless he has mortgaged his property to death, but if the other motion is made to strike out the exception the defect would be cured.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, on hasty reflection, that the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] ought to prevail, to strike out "excepting by tax sale." I think the taxes should be preserved. We ought not to destroy the right of communities, or whoever will impose these taxes, to collect the amounts due by means of a sale.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would not, if my friend will allow me, remove that right that the State or municipality would have.

Mr. DOREMUS. It would not take away the power of the State.

Mr. WALSH. I think it would take away the right of the commission to control the transfer of a license.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes. As a legal proposition, even though the gentleman's suggestion were adopted and those words were stricken out, it would not take away from the States the power to sell this property in case it became delinquent by the nonpayment of taxes?

Mr. WALSH. No; but if somebody else purchased at tax sale and went to get the approval of the commission to transfer the license, they might refuse to give it.

Mr. DOREMUS. In the event the property was sold for taxes?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. DOREMUS. These words should not be in there.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. ESCH. This condition arises from the fact of the elimination by the committee of certain language in the original draft, which, if retained, would make it more rigid than it is. In the original draft section 8 is as follows:

That no transfer of any license or of the rights thereunder granted, except by tax sale or trust deed or mortgage issued for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of the licensee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There is some sense in that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would it be in order now to offer an amendment as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Oregon?

The CHAIRMAN. That would rest with the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the chairman of the committee will give me his attention, I would like to secure recognition for the purpose of offering a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to offer an amendment and be allowed five minutes in which to discuss it. I will couple with my request, Mr. Chairman, a request that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] be allowed five minutes to discuss the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama. I amend my request and make it 10 minutes, 5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and 5 to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may be allowed to offer an amendment and be given five minutes to discuss it, and that five minutes be given to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There have been a number of suggestions made, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this amendment. The first thing to which I call attention is the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; that is, that the owner of the property, in the case of a license granted by the Government, which is presumably of value, should not hold that license after he is in default on account of nonpayment of taxes.

What we are primarily seeking to do here is to bring about a condition so that the water power of this country shall be utilized, and if you insert any condition by way of amendment or otherwise which makes the property right insecure you are going to make it additionally difficult, if not impossible, to develop these water powers, and, in the instance cited, if the owner of property, by becoming in default, shall forfeit his license, that instant you make it impossible for any man with security to advance money in any way by mortgage or bond.

For instance, you will find that the owner of property, no matter how careful he may be, if he lives at a distance from the point where his property is, is liable to let a tax go unpaid without any intention whatever of allowing it to be done, when he intends in good faith to pay his taxes, when, as a matter of fact, he is paying his taxes generally; but it occurs through inadvertence or where the tax is not brought to his attention. If you adopt anything of that nature and attempt to finance a proposition and allow a mortgagee to take all these chances, no mortgagee would for an instant consider doing it. So that you can not, it seems to me, consider seriously forfeiting a license for failure to pay taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SISSON rose.

Mr. SIMS. Is the gentleman from Mississippi ready?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, temporarily.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LONERGAN, for two days, on account of important business.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to take up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has this report been printed?

Mr. SISSON. No. This is the last day, I would say to my friend, on which this bill can pass without the District being left without funds.

Mr. GILLETT. Is this a final report?

Mr. SISSON. This is a final report.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it satisfactory to all of the House conferees?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; it is satisfactory to all the House conferees. The Senate, in other words, recedes on both amendments. The only items in disagreement were the Keller amendment and the playground appropriation, and the Senate receded on both items.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 765).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 61.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$70,030, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

T. U. SISSON,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOS. T. ROBINSON,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SISSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon, in line 8, page 34, to strike out the words "except by tax sale."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 34, line 8, strike out the words "except by tax sale."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, as I stated in my inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], it is evidently the purpose of section 8 to inhibit the transfer of any license, or the rights granted under any license, except by permission of the commission; but the way that this language is phrased here it says that no transfer of any license, or of the rights thereunder granted, except by tax sale, shall be made without the written approval of the commission. In other words, that makes an exception to the rule, and if this language is adopted as it now stands in the bill, it will not only allow the transfer of a license in the case of a tax sale, without the approval of the commission, but, in my judgment, it might offer some inducement for collusion on the part of persons who might think it desirable to secure a tax sale of this property in order that they might thereby escape this inhibition.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman offered an amendment to strike out those words?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offered as a substitute for the pending amendment a motion to strike out the words "except by tax sale," so that the section will consistently carry out the purpose for which it is intended.

Mr. MONDELL. That amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That will absolutely eliminate any question that might otherwise arise.

Mr. SINNOTT. I want to ask the gentleman a question on that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. Would not that practically deprive the States of the right to collect their taxes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. How?

Mr. SINNOTT. You would give them no sanction——

Mr. BANKHEAD. How could we deprive the States of the right to collect their taxes?

Mr. SINNOTT. If you are striking this out——

Mr. BANKHEAD. We can not by a section of this sort deprive any State of the right to collect its taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is my objection, and therefore these words should be left in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The purchaser could go to the commission and get his license.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely. The gentleman from Oregon is in error in assuming that this would deprive the State of any right that it would have to collect its taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not think we could deprive a State of that right.

Mr. CANNON. Let us see about that. Here is the property, located in a State. An insolvent company that has the property refuses to pay the taxes, and there is no way to collect the taxes by levy upon the personalty. The property goes to tax sale. Now, in what condition is the State?

> You take my house when you do take the prop
> That doth sustain my house.

And it seems to me that the tax title would be of no avail without the transfer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The State would be remitted to exactly the same remedy that it would have in the case of any other tax delinquent. There is no distinction in principle as between a water-power project and any other real estate.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose somebody who is not agreeable to the commission buys the property?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then they ought to make some separate provision to cover a case of that sort, but it ought not to be complicated with this.

Mr. SINNOTT. The trouble with the gentleman's argument is he admits that we can not interfere with the right of the State to collect its taxes, but at the same time we leave in the bill a prohibition against the sale of that property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how.

Mr. SINNOTT. The bill says——

> That no transfer of any license, or of the rights thereunder granted * * * shall be made without the written approval of the commission—

But it contains an exception—except by tax sale.

We ought to permit the transfer in case of a tax sale.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. How could the State be assured that it could recoup itself for taxes if the purchaser did not know that he could get the approval of the commission and if he bought the property in for a transfer of the license?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the State would have the right to put up the property and sell it, like any other property.

Mr. WALSH. Why make the prohibition of transfer of license?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The committee evidently wanted to adopt a general prohibition against the transfer of a license without its approval.

Mr. WALSH. They wanted to protect the purchaser at a tax sale.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They wanted to protect the State.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the property was sold at a tax sale they should get all the rights under the license without permission of the commission.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman think the word "transfer" as used refers to anything but a voluntary transfer?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The sale of the property would not be a transfer in law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is simply a method of collecting taxes. It does not mean anything but a voluntary transfer of property.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Would not the insertion of the word "voluntary" before the word "transfer" and striking out the words "at a tax sale" obviate the objection?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, my conception of this language, or, rather of what the law would be, is just as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, but it occurs to me that it would be desirable to add after the word "no," line 7, the word "voluntary," so as to read "that no voluntary transfer of any license," and so forth.

It is evident from the action of the special committee that drew the bill that they intended that no transfer shall be made of these licenses or rights thereunder even through a proceeding in the court. The language of the bill was "no transfer of the license or rights thereunder granted except by tax sale, judicial sale, or foreclosure sale shall be made," and so forth. The committee struck that out. Now, it occurs to me, in view of that, that we ought to put in the word "voluntary," so that no voluntary transfer should be made, and strike out "tax sales," because it is going to be a difficult matter to finance this thing. First, as the law is written, if a man who is to put up the money is confronted with a statute saying that he can not go into the courts and collect the money or enforce a decree of the court by a sale of the property, he is not going to invest his money in the security which is offered. It is evident from the amendment that that is what the committee has in mind, because it deliberately struck out of this exception judicial sales and foreclosure sales so as to limit it exclusively to tax sales. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama ought to be agreed to. I suggest to him that he go a little further and add after the word "no" in line 7 the word "voluntary," and say that no voluntary transfer of any license shall be made without the approval of the commission. I do not think you could enforce any such provision; you could not provide that a man who loans money can not go into court and collect it by enforcing the lien on the property mortgaged without consent of somebody in writing. I do not think that would ever hold. I suggest to the gentleman that he put in the word "voluntary" and strike out the words "tax sale."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say that I concur in the gentleman's suggestion and would be glad to adopt it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. In view of the fact that this particular section has been four times adopted by the House, does the gentleman think that it ought to be amended?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. We have never written it into law, and the fact that it has been four times adopted by the House carries no conviction, and is not even persuasive with me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my substitute by adding after the word "no" in line 7 the word "voluntary."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the substitute amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

THE WATER-POWER BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That each applicant for a license hereunder shall submit to the commission—

(a) Such maps, plans, specifications, and estimates of cost as may be required for a full understanding thereof. Such maps, plans, and specifications when approved by the commission shall be made a part of the license; and thereafter no change shall be made in said maps, plans, or specifications until such changes shall have been approved and made a part of such license by the commission.

"(b) Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act.

(c) Such additional information as the commission may require.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 4, after the word "to" insert the words "bed and banks and to," so that it will read:

"(b) Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, in this section, by the provision that the applicant for a license shall have complied with the rules and laws of the State in regard to the diversion of water, we are trying not to infringe the rights of the States in that respect, and I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that many Supreme Court decisions in respect to States' rights as to water also refer to States' rights as to the beds and banks, and I would like to read from the latest United States Supreme Court decision upon this question, delivered on May 12, 1917. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Pitney, and in that he says:

The States have authority to establish for themselves such rules of property as they may deem expedient with respect to the streams of water within their borders, both navigable and nonnavigable, and the ownership of the lands forming their beds and banks.

In many States the law gives the riparian owner title to the middle of the stream. In other States only to the high-water mark. The property rights are within the State. It can dispose of the beds, or parts of them, regardless of the riparian ownership of the banks, if it desires to, and that has been done in some States. If we put in this language, which is practically taken from that Supreme Court decision, as to the property rights of the States as to the bed and the banks and to the diversion of the water, then it is sure that we have not infringed any of the rights of the States in that respect, or any of their rules of property, and we are trying in this bill above everything else to overcome a divided authority and pass a bill that will make it possible to get development. We are earnestly trying not to infringe the rights of the States. If possible we want a bill that can not be defeated in the Supreme Court because of omissions, because of the lack of some provision that we should have put in the bill to safeguard the States.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me that the language the gentleman has employed would not express the idea that he has in mind. He uses the words "the bed and banks."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I use the language "bed and banks" because there is but one stream bed to a project, while the decision read refers to the beds and banks because it refers to all streams and in all the States.

Mr. WALSH. Ought it not to be amplified in some way so that it can be identified with the bed and bank of the stream on which the project is to be located?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In connection with the diversion of the water in the particular project, I do not think there would be any question in regard to it in the mind of the court or of any individual.

Mr. WALSH. It will read in this way:

Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Supreme Court did not amplify it any more than that. It is a decision as to the property rights of the States and to their property rules as to bed and banks.

Mr. WALSH. Did they use this language?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Absolutely, except in this particular case I make it bed; singular instead of plural.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the chairman of the committee to what I am about to say with reference to paragraph (a) of this section. It reads—

Such maps, plans, specifications, and estimates of cost as may be required for a full understanding thereof.

"A full understanding thereof" of what?

Mr. SIMS. An understanding pertaining to the application.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that it ought to read "for a full understanding of the project for which a license is asked." You do not have plans and specifications and maps for a full understanding of a license. You need them for an understanding of the project for which the person wishes to get a license.

Mr. SIMS. As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] said awhile ago, this language in substance, if not exactly, has been four times passed upon by the House, and I think also by the Senate, and I am very loath after the House has given its approval of language to risk even my own judgment suddenly about it.

Mr. WALSH. Is this provision in the Senate bill?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether it is exactly the same or not, but the same provisions in respect to the same subject have been in every bill.

Mr. WALSH. That is not at all conclusive. I move, on page 34, line 20, to strike out the word "thereof" and insert the words "of the proposed project."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 34, line 20, after the word "understanding," strike out the word "thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the proposed project."

Mr. SIMS. I really see no harm in it, and it may be a good amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I think it makes it definite and it does not change the meaning.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, there will be no plans submitted of any other project.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first dispose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 11, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 2, after the word "complied," insert "or will comply."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the point of this matter is that the Government may be dealing not merely with one applicant but with four or five people as to the same place. Some of these are very large projects. Take, for instance, the Columbia River. There may be a dozen people applying to get a license, and the commission should take the best one of the lot. Only one of them could have complied with the law of the State and obtained the State right, and under those circumstances where a dozen people will apply the commission should not require any one of them to have a monopoly already before they deal, but they should require that every one of them should agree to do whatever was necessary by the law of the State and therefore should have satisfactory evidence that the person who applies has complied with the law of the State or will comply with it, so that the Government can have a choice among the different people.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment of the gentleman ought to be adopted. Anybody can go and promise to comply, and if they want this permission it does seem to me they ought to furnish the evidence required by this section that they have complied with the laws of their own State.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But does not the gentleman see only one person could have so complied and you have no benefit of competition? Evidence that you will comply means a guaranty.

Mr. SIMS. What is the reason several applicants can not comply?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They can not.

Mr. SIMS. Why not?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Because a great many of the States provide that when dams shall be built in a State only one person gets the permit.

Mr. SIMS. I hope this amendment will fail.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the laws to which this refers are laws requiring that a certain applicant shall do certain things, shall comply with certain regulations and certain laws, and all applicants can do that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In some States.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is objection to the amendment as suggested by the chairman of the committee. The mere promise that an individual will comply, or hopes to comply, or intends to comply, would not be satisfactory at all.

Mr. McARTHUR. Would not the very fact the people who have not complied with the requirements——

Mr. MONDELL. Or made any effort.

Mr. McARTHUR. Or made any effort. Would not the very fact they are privileged under the proposed amendment to come in enable them to hold up bona fide people from developing?

Mr. MONDELL. That is possibly true.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, there is a very good reason why some such amendment as that proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey should be inserted. There are a good many regulations of the States that can not be complied with until the actual work has begun. For instance, take the State of South Carolina. They are required before they can exercise the right of condemnation to acquire riparian rights and buy three-fourths of the land necessary to be flooded in creating a project of that kind. Now, if they will not be allowed to proceed on giving reasonable assurance they will comply with the law, they will never be able to go ahead and purchase three-fourths, because they will be purchasing in absolute ignorance of whether they will get a license or not. How are you going to manage a condition of that kind? Nobody would ever be prepared to go on and get a license in my State under the present law, undertaking first on a mere venture to buy three-fourths of the water rights or riparian rights necessary for the development.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that a fair interpretation of the provision of this paragraph, that the applicant has complied with all requirements that he can comply with up to the time he receives the permit? Of course he can not comply with other requirements coming subsequently. Those matters will be treated not in his application but in his final agreement with the commission.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the reason I say there should be some qualifying language here following the idea of the gentleman from New Jersey, because it says absolutely they must comply with all the requirements of the State, and many of those requirements are not conditions precedent to their beginning, but conditions subsequent.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would the word "preliminary" before the word "requirement"——

Mr. STEVENSON. I think some such word as that would obviate the difficulty which I anticipate, and I hope that something of that kind will be inserted.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment that the word "preliminary" be inserted in line 2 between the word "the" and the word "requirements."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers that as a substitute?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I offer that as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a little more in reference to the amendment. I just want to say one word on the subject. If we have got a dozen different people——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers as a substitute, if the gentleman from New Jersey will suspend, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DEMPSEY offers the following substitute amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 35, line 2, after the word "the," before the word "requirements," insert the word "preliminary."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty about this lies in the fact that the laws of the States are so different. In some States they require, as said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], that before you go ahead with the work you have to buy certain things. In other States they require a claim to be filed, and the first person that files the claim gets the water, and nobody can file after him. It is like filing on a piece of land under the land laws. If there be a big water power, where you want to have competition between different people, the commission, instead of saying that they will lease to the man that has filed on it, or, as they say in Spain, "denounced it," ought to say, if anybody has filed any previous claim to cut out competition, that everybody should have an equal right in developing the water power and that they will not allow anybody to have the first right under the laws of the State. I thought it should be put in that he would comply with the laws of the State, but Mr. Houston was asked about that—I think it was he, but it does not make any difference; it was one of the Secretaries—and said that he thought they could manage it very easily by arranging among the different people as to how they should take care of rights of that sort. The bill says they must get evidence that the man already has a title under the State and has complied with all the laws of the State. Now, if the laws of the State require that he file a claim against the water power, he has the first right on that; and I suggest, if you want to make it a real, workable thing, a competition between great capitalists, you ought to have some language which would allow the commission to say, "We will regard the laws of the State, and any man who takes a license from us will obey those laws. We want a fair field and no favors, and nobody shall take a first license from the State." That is not avoided by the amendment of the gentleman from New York in saying "preliminary," because only one man can file these preliminary claims in some of the States. We want competition; and I want, instead of having satisfactory evidence that they have done what the State requires, satisfactory evidence that they will do it.

I do not understand why everybody does not agree with me. I did not understand it in the committee. But I thought it a duty to bring it before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 11.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] offer his amendment as a separate amendment. I think it a very good one.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 35, strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 and the word "water," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the law of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located, with respect to application for the right to appropriate, divert, and use."

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to respectfully call the committee's attention to this matter. The argument addressed to the committee makes it important that I should at this time at least present to the committee what is in my mind and what was really the matter discussed before the committee when this bill was reported out. The argument here has developed that feature. In practically all the States where there is a diversion of water permitted—and I want to particularly call the committee's attention to that—the right that becomes eventually effective depends upon the work that the man does long years after he makes his application. Now, I want to impress that upon the attention of the committee.

There is no State of the Union in which that is not the law today. A man desires to appropriate water from a stream and he starts in and has to build a dam. He has occupied a long period, in the first instance, making surveys. Then after having the surveys completed, he starts in to build his dam. He then has his ditch to build, and his right to the water does not attach until it is actually used. That is the law in every State of this Union, decided by every State court and by the United States Supreme Court repeatedly and repeatedly.

Now, what have the States done? They have permitted a procedure by which the man who desires to obtain water by appropriation in any of the streams or reservoirs or lakes, or otherwise, has to file an application notice that he intends to do so-and-so and so-and-so. And when he diligently prosecutes that work to completion, when he finally does appropriate the water, his right relates back to the time that he commenced and filed his application. So that any intervening party can not go in and beat him out of the right after he gets his work half completed by erecting a large dam at an enormous expenditure in the construction of it, as well as the ditch. Otherwise the third party could go in and appropriate the water at another place and absolutely defeat all his purposes and his object in that creek or river or stream or whatever it might be. So the courts have held repeatedly that when he actually appropriates the water to his beneficial use his right dates back and begins from the time he complied with the law and made his application. It is required to be recorded in the recorder's office, and so forth, according to the statutes of the several States.

That is the universal rule, and it is the only equitable rule and it is the only just rule, and it is a rule that has grown out of the practice of the miners in the West, and confirmed and approved by the States in their legislatures, and confirmed and approved by the Supreme Court in repeated decisions on water rights.

Now, I want to call attention to the amendment I have offered. That is the one reported by the committee, and one on which there was considerable consideration, and one that ought to go into this bill in order to make it workable, namely, that satisfactory evidence shall be given that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States in which the proposed project is to be located with respect to applications for the right to appropriate, divert, and use waters for purposes, and so forth.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. Here he has complied with the laws of the State in regard to filing his application, either with the water commission of the State, as in the State of Oregon, with which I have been somewhat familiar, or——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more on this subject.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield if I have time when I get through my statement.

Mr. SIMS. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me for a short question.

Mr. WALSH. I am sorry to see dissension among the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I yield to my distinguished friend from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. The amendment which the gentleman is discussing is one of the so-called Merrill amendments?

Mr. RAKER. Not that I know of.

Mr. SINNOTT. One of those brought to the committee by Mr. Merrill?

Mr. RAKER. It is one which I have discussed with many parties outside and otherwise. I am speaking now from the practical standpoint, from an experience of 30 years in dealing with water rights and on the bench, and investigating this subject from the decisions of the courts and the Supreme Court of the United States, and I want now to complete my statement. It is this: Under this legislation when the applicant appears before the commission he must show them certain things, namely, that he has all plats and plans and maps, that it is feasible, that he will have a workable project. Is not that right? Next he must show that there is some water that can be used which will make the project workable. Part of that he may show, and he must show that he has an absolute title in fee by virtue of his ownership in the land. The greater part of it is that on which he will acquire a right by appropriation.

Now, let me call this to the attention of the committee: Here is an application according to the laws of my State and of the other States, where he has complied with the water laws in making his application for a right to use the water. He has absolutely no right, he has nothing in the way of an indefeasible water right, until he has completed the work and placed the water in actual use. Now, when he makes that application this provision in the law to-day is absolutely impossible to be complied with, because you require him to show that he has built the dam and constructed the ditches and put the water to an actual beneficial use before he is ever in a position to do it, when he had paid out, maybe, a million dollars or two million dollars to construct the dam and build the ditches so that he can turn the water into the head and commence to generate electricity. Now, if the man has complied with the law relating to the application for the water right, for its diversion and appropriation and use, and then gets his permit and proceeds and actually develops it according to that project, the moment he turns the water over the wheel the first time, or turns it upon the land to irrigate it, his right is complete and retroacts back to the time when he gave the notice, and no intervening party can come along and prevent it in the meantime. But to say that he must prove a valid water right at the time of making the application, I tell you it can not be done. For instance, a man desires to appropriate water for his own personal use, and——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In one moment. Here is a large canyon, with a stream flowing through it. Here is a tract of land, where, if he can construct a ditch and get the water on it, it will be valuable. Building that dam or ditch would be suicidal if he had not first filed his notice of application to divert and appropriate, because the next day some other man, seeing that he had not completed his ditch, though he might have been subject to an expense of $50,000, might construct another dam and turn the water into his ditch, and he would have the first right, and therefore the first man's labor would be lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I have repeatedly seen men who had practically lost their fortunes by constructing their ditches and dams without filing the notice before they started the work, because the subsequent man beat them to the use of the water either by running it over the wheel to generate electricity or running a flour mill; but if the previous man had filed his application at the beginning his right would revert back to the time of the application.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's argument is all based on the assumption that this paragraph requires the perfection of a water right. There is nothing in the paragraph that requires the perfection of a water right.

Mr. RAKER. I just yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill provides that all provisions of the law, whatever they may be, shall have been complied with up to that time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's contention that complying with the requirements of the laws of the State in respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of the water is not compliance with respect to the application for the right to appropriate, divert, and use?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think there is any distinction between complying with the requirements of the law with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of the water and complying with an application for the right to appropriate, divert, and use the water? Has he not also complied with the requirements with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use? In other words, the latter includes the former. Does not the appropriating, diverting, and using of the water include the application to appropriate, divert, and use the water?

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there would not be one case out of a thousand where a man could show any appropriation or any diversion or any use of the water in any of the projects of this kind before he made his application. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH. I hardly think that is correct.

Mr. RAKER. Why not?

Mr. WALSH. I think if a person has filed his application for the right to appropriate water, and has complied with the laws respecting the filing of applications, it is not necessary that he should actually have appropriated the water in order for him to be said to have complied with the laws respecting the appropriation of water.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman just missed my question a little bit.

Mr. WALSH. I think probably I did.

Mr. RAKER. That so far as the appropriation of water or the diversion of water or the use of water is concerned there can have been none of the three when the applicant makes his application for a temporary permit, for a license, because to make any appropriation he must have had his dam and ditch built.

Mr. WALSH. He must appropriate it.

Mr. RAKER. To make any diversion of it he must have had his dam built, so that he can turn the water out of the channel.

Mr. WALSH. He must divert it.

Mr. RAKER. And to use it he must either use it on the land or run it through his wheel for the purpose of generating an electric current, and so forth. The point is to frame this in such a way that this matter shall not be tied up. If he complies with the law relating to the application, it is all that should be required, and that is all you ask him to do, and then after having obtained the permit or the license, then he goes on and completes it for that purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from California is not in order, because it strikes out an amendment presented by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] which has been adopted.

Mr. RAKER. That point comes a little too late. The amendment to which the gentleman refers only includes two or three words.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not wish to be heard. I think the rule is well settled that where the committee has adopted an amendment to a bill another amendment which strikes out the amendment already adopted is not in order. Now, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offered an amendment which inserted the words "bed and banks" in line 4 on page 35. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which strikes out that amendment along with other language, and inserts language which he proposes. I maintain that that is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman a question. Does not the gentleman think that the point of order comes too late after the gentleman from California has discussed his amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think so, if the gentleman from California makes the point of order that my point of order comes too late.

Mr. RAKER. I make the point of order that it comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will not prevail. I think the gentleman must have offered his amendment under a misapprehension of the meaning and effect of the language of the provision. The gentleman is assuming that the language which he attempts to amend requires a completed water right and a water-right certificate before the party shall be granted a license under this act or his application be considered. That is not true at all. The provision is that the applicant shall have complied with the laws of the State with respect to the appropriation, diversion, or use of water; that is, he shall have complied with all of the laws of the State applicable to the situation up to the time he makes his application. As was suggested a moment ago when the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey was under consideration, there are other requirements of State law that will apply after the license has been granted and construction begins, requirements that will continue on through the period of construction and through the period of operation. This provision has no reference to such requirements. It simply requires that the State laws shall be complied with so far as the applicant can comply with them in the nature of things up to the time he makes his application. Now, from the standpoint of the commission very great harm would come if the amendment the gentleman proposes should be adopted. There are two controlling reasons for the insertion of this paragraph. The first, from the standpoint of water-power legislation, is that the water-power commission shall have the benefit of all of the information which the States possess relative to the condition of water supply at the point of proposed diversion. That is a very important reason for a provision of this kind. Another reason——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, how much does the gentleman's time lack of being out? I make this inquiry for the purpose of proffering a request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I am going to ask for an extension of five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I am going to ask that the committee rise so that the Speaker can sign a bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let the gentleman have his five minutes, and then the other conference report will be over, and we can attend to both things at once.

Mr. MONDELL. The second reason is so that the bill shall carry with it notice to the commission that they must proceed in accordance with the State laws, which they must do in any event, whether the provision were in the bill or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I have promised to move the committee rise in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. If the conference report comes over, I will close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This query has been in my mind, which perhaps the gentleman can answer: Most of the States—and I presume the gentleman's State—require certain things to be done before a company can engage in business in the State. That is, there must be certain deposits, and certain formalities must be complied with, the appointing of agents, and so on. But I assume that in most of the States a company of that kind could bid or make a proposition to do that kind of work without complying with the conditions authorizing them to do business in the State. Now, if this is passed in its present form, before anyone can apply for a license, the corporation will have to comply with all the laws of the State authorizing them to do business in that State, will they not?

Mr. MONDELL. The paragraph refers to the laws of the State relative to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water. It has no reference whatever to the laws of the State relative to carrying on business. It refers only to the laws of the State relative to the diversion and appropriation of water—the diversion laws of the States where the law of appropriation of water prevails.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman's question would apply only to a foreign corporation anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. The provision is that the applicant shall comply with the State law. All that the gentleman from California wants him to do is to comply with the State law only so far as the making of an application is concerned. What benefit would it be to the commission that Jones, Smith, or Brown may have picked up a piece of paper and scribbled an application on it and put it in the mail, or perhaps filled out the proper application blank. That gets nowhere and accomplishes nothing. The law of the State is that he shall make his application with certain necessary data and that there shall be in response to that inquiry and investigation as to whether there is water available that can be used to turn a wheel without depriving some one else of a prior right and whether or no the conditions are such that under the State law such water can be used at that point for power purposes. After the license applicant has completed his water-right application he comes before the commission with his own data verified and full information obtained from the State and permission from the State to proceed, and applies for his license from the Federal Government. But the gentleman from California would cut all this procedure off immediately on the application to the State being made or notice posted on the bank of a stream in a hazel-brush patch, where nobody would see it. There would be nothing on which the commission could act, no procedure had which would inform the commission on questions of vital importance.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman realizes that his assertion about the hazel-brush patch is only sarcasm.

Mr. MONDELL. No; because there are States—one State in particular, which I will not name, an irrigation State, where all it is necessary to do to initiate a water right is to post a notice on the banks of a stream. I have seen such notices. There is no hazel bush there, it is true, but I have seen such notices in a clump of willow brush where no one would be likely to find it. The gentleman would have that procedure as a basis of this application.

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not believe in putting up notices of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from California seems to be fearful that under these provisions some who will attempt this sort of development will have difficulty about their water rights. They might have difficulty under the amendment that he proposes, but that could never occur under the language of the bill. The language of the bill requires the applicant shall proceed how far? Complete his title to the water? No; there is no suggestion of that, but merely that he shall do what is necessary for him to do under the State law to bring his proposition to a point where, under the State law, the commission being willing, he may begin work. That being done, information relative to the water available for use for power, whether or no others will be affected by its diversion, will be before the commission for its information.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from California all an applicant would have to do would be to file his perfunctory application.

Mr. RAKER. That is not true because he would have to comply with the State law, and there is no State law that allows a man to file a perfunctory notice.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has said that all that was necessary to initiate a right was to file a notice.

Mr. RAKER. According to the laws of the State.

Mr. MONDELL. According to the laws of some States it might be more or less perfunctory, and that would be of no value to the commission and no protection to those we are trying to protect.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. When a man files his application for a license under this project he can have done nothing else except to have posted and recorded his notice under the State laws to apply for a water right.

Mr. MONDELL. A man who has only got that far should have no consideration by the commission, because he would bring to the commission no information such as detailed surveys and plans and certification by the State that there is water at that point available for use for power and that the applicant had proceeded in accordance with State law to initiate a right to use it.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman will recollect that there are Government reclamation projects where they have filed a notice and where in certain instances they have expended millions of dollars and have not appropriated or diverted a drop of water as yet. They have though properly initiated a water right which will be fully protected as against all subsequent comers until there has been an actual and beneficial use in accordance with the appropriations and actual diversions. You can not divert water until your diversion works are sufficiently completed for that purpose, and can not use it until place of use is provided and ready to permit actual use thereof. To require actual diversions and use without diverting works and place to use it is quite unreasonable as well as absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 3, after the word "located," insert a comma and add the following: "And if the proposed project is to be located in any boundary stream or water that the applicant has secured the consent of Congress."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, this is very much the same question that we had up yesterday. I do not know whether the committee is willing to accept it or not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems to me that the matter ought to be taken care of separately. I think the gentleman will mix up the grammar and construction by inserting it at this point.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; it will read in this way if the amendment is agreed to:

Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located, and if the proposed project is to be located in any boundary stream or water, that the applicant has secured the consent of Congress with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes.

And so forth.

That is where it belongs. I do not care to take up too much time of the House. This is, in my opinion, a very vital matter, so vital that I think it ought to be passed upon by at least a quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman will remember that yesterday afternoon we agreed by unanimous consent that the section to which he is offering the amendment should be passed over without amendment, so that the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs might bring in such amendment as they desire regarding boundary waters. Would not what the gentleman now offers be part and parcel of that legislation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The only purpose I have in view is this: My understanding is that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is not here——

Mr. SIMS. I am just suggesting that after the assurance given yesterday afternoon that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs or any member of that committee should have opportunity to offer such amendment to this bill as they desire touching boundary waters that we ought not to take up this matter at this time. There was some evidence that it would not go further than the Niagara River. If we dispose of this amendment that is offered now it might embarrass the consideration of any amendment that might be offered later. I am willing that the gentleman from Mississippi should have consent now to return to this same section to offer his amendment after we know what will be the proposed amendment of the Foreign Affairs Committee. There is one gentleman on the Foreign Affairs Committee from New York [Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH], and I know he is very much interested in whatever the committee or the House may do regarding boundary waters. He is not here this afternoon.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am advised that Mr. Bulkley, who is the representative of the administration with respect to water-power matters generally, has been in consultation with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who was here yesterday, and that Mr. HARRISON has suggested that they will have a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee on this question. The fact of the matter is that there has been a bill with regard to the Niagara River before that committee for a long time.

Mr. GARNER. For nine years.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. For a long period of years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. A great part of the munitions of war used by the administration in waging the present war are made at Niagara. It is absolutely necessary that the power there be increased at the very earliest date possible. The water-power men there have ventured $500,000 upon the faith that this bill before the Committee on Foreign Affairs would be passed, and there has been no prospect apparently of its being passed speedily. The administration is exceedingly anxious that some measure of relief should be extended so that the power can be increased at the very earliest moment possible. It is with reference to that question that Mr. Bulkley has been in consultation with Mr HARRISON, as Mr. Bulkley informs me over the telephone, and that a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is to be had.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 1419, the water-power bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11692. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 324. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolution:

H. R. 11692. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 324. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENTRIES ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House joint resolution which I send to the desk, and which I think the House will conclude is very important and ought to be passed this afternoon.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 325.

Resolved, etc., That no relinquishment of any public-land entry made under and by authority of section 8 of the act of the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917," shall be valid or effective for any purpose unless executed after the entrymen shall have actually resided upon and cultivated the land in the case of a homestead entry for at least six months, and in the case of an entry made under other than the homestead laws after the entryman shall have complied with the provisions of the applicable law for at least one year.

Any person, firm, or corporation soliciting or dealing with the relinquishment of such claim or entry prior to the completion of compliance with the applicable law and with this resolution, and who or which solicits, demands, or receives or accepts any fee or compensation for locating, filing, or securing the claims or entries for persons entitled to the benefits of such section shall, upon conviction, be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned for not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember, I think, that on day before yesterday when the draft act was passed some question was raised about section 8, which was the public-lands amendment added to the draft bill. It was said at that time by some Members of the House that if the law passed in its present form that it would enable claim attorneys to induce soldiers away from their homes, away from their lands, and away from the State in which the land was situated to file claims for land and then immediately, by relinquishment for a nominal sum, put the land on the market and do great damage to the public lands of the West, and the western Members were afraid that would complicate their interests out there and would also complicate the Government property. They were also afraid it would not do the soldier any good. That was immediately communicated to the Interior Department, and that department came down and on yesterday spent a good deal of the day in conference with certain Senators in charge of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate and also with the Committee on Military Affairs. A moment ago we had a call from Senator CHAMBERLAIN, who said this was what had been agreed upon and was going to be passed in a few moments there, and that it should be passed here. I have in my hand a letter from Commissioner Clay Tallman urging that, together with a somewhat long memorandum from the Commissioner General of the General Land Office. These powers of the Interior Department, officials of the General Land Office and Senators who have given extended attention to it yesterday, including Senator FALL, say this ought to be done. I want to say this does two things. It first prevents the soldier who files on the land while in the service from selling his relinquishment until he returns to the land, settles upon it, and lives upon it for six months and shall have identified himself with the land, thereby assuring that he will have something to return to after the war is over and would not have squandered his land for $25 or $50 or any other small sum. Second, it makes it a penalty for any claim attorney or agent or person taking part in the sale or trafficking with these soldier relinquishments while the soldiers are in the war. It seems to me those two things certainly ought to be done. In conference a moment ago with the gentleman from Wyoming he thought it was barely possible we later would have to do more. The reason it is necessary to pass it this afternoon is the draft bill was signed to-day and becomes a law to-day, so this resolution will enable the Interior Department to protect the soldiers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman recall whether or not the law permits the soldier to file upon land without having been there or having seen it?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], whose judgment I greatly respect, thought the other day by a strained construction that it might be prevented by requiring an affidavit that the applicant had personally inspected the land. You will find it is very interesting language in the amendment which was offered and adopted to section 8 of the draft bill. This is the amendment:

That any person, under the age of 21, who has served or shall hereafter serve in the Army of the United States during the present emergency, shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws.

Then comes the proviso—

Provided, That any requirement as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service.

Now, the next proviso is—Provided further, That applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States, or any foreign country, authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

Now, it is undoubtedly intended to make possible for a soldier in France to file upon a piece of land. I have no objection to it, and this modification does not knock him out of that. It protects him in it—it saves the land for him. It certainly is not good for the soldier or the others to let him file on a tract of land, then let some claim attorney induce the fellow to relinquish and sell, and the poor soldier will have exhausted his homestead rights and have nothing to return to after the war is over. Handled in this way it is a detriment to the soldier.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is another class of people I wondered if the gentleman's amendment would take care of; in fact I do not think it will. I want to ask if the gentleman does not think it ought to do so. There is one class of claim attorneys of which the gentleman speaks who would solicit relinquishments and pay something for them, but there is another class of locators. Now, I can conceive how, under this phraseology that is now in the law, there is going to be great opportunity for locators. A man will ascertain where there is a lot of Government land. He will find a soldier in France. Now, he will say, "there is going to be an opportunity for soldiers when this war is over to get land. You can get it now. If you wait until the war is over you will not find any because there is not one piece for one out of ten of you. I am right here and for $100 or $50 I will get you the piece of land." I would like to have that stopped.

Mr. FERRIS. I believe we will do a better job by separate resolution. There is not so much hurry about that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this could be corrected in this resolution by inserting after the last word "relinquishments" or "location," or such other amendments as might be deemed necessary, if any. This resolution in connection with the act approved February 23, 1917 (39 Stats., 936) will give full protection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a matter to discuss and put through in a hurry.

What harm will be done if this goes over until Monday? Nobody can file to-morrow.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH. On Sunday?

Mr. RAKER. No; they could not file to-morrow. I had forgotten that to-morrow will be Sunday.

Mr. WALSH. Can they file on a legal holiday?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. WALSH. If there is to be any change made in it, why can not the matter be deferred until Monday?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will hear me a moment, I wish to say that I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, because there will not be a quorum here anyway, and, second, rights may intervene between the passage of the draft law, which was signed only this afternoon, and Monday. There might be some rights spring up.

Mr. SINNOTT. They might file by mail.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; if that law was only signed this morning, there would be no filings made to-day.

Mr. FERRIS. It might be. Under section 8 of the draft bill, they could file at Fort Myer, or at Camp Dix, or in France.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And that is not authorized under State laws?

Mr. FERRIS. It goes further than that. Section 8 of the draft bill says that applications for entry may be verified before any officer of the United States or in foreign countries authorized to administer oaths by any State or Territory in which the land may be situated. We have already passed acts authorizing the commanding officer to take oaths. I think we have made it a sufficient penalty to prevent anybody from trafficking in this.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman desires to have the resolution passed in the form in which he has presented it, I shall not object. If there is going to be an attempt to amend it, I certainly think we ought to wait until we can give more consideration to it.

Mr. FERRIS. Under the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, will the gentleman allow us to use a little more time on what will come after the war?

Mr. RAKER. The very thing that ought to be stopped now is the one that has been suggested, because now all the fraud will be committed in the application. There are no relinquishments to be made. Therefore, at the very beginning, and I want especially to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to it, this provision ought to have this penal provision relating to those who are after the soldier to make the application.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not quite possible now that soldier boys, from the State of Massachusetts, for instance, will be located by men with a knowledge of the West, and located carelessly, perhaps on mountain tops or in lakes?

Mr. RAKER. This provision does not have anything to do——

Mr. FERRIS. This has a locating feature or provision in it that I think will satisfy the gentleman. It is as follows:

Any person, firm, or corporation soliciting or dealing with the relinquishment of such claim or entry prior to the completion of compliance with the applicable law and with this resolution, and who or which solicits, demands, or receives or accepts any fee or compensation for locating, filing, or securing the claims or entries for persons entitled to the benefits of such section shall, upon conviction, be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned for not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is satisfactory and proper.

Mr. RAKER. That covers the whole thing, supplemented by the act just referred to of February 23, 1917.

Mr. FERRIS. It was drafted by the Interior Department, I will say.

Mr. FRENCH. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. Would the resolution meet this situation: Here, we will say, is Mr. A, who either in the past has acquired a little tract of land, or maybe has just made an entry. He might be able, if there is land available for location around him, to induce three or four or half a dozen soldiers, for that matter, to make their applications, and he could use that land for one year or two years or three years, until the war is over, and he would not come within any of the inhibitions, as I understand, that are in the resolution.

Mr. FERRIS. He is subject to a fine of $1,000 and subject to be convicted of a felony if he solicits or has anything to do with the soldiers making an entry or anything else. This is all that is necessary. This will save the land for the boys. This will afford them something to come back to.

Mr. FRENCH. Do you think that that will be taken care of if he does not receive any fee for it but merely uses the land?

Mr. FERRIS. I think a good Samaritan should, if he desired to, go among the soldiers.

Mr. FRENCH. He is a good Samaritan to himself. He wants the land for himself, but uses the soldier as a means to that end.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think that that is such an infinitesimal thing that it is not worth while bothering with it?

Mr. FRENCH. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand it, this does not change the present law in regard to the man having to swear that he has been on the land, and on each forty of it, and it would be almost impossible for this man that the gentleman from Idaho speaks of to get soldiers that would be able to swear that they had been on the land around this man's place. And I hardly think, therefore, that that trouble would arise.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think there would be any abuses such as the gentleman from Idaho refers to.

Mr. MONDELL. The present law in regard to soldiers of 21 years is that they shall not have the credit for constructive residence unless the filing was made before they entered the service.

Mr. FERRIS. That is right.

Mr. MONDELL. We discussed that matter in connection with the new draft bill somewhat, and I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] was of the opinion that that provision of the law was not changed with regard to these 18 and 19 year old men.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is so.

Mr. MONDELL. At least that it ought not to be.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is right.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing in this resolution that changes the situation with regard to that. So that if the gentleman's interpretation of the law as it now stands is correct—and I agree in his interpretation—these men below 18 and 19 years of age have no right to credit for constructive residence unless their filings were made before they entered the military or naval service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And for that reason this law will really amount to nothing at all.

Mr. MONDELL. For that reason there is not as much necessity for this resolution as there would be otherwise.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But no 18-year-old boy now can initiate that kind of a claim, and if he can not initiate it by reason of not having complied with the requirements that a 21-year-old boy could comply with, it will not amount to anything.

Mr. MONDELL. He goes out when he is enrolled in the draft.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Unquestionably this law will have effect. The gentleman from Colorado does not mean that this will not amount to anything. The boy, as soon as he enters the service, can file on 160 acres as a homestead or he can file on 320 acres of an enlarged homestead, and he can file on a stock-raising homestead of 640 acres, and he can file on a desert entry, and he can file on a mining claim. Therefore his rights will be protected while he is in the service. That is as it should be and is the purpose of the amendment placed in the draft bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma to say that this resolution has had the careful consideration of the Land Office officials?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. They drafted it. They sent it up to me; also, I just talked to the Senators about it.

Mr. WALSH. That was not the fact in the case of the amendment to the draft law?

Mr. FERRIS. No. That went on as a wild amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. The officials had that law before them, had they?

Mr. FERRIS. They did. They had a long conversation with Secretary Lane and Mr. Clay Tallman, the Commissioner of the Land Office, and both the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Public Lands have agreed to this.

Mr. WALSH. The Land Office officials are satisfied with it?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. They favor it. They think it is necessary. The boys will thank us. The West will thank us. It will be best all around. The amendment went in hastily. It was not properly safeguarded. This will make it stronger.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Has the President been consulted and expressed approval of it? [Laughter.]

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to give that resolution an appropriate title.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be framed to conform with the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD section 8 of the draft bill, and immediately after that a letter from the commissioner, Mr. Clay Tallman, and after that a letter prepared as a memorandum for the Secretary, and the resolution itself had better be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the resolution itself be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, along with these other documents. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the documents referred to:

SECTION 8 OF THE NEW DRAFT LAW.

That any person, under the age of 21, who has served or shall hereafter serve in the Army of the United States during the present emergency, shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or specific, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws: Provided, That any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service: Provided further, That applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States, or any foreign country, authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, August 30, 1918.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: Referring to your inquiry over the phone this afternoon relative to section 8 of the new draft bill as reported by the conference committee and appearing on pages 9670 and 9671 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the 29th instant, I beg to advise that the Secretary sent Mr. Finney and myself to confer with Senator CHAMBERLAIN and others this morning, and finally Senator CHAMBERLAIN, Senator WALSH, and Senator FALL all considered the matter, as a result of which I understood that it was agreed that a joint resolution would be introduced simultaneously with the conference report in the Senate designed better to control the operation of this section 8. I inclose a copy of the proposed resolution as it was drafted this morning, and with which Mr. Finney and I agreed. I inclose also a copy of a memorandum I submitted to the Secretary on the same subject. I judge from the views expressed by the Senators that they were desirous of retaining the special privileges granted men under 21 years of age, wherefore it seems the thing to do is to guard against abuses, which we have endeavored to do in the proposed resolution. The idea of a resolution instead of a regular amendment was to avoid any delay in the enactment of the draft bill.

Your, very truly,

CLAY TALLMAN.

AUGUST 28, 1918.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY.

Yesterday you called my attention to the amendment proposed by Senator FALL to the new draft bill now pending, appearing on page 9517 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for August 26. The amendment as there stated is as follows:

"And such person shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws: Provided, That any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service."

In the RECORD for yesterday (Aug. 27), at page 9571, the amendment was again submitted, in the following language:

"Any such person shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws: Provided, That any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service: And provided further, That application for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated."

It appears that Senator CHAMBERLAIN accepted the amendment, and as he is chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I apprehend no vote on the amendment was necessary, there being no opposition to it.

It will be noted that the second quotation above adds to the first a provision that applications for entry "* * *" may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated."

This corrects an evident misapprehension in the mind of Senator FALL, as indicated near the bottom of the first column on page 9518 of the RECORD for August 26, wherein he states that the requirement that land applications be sworn to within the land district is a matter of regulation and not of law. This requirement is contained in section 2294, Revised Statutes, as amended.

It will be noted that the amendment as probably passed commences with the expression, "Any such person." Not having the bill before us, it is impossible to state just how "any such person" is defined in previous sections of the bill, but presumably it refers to men under the age of 21 years. The first effect of the bill, therefore, is to extend the homestead right to soldiers under 21 years of age. Section 2300 of the Revised Statutes already provides that a soldier in time of war who has served 14 days shall not be denied any rights under the homestead laws by reason of his age.

In this connection it should be noted that several acts have been passed for the relief of soldiers, excusing them from compliance with various public-land laws during the period of their service in the Army. All of these acts are restricted in their operation, however, to those who initiated claims to public lands prior to their enlistment. As it stands now, a homestead or desert-land entryman who made his entry before enlisting is excused from performing any acts whatever until after the war is over and he is discharged. The department in all its reports on bills has consistently urged that the line be drawn at this point. Another act was passed allowing those soldier entrymen who had initiated their claims prior to enlisting to swear to any papers necessary to be used in support of their claims before their commanding officer. There was already a law authorizing the making of oath before a commanding officer for the man whose family was residing on the land. This, of course, was insufficient to meet the situation, and the department recommended the bill allowing the making of oaths before commanding officers by all soldier entrymen. So far as this point is concerned, it would seem preferable to have so provided in the amendment under discussion rather than to compel a soldier to seek some other officer authorized to administer oaths in foreign countries by the laws of the State where the land is situated.

Two broad questions appear here for consideration: First, extending the age limit down to 18; and, second, excusing entrymen who make entry after enlistment from compliance with the law until after their return from the Army. It should be borne in mind that Senator FALL'S amendment simply states that the entry be suspended. Under the existing laws for the relief of soldiers, their service in the Army is substituted for two years' residence and cultivation under the homestead law, whereas under this proposed amendment the entry is to be held intact until the entryman returns from war, whereupon he would be required to make full compliance with the law for the full time. I do not doubt, in this connection, but what the contention will be made that the acts which substitute service in the Army for cultivation and residence for those soldiers who made entry prior to enlistment should be applied to those soldiers who, under this amendment, are enabled to make entry after enlistment and have their entries "suspended."

On one side of the question it may be argued that it is only just to the soldier that he should have a right to fasten on a piece of land and have it held for him until he can get back from the war to reside on and cultivate it; on the other side, it will be a fact that this legislation will result in entries by agent, and every soldier who has not used his homestead right can make an entry and relinquish it when he sees fit, and thereby a good, active agent could readily control large areas of public lands for speculation, to the small profit of the soldier and the large profit of the agent.

Another feature of this amendment worthy of consideration is that technically this privilege is apparently conferred only on those between 18 and 21 and denied to those over 21 years of age, which would be manifestly unfair.

Resolved, etc., That no relinquishment of any public-land entry made under and by authority of section 8 of the act of the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917," shall be valid or effective for any purpose unless executed after the entryman shall have actually resided upon and cultivated the land, in the case of a homestead entry for at least six months, and in the case of an entry made under other than the homestead laws after the entryman shall have complied with the provisions of the applicable law for at least one year.

Any person, firm, or corporation soliciting or dealing with the relinquishment of such claim or entry prior to the completion of compliance with the applicable law and with this resolution, and who or which solicits, demands, or receives or accepts any fee or compensation for locating, filing, or securing the claims or entries for persons entitled to the benefits of such section shall, upon conviction, be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned for not exceeding two years, or both.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 12731. An act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, September 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill requested by Gen. Pershing to prevent waste and to encourage saving by the organizations of the Army (H. Doc. No. 1266) was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 12851) to further supplement an act entitled "An act to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, and establishing the Bureau of Naturalization; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 12852) to increase the rates of pay of certain grades of officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12853) to incorporate the American War Mothers of the United States of America; to the Commmittee on the District of Columbia.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 12854) granting an increase of pension to Mattie Hank; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOWELL: A bill (H. R. 12855) granting an increase of pension to William N. Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 12856) granting a pension to Louis Larson, alias Lewis Lewis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 12857) granting a pension to Robert E. Tabor; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12858) for the relief of Wilson Warford; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, letter by Harris Weinstock, State market director, San Francisco, Cal., in re suspension of immigration laws during the war period; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, letter by Douglas Young, San Diego, Cal., in re the dairy industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, letter by J. Thurston, San Quentin, in re parole law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 2, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bow before Thy sovereignty and call upon Thy name seeking Thy blessing and guidance this day. This day has been set apart in the interest of that great toiling mass who have added so much happiness and prosperity to our country. We pray that Thy blessing may rest upon the toilers of our land. We thank Thee for the nobility of this class of our citizenship, for their loyalty to the Nation, and their devotion to the flag. They have been called upon to perform a great task in the present world conflict. Give to each one a clear vision of the glory of their toil as a part of the Nation's struggle to preserve our liberties. Bless them with happy homes and the widest opportunities for advancement in life. Grant, we pray, that Thou wilt, through the ministry of this day, bring together in closer fellowship and sympathy all the classes of our citizenship, that we may realize the oneness of our national life and of the high aims that we have before us to-day. As we remember to-day, according to the program of this day, one who has passed away from the membership of this Senate we pray that Thy Spirit may lead us to remember the uncertainties of life, and lead us to cherish the memories of men who have so truly served their day and generation, and hold sacred their names in the list of the honored of our land, that they may not be forgotten but abide as an inspiration to those who follow them. Hear us in our prayer. For Christ's sake. Amen.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the ceremonies that we intend to hold to-day were to be held last Wednesday, but at that time it was unanimously understood that they would be postponed until to-day, and that on to-day no other business would be transacted. I do not know whether the understanding has been placed in the regular form of a unanimous-consent agreement, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, that the morning business be dispensed with, and the unfinished business temporarily laid aside for the day, and that upon the completion of the ceremonies the Senate shall adjourn until Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, that morning business be dispensed with, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the proceedings of the day consist of memorial addresses on the life and character of the late FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, a Senator from the State of Nevada, and that at the conclusion thereof the Senate shall adjourn. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment that I may file a written notice which requires one day's notice before being called up, and which will probably enable us to finish the unfinished business to-morrow? Otherwise I would not prefer the request at this time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I hereby give notice in writing that during the consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, known as the bill to stimulate agriculture, and so forth, I shall move to suspend the standing rules of the Senate so as to permit the offering to said bill of the following amendment:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. —. That the sum of $50,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used for the temporary relief of farmers in the drought-stricken section of the country engaged in the production of staple agricultural products, including live stock suitable for human food.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance out of said sum to banks situated in the drought-stricken section of the country, and which have loaned to farmers engaged in the production of staple agricultural products money at a rate of interest not in excess of the prevailing legal rate and taken as security therefor United States bonds, commonly known as liberty bonds, or other securities which may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, an amount not exceeding the amount of such bonds or securities at a rate of interest to be fixed by said Secretary, taking the obligation of the bank for the payment of such advances in addition to the securities held by such bank.

"All such advances shall be made payable on or before November 1, 1919, and when collected shall be covered into the Treasury and become a part of the general fund.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary and proper rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section and shall report to Congress at its regular annual session in December, 1919, as to his action in pursuance hereof."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]? The Chair hears none.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR NEWLANDS.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, FRANCIS GRIFFITH NEWLANDS, late Senator from the State of Nevada, passed away on the 24th day of December at his home here in Washington. In his intellectual prime and splendid physical vigor, his death came as a severe shock to his colleagues. There was no warning to prepare us for the great loss. During the entire session, yes, even to the day of his departure, his brilliant mind and active body were busily engaged with legislation vital to the welfare of our country.

As chairman of the great Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, during a period when transportation was the lifeblood of nations in a world's war for existence, every resource of his masterful mind and every nerve of his body were self-sacrificingly dedicated to his patriotic task.

Mr. President, FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS was wont to carry his heavy burdens in so happy a manner and to accomplish his great undertakings with such modesty that even his family and most intimate friends did not realize that he had given all he had to give in this life to the cause of his country. He went over the top and gave his life with the same unflinching bravery and glorious patriotism that has lifted our boys in France above earthly praise. He has gone and the Nation has lost a great and good man. He enjoyed the profound respect and the deep affection of every Member of this body and we grieve with his family and our heartfelt sympathy goes out to them.

Mr. President, the life of Senator NEWLANDS was such as is rarely allotted to man. He was born in Natchez, Miss., August 28, 1848. His parents were of good old Anglo-Saxon stock, possessed of the means to give their son every advantage of learning and culture. He received his education from private tutors and at Yale College and the Columbian Law College. When 22 years of age he was admitted to the practice of law in the District of Columbia. This, however, was not to be the arena for his enterprise. Even then he had visions of a broader field of endeavor. With that independence and fearlessness that marked his whole life he enthusiastically pursued his destiny.

Immediately after his admission to the bar he removed to San Francisco, Cal., then the pioneer cosmopolis of our country, and cast his career in its wild, brilliant, complex atmosphere. Those were the days of gold. Its irresistible magnetism had drawn from the four corners of the earth typical specimens of all God's creation. The Mexican relic of the hacienda California, the rough miner, the brazen gambler, the cunning confidence man, the patient padre, and the new millionaire, lived, dined, and brushed shoulders with distinguished jurists, eminent scientists, and superior men of every occupation, all drawn to the golden mecca by the same alluring power, a power that must be felt to be understood. Not the sordid greed for gold that puts its mark upon the miser, but the exhilarating joy of discovering it in nature's hiding places and giving it bounteously to the world—the power of romance, hope, and unrestricted opportunity.

The legal history of the West is illuminated by the names of the great lawyers who came from every section of the United States, moved by the same vision that appeared to FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS. Neither the influence of family, wealth, nor prior prestige had power of conquest in that new world. Every man was weighed and measured for his intrinsic worth. It was a frank, independent, fearless, vigorous, charitable, generous, fighting community. There was no such thing as equality of accomplishment nor of existence. A man either went over the top or was shot at dawn.

Into this maelstrom of action and events went the young NEWLANDS, without introduction, wealth, or influence. In four years he had fought his way to the forefront of the San Francisco bar. As general counsel for the mining interests of Senator Sharon in the great Comstock mines he became a frequent visitor to the State of Nevada. He became acquainted with her vast acres of rich soil impatiently waiting for the tardy hand of government to permit the waters of the mountains to flow over their bosoms and fertilize them into wonderful productivity. He saw the great silver producers of the State, that had sustained the Nation's credit in its hour of panic, calling for a champion to tear away the heavy hand of those who would destroy them. It was a great arena for a great fighter, and FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS longed for the fray. In 1888 he moved to Nevada, established his home, took an active part in the development of the State, and became one of its largest landowners.

Nevada at that time was suffering from the effects of the demonetization of silver and the negligent attitude of the National Government toward its public lands, which embraced 95 per cent of the area of the State. The people of Nevada were thoroughly aroused by these intolerable conditions. Naturally, Mr. NEWLANDS was animated by the local sentiment, but his sincere belief in the economic soundness of bimetallism can not be doubted by anyone who has read or listened to his persuasive addresses upon this subject. He was deeply sympathetic with the silver miner and was conscious of the violent legislative injustice done a great western industry, yet he did not base his principal arguments upon these grounds, but, in the characteristic manner in which he approached all great problems, he considered and presented the subject from the broad standpoint of the national welfare. He soon became one of the strongest advocates of the principle and was recognized throughout the country as a leader in the movement.

In January, 1892, in the city of Washington, he actively participated with other great leaders in the organization of the American Bimetallic Party. This organization was rather of the character of a committee, but it was the forerunner and the inspiration for the organization of the National Silver Party, which held its convention at St. Louis, Mo., on the 26th day of July, 1896, and which nominated William J. Bryan, the then Democratic candidate, as its candidate for President of the United States. Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS was chairman pro tempore of this remarkable convention, and as such officer was delegated the honor of laying down the principles of bimetallism.

In the same year he also participated in the organization of the Silver Party in Nevada and became its first nominee for Representative in Congress. A newcomer to the State and a stranger to most of its citizens, he entered the campaign with the same fearlessness that marked his rise in San Francisco, and through the force of his own ability and personality was elected by the largest plurality ever given any candidate for the high office.

In 1894 he was elected upon the concurrent nominations of the Silver Party and the Silver Republican Party. In 1896, 1898, and 1900 he was successively returned to Congress upon the nomination of the Democratic Party and upon the indorsement of the Silver Party. This term ended his brilliant career in the House of Representatives. As a Member of that body he served upon several great committees and took an active part in the debate upon the floor.

Immediately upon his induction into office as a Member of the House he vigorously attacked the problem of national conservation of the waters of the West and the reclamation of its vast valleys of arid but fertile Government lands. The policy was then considered by almost the entire membership of Congress as an Utopian dream of most radical and impracticable State socialism, unworthy, even, of the gentle ridicule of profound and distinguished statesmen. Conservation had not then become the stepping-stone for statesmen and the football for fools. Its dawn was not visible except to the few farsighted statesman. Day by day and month by month his unanswerable logic and persuasive pleas fell upon unlistening ears. Session after session he saw his legislative provisions silently and contemptuously brushed aside. Yet for 10 years in the House of Representatives he persisted in his untiring efforts, and with that fortitude, patience, and faith that is so rare in legislators and that so peculiarly characterized our deceased colleague, slowly but surely he won the country to his views, and after 10 years of unceasing labor, Congress passed the Newlands national reclamation act.

This law has transformed hundreds of thousands of acres of desert land into blooming, productive fields; has made happy homes for thousands of citizens, and enriched his State and the Nation. Senator NEWLANDS has many splendid acts of statesmanship to his credit, yet this alone will cause his name to live in the hearts of the West and upon the pages of his country's history.

In 1902 he was nominated by the Democratic Party for United States Senator and indorsed by the Silver Party. That was the last year of the existence of the Silver Party. It had played its part, its work was done. At the ensuing election he was selected as a Member of this body by an overwhelming vote. Again in 1908 and in 1914, as the candidate of the Democratic Party, he was returned to the Senate. Immediately upon taking up his duties in the Senate he continued his constructive work for the conservation, control, and utilization of the flood waters of our rivers. His comprehensive and magnificent plan contemplated the impounding of such flood waters at or near the source, and their control and utilization for irrigation and in aid of navigation upon our inland waterways. He deplored the neglect of our inland waterways and their abandonment as arteries of trade. He clearly saw the era rapidly approaching when these great public highways would be essential to the speedy and economical transportation of the tremendous and rapidly growing traffic of our country. How clear was his vision is conclusively proven by the present conditions. Just before he gave up his life work, and after 16 years of able and persistent endeavor, his heart was made glad and his patient labors were rewarded by the initiation of the first step in his great program.

Mr. President, I will not further attempt to review other important acts of legislation in which he played a leading part. These are all matters of record, and further, Mr. President, are more familiar to some of his other colleagues who participated directly with him in such momentous undertakings.

Mr. President, Senator NEWLANDS was peculiarly a national statesman. His mind dwelt upon large national and international problems. His wonderful vision and progressive ideals frequently led him away from the present into the impending realm of future activity. Vigilant and vigorous though he was in the protection of the local interests of his State, he never emphasized this branch of his service or attempted to use it for political profit. He took no pleasure in the power of political patronage and cringed from the practice of minor political arts. He was firm in his adherence to certain principles of government, but was individualistic rather than partisan in politics. He was a happy, sociable, congenial man, who loved his fellow man, and yet he made no effort to utilize these charming gifts to win the support of the voters of his State. He seemed to feel that such a method of campaigning was a reflection upon the intelligence of the citizens of his State and a depreciation of the great office which he represented. He was a politician only in the highest sense of the term. And yet, Mr. President, no man ever had a stronger hold upon the confidence and loyalty of the people of his State than did FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS. They knew the man. They had confidence in his ability, sincerity, and loyalty. They recognized his statesmanship and were proud to have him as the representative of the State of Nevada.

The private and domestic life of Senator NEWLANDS was equally idealistic. In 1874 Clara Adelaide Sharon, daughter of Senator Sharon, of Nevada, became his wife. To this short but happy union three daughters were born to give pride and happiness to their father throughout his entire life. In 1882 Clara Sharon Newlands passed away. The period of his widowerhood was probably the only sad years of his long life. In 1888 he was united in marriage to Miss Edith McAllister, the daughter of the dean of the San Francisco bar. No union could have been more complete or happy. A woman of remarkable ability, splendid education, and unusual accomplishments, she became his daily companion in all of his thoughts and works. Through her charming hospitality and entertaining personality she attracted to their home in Nevada and their home in Washington the most delightful men and women in public and private life. His happy disposition reflected the love and admiration of his family and friends.

He was a devoted husband and father, a true friend, a fearless man, and he died while performing his public duties after 25 years of continuous service on behalf of his State and his country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Senator NEWLANDS became a Member of the House on March 4, 1893, the same day on which I took my seat in the Senate, and from that day until his death—for 25 years—we were friends, meeting constantly not only in the Senate but elsewhere. I felt for Senator NEWLANDS always a very real affection, and his death meant to me the loss of a most valued friend.

It is not for me to sketch the history of his life. That will be better done by others. I desire only to speak briefly of the man as I knew him. He was very active always in the work of the House and the Senate. He was a man who was both liberal and tolerant, and he was one who thought for himself and had many ideas of his own which he desired to put into the form of law. People were apt, I think, to regard him in some degree as a dreamer, but many of his dreams have finally found either complete or partial expression in laws which have been passed. He was very pertinacious about any idea or any scheme which he had once adopted, and neither opposition nor indifference could turn him from his path. But however impracticable some of his theories may have been thought at the time or subsequently, everyone had to admit that they were designed to promote the welfare of the country and the well-being of his fellow citizens. His designs were large, but their purpose was always a good one. He did not confine himself to the subjects which greatly occupied his mind, like the coordination of Government activities and the development of our internal navigation. He spread himself over a much larger field, for he was a lover of art and architecture, and he had a realizing sense of the permanency involved in buildings and monuments. He addressed himself in obedience to these desires and tastes to the improvement of the city of Washington. We are painfully familiar with Members of Congress in both branches who find it desirable to assail Washington and its people, which can be done with political safety and possibly with political profit. From such persons as these Senator NEWLANDS widely differed. He worked for the improvement of Washington not because there was any political profit in it, for there was none, but because he desired to see our Capital City worthy of the Nation which established it. It was most disinterested and most unselfish work, and his name stands with the very few in House and Senate who have labored in season and out for the interests of Washington with no thought except what was best for the Capital of the country.

After all, however, that which is uppermost in my mind is the thought of the man and the friend who has gone. He always seemed to me to be one of the very best tempered men I have ever known. No difference and no opposition ever seemed to change his pleasant ways toward those who did not agree with him. His ability no one questioned, and everyone recognized that he was one of the most agreeable companions and one of the pleasantest of friends. It was always a happiness to meet him everywhere, and he had in large measure that most impalpable and most attractive of all qualities—personal charm. In the lives of all who have known him and who have had a warm affection for him he leaves a gap which is one of those that can not be filled.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has written me a letter, which I ask permission to read. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON COAST AND INSULAR SURVEY,
August 31, 1918.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: It causes me deep regret that I am unable to be present at the memorial exercises of Senator NEWLANDS to be held in the Senate on Monday. The postponement of these exercises has made it impossible for me to make a short address on the occasion; therefore I am writing you.

I do not believe the Senate ever had among its Members a more earnest, industrious, straightforward, honorable, untiring Senator than FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada. Those of us who were honored with his personal friendship feel deeply the great loss we have suffered. He was a man of far vision, looking toward the great ends of government and public action, troubled little by the smaller details or temporary hindrances which sometimes seem so important to men of more limited horizon.

Several times during my service with him in the Senate he has proposed measures far in advance of the thought of the time and lived to see us come to take the view he has first advanced. His solicitude when considering public matters was always that right principles should be established and the matter immediately under consideration brought in harmony with the principle, rather than that some temporary aim should be served. I doubt if Senator NEWLANDS in advocating or opposing a measure ever considered whether a majority of his colleagues would support his views or oppose them. His effort was to have us all appreciate the reason for the course he advocated, and, having presented those reasons, I never observed in him the slightest sign of irritation toward anyone who failed to appreciate the views he presented.

I esteemed it a great privilege to be considered by Senator NEWLANDS as a personal friend. I saw him often, and only a few hours before his death enjoyed that perfect hospitality for which in this city he was famed.

Senator NEWLANDS will be long remembered by those who served with him in the Senate as a faithful, high-minded public servant, who conscientiously and with consideration only of the public interest brought forward and advocated public measures which came before us. The West lost in him one of her greatest sons, and the Nation mourns a Senator of high ideals and far-visioned aspirations, guided in his public efforts by his conception of the best interests of all our people in the widest sense. He was useful, eloquent, and industrious, and by his efforts helped to maintain the high standard of the Senate, which loved and respected him.

Yours, very truly, WILLARD SAULSBURY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it is fitting that we pay tribute to the memory of our late and beloved colleague, FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to know him quite intimately during the past 15 years, and as I look back over that acquaintance it is gratifying to me to know that nothing has ever transpired to interrupt a delightful friendship.

It is hard to realize that he is no longer with us. The fleeting years had dealt with him so kindly that he seemed at the time of his death almost in his prime, and there was every indication that he would yet be spared to round out a busy and useful life. Words are feeble things when one undertakes to give utterance to the thoughts in one's mind when the heart is distressed over the loss of a dear friend or loved one. So now I find myself unable to give expression to my feelings in reference to our dear dead friend.

He was in many respects a very remarkable man. Born, as he was, in the South, while yet a boy he took up his residence in the West and, it might be said, grew up with it. He loved the West as the West loved him, and there was constantly in his mind the thought of constructive legislation which would benefit the section which he so ably represented. I think it may be safely said that no one did more, and probably no one did as much as he in the matter of legislation that would result in reclamation of arid and semiarid lands. He had much to do with the original Carey Act, as he had with the later act providing for the reclamation of Government lands. These acts bear the impress of his brain and hand. Together they have added millions of wealth to the semiarid States, and furnished homes to the homeless from nearly every State in the Union.

For a number of years he had worked most diligently along the lines of conservation of our national resources, and his colleagues will remember how zealously he contended for the storage of waters at the head of navigable streams, with the object in view, first, of reducing flood devastation and, second, utilization of these stored waters for the purpose of reclamation. In my opinion he impressed the country not only with his sincerity in this behalf but of the entire feasibility of his plan, and after years of effort the first steps are being taken to carry out a part of his program. His persistency in the accomplishment of legislation which was near to his heart was the wonder and admiration of his friends, whether they agreed with him or not. In season and out of season he took occasion to impress his views upon the Senate, and always did it eloquently and ably. The record of his long and splendid public service has been dwelt upon by his colleagues, and I merely mention the two or three things with which his name must ever be connected and which have done so much for the happiness of mankind.

In his association with his colleagues he was always the same cordial, kind-hearted, chivalrous gentleman, and, although I have seen him laboring under great provocation, I have never in my life seen him lose his temper. I have sometimes wondered how he maintained such splendid equilibrium at all times and under all circumstances. In all the years of our acquaintance I never heard him speak unkindly of friend or foe, and that can not be said of many men in public life. There was always that in his heart which made him love to do a kindly act, or to say a pleasant thing of his fellow man. Those of us who have enjoyed the hospitality of his delightful home look back with pleasure upon our association with him there. A genial and lovable man in all his associations, he was at his best as a host. He possessed that peculiar charm of manner that made all who approached love and admire him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know until a few moments since that I was to be honored in having an opportunity to submit a few observations upon this occasion. While I appreciate the courtesy extended me to say a few words, I know I shall fail to give utterance to what is within my heart to say concerning the memory of one whom I loved so well. And what I shall say will be a very imperfect tribute to a great man who has gone from our midst and whose death has resulted in a loss which is irreparable. While these memorial exercises have been in progress I have been thinking of great public characters whom I have had the honor of knowing and who have passed to the Great Beyond; and I can truthfully state that, much as I esteemed and honored them, the death of none gave me such poignant grief and sorrow as that of the demise of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS. There was no one in public life for whom I entertained so deep an affection as I did for him.

His death, therefore, means to me much more than the passing away of a great public character; it means the loss of one whose friendship I prized, whose companionship I cherished, whose qualities of head and heart drew from me deep and lasting affection for him.

My acquaintance with Senator NEWLANDS began at the special session of Congress in 1897. I had known of him prior to that time because his fame had spread throughout the West. He had been conspicuous in the advocacy of great and important fiscal policies and in the discussion of questions relating to the development of the West and the resources of our country. When I came, as a young man, to the House of Representatives, I immediately sought an acquaintance with Mr. NEWLANDS, the then Representative from the State of Nevada. Because of his great ability, his high character, his qualities of leadership I sought an opportunity to know him and was glad to regard him as a mentor and as a guide. I had somewhat of the feeling toward him then that finds expression in the words of the intrepid Kent, who said to the kingly Lear:

> You have that in your countenance which I would fain call master—authority.

He exhibited so much of wisdom, of sagacity, of brilliant statesmanship, and possessed so clear a vision of the future of the needs of our Nation, and he spoke with such assurance and such authority, that I was glad to stand near him and to follow his leadership upon great and important questions. In the great battles which he waged in the House, and those in which he participated in this forum, I always thought of him as one—

> Whose armor conscience buckled on,
> Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
> As God's own soldier.

The Civil War and the period of reconstruction following, as well as a consideration of the important questions which called for national legislation, seemed to have clouded the vision of our country to the West and to its resources and possibilities. There were many in our country who regarded the arid and semiarid West as an encumbrance and liability to our Nation, and any attempt to present the interests of the West or to discuss policies relating to the conservation of the Nation's resources, or the development of the resources of the West, provoked bitter criticism. There were some who felt that most of the territory lying west of central Nebraska was valueless, and that those who resided in the western part of the United States were suffering from an incurable mania growing out of bimetalism. There were many in the National Legislature and in high positions in our land who could not see that all the States were linked together, and that whatever brought prosperity and development to one section of our Nation added to the general advancement of the entire country.

When I entered the House, Senator NEWLANDS was attempting to secure legislation for the reclamation of the arid lands of the Nation. He had given profounder thought to irrigation problems, to the questions connected with opening up and settling the public lands, the impounding of the waters found at the sources of our great rivers, the question of preserving the Nation's forests, and the general question of conservation, than any other man in public life. In dealing with these and related questions he was easily supreme. He studied these problems, not as mere local questions, but in their national aspect, and as they affected the future growth, development, and prosperity of the entire people of our land.

At that time I was honored with his friendship and confidence, and I am happy to say that the friendship then formed continued without interruption until he passed from our midst. I was frequently called into conferences which he held concerning the great reclamation bill and other legislative measures with which he was identified; and it was my privilege to be permitted to cast the deciding vote which first reported the Newlands reclamation bill from the committee to the House of Representatives. In the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth sessions of Congress, at which time I was intimately associated with Senator NEWLANDS, he not only gave earnest attention to the questions to which I have just referred, but he was deeply interested in all matters affecting our Nation's welfare.

I recall that in the Fifty-fifth Congress Senator NEWLANDS offered a resolution in the House for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. He believed, with Seward, that the Pacific Ocean would become the theater upon which our Nation would play a most conspicuous part. I remember his sagacious remarks concerning oriental trade questions and the sound statesmanlike views which he frequently enunciated concerning the future relations between the United States and China and Japan. He appreciated the fact that with the progress of civilization nations would be drawn closer together, and that there must be more toleration and sympathy between nations. He believed that our Nation should possess a strong Navy, and that the important part which our country would take in the Pacific Ocean required that we should have a strong naval base in the Hawaiian Islands. He loved peace and desired that the policies of our Nation should be so just as to command the respect and admiration of all other nations, but he comprehended that there were nations that were selfish and ambitious, and that to secure our rights and protect our national honor it was essential that our Navy should be brought to a high stage of perfection.

Perhaps no man in our country had so great a grasp of the intricate questions involved in transportation problems as did Senator NEWLANDS. In his able addresses he showed the intimate relation between transportation and material prosperity. He challenged attention to the discriminations under which certain sections of our country labored at the hands of the great transportation companies of the land. He sought to improve the condition of our railroads and mitigate the evils and burdens, unjust and unnecessary, to which the railroad companies were subjected; to unify in a proper way, without destroying competition, the railroad systems of our land; to effectuate reductions in freight rates, and to secure a beneficent and just control over public utilities that would prove of advantage to the people as well as to the investors in the stocks and bonds of transportation corporations. He had large plans in process of development which would have, in my opinion, resulted in the greatest good to the people of our land, not alone the general public but those who owned the railroads and the stocks and securities of the same. It was a great misfortune that this masterful man should have been called from our midst at the moment when the transportation question was one of the most important and far-reaching questions presented for determination by this Nation.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has referred to his activity in behalf of bimetalism and related financial questions. He was deeply grounded in financial questions and was one of the ablest exponents of the quantitative theory of money. His views upon this question were misunderstood by many, but it is sufficient to state at this time that he dealt with the money question in a broad, comprehensive, and scientific way.

After he left the House of Representatives I followed the career of this distinquished man with very great interest. He grew with the passing years until he became a national figure, a statesman of commanding ability. In the Senate, as in the House, he took a conspicuous part and was the proponent of measures of the greatest magnitude and of far-reaching importance to our country. My regard for Senator NEWLANDS was so great and my confidence in his ability and statesmanship so strong that early in the year of 1912, when Democrats were casting about for a candidate for the Presidency, I reached the conclusion, after mature deliberation, that Senator NEWLANDS measured up to the most exacting demand and was an available candidate for that high office. I accordingly wrote him and urged that he become a candidate for the Presidency. I felt that no man in the Democratic Party was better equipped for the position than he was. His great knowledge of our domestic problems, his long and faithful public service, his great intellectual and moral qualities marked him, in my opinion, as the most suitable candidate for his party to select. His reply was characteristic of the man. I felt then, as I have felt upon other occasions, that Senator NEWLANDS was too modest and too unpretentious. I might say, in passing, that he was always democratic, gentle, chivalrous, and splendid in his relations with his fellows.

When Germany's violations of international law and the rights of our Nation no longer could be tolerated and our Nation recognized a State of War as existing between it and the Imperial Government of Germany, he patriotically supported every measure necessary to prepare our country for the conflict. For some time prior to the declaration of war his keen vision had enabled him to see that war was inevitable. There were no lamentations from him because of the war. There was a stern determination upon his part that our country should mobilize her resources and prepare in a most thorough and effective way to strike relentlessly until Prussian autocracy was destroyed and a just and righteous peace secured.

Senators will recall his infrequent but earnest speeches following the entrance of our country into the conflict and the sound advice which he gave concerning the policies which should be pursued in order that our resources might be conserved and all of the power of our Nation concentrated for the winning of the war. I remember the warnings which he gave to capital and to some of the great corporations of our country that were profiteering out of the war. He conjured them, as well as all others, to patriotically serve our country, and warned those who were securing great profits from the war of the inevitable results which would follow, and particularly in the circles of labor. He was always a "watchman upon the tower." He saw the first glimpse of the morning and he was among the first to grasp the dangers that menaced our country from without as well as from within. The immediate questions involved in this great conflict did not close his eyes to the mighty questions with which this Nation and other nations will be compelled to grapple when this titanic contest is ended. I recall many conversations with him in which he expressed in a clear and comprehensive way some of the complex situations which we would be compelled to meet in the near future. I learned from him but a short time prior to his death that he was working out the problem of transportation, national and international, following the war. He was maturing plans to increase and secure our foreign trade, to procure the raw materials which our country would require in order that it might continue to be a great manufacturing Nation. He had dreams of this Republic becoming the great commercial and financial mart of the world, and if he had lived his pen would have drawn many of the important measures so necessary to enable our country to take and maintain her proper station among the nations of the world.

Senator NEWLANDS brought into public life a well-trained mind, enriched with a knowledge of the political, economical, and industrial questions affecting our country, and with that broad vision which is found in every great leader and which must exist in every statesman. It was said by a great prophet that "where there is no vision the people perish." The truth of this statement finds exemplification in all generations and in all lands. The multitude keep their eyes upon the ground, upon the trivial and petty things of life, and many who are raised to position and power act with selfishness and for personal or party ends instead of for the public weal. They have no vision, no prophetic gift, no power to "dip into the future," and their plans and policies and programs bring confusion and discord and ultimate hurt to the people. A state or nation is blessed when there comes to it a man of vision, a man of high ideals, and of spiritual power. Great men carry the world upon their shoulders. Each becomes a fabled Atlas, and on his bowed back humanity moves forward to higher ground and greater achievements.

The struggle is always on between the spiritual and progressive forces and dark and gross materialism. The mass of the world have always been content to follow the prophet of to-day rather than the one who spoke for the morrow. We find it easier to plan for to-day than to build for the morrow. It is a long way from self to unselfishness, from self-service to service for others; and so, in the field of national concerns, we find too many engaged in limited and narrow circles, without vision or capacity or desire to comprehend the future. It is so easy to be local and provincial; to see the narrow field where the landscape and the horizon meet. Only men whose eyes are anointed by the Infinite One and whose hearts respond to the thrilling force which He sets in motion can look with unblanched cheek into the future and read its riddles, and with prophetic power lead, as an evangel, the struggling masses of the world. Fortunate, as I stated, is the generation or the State that can have leaders of this character, men in public place to strike from the necks of the people the chains of narrow and sordid provincialism and point the way to national vigor and national progress and moral and spiritual evolution. There is no line of cleavage between the moral, ethical, and spiritual forces which underlie an indestructible Christianity and the forces and influences which lead to human progress and the growth of liberty in the governments of men. In other words, if justice and righteousness and high ethical concepts and spiritual forces and power find expression in the faith of Christ, these same influences, forces, and powers should be manifest in the conduct and activities of men and in their relations with each other, whether of a business or social character or whether relating to political and governmental questions.

So if vision is necessary in religion it is necessary in the perplexing questions affecting life and the confusing and bewildering problems relating to our economic, industrial, and political life. "Without vision the people will perish"; they will perish religiously, atrophy will overtake them spiritually; they will perish industrially and politically. In proportion as we have leaders of vision and follow them our progress will be assured. Thank God for leaders who have vision, statesmen who can see beyond some local lines and comprehend the problems of the Nation and the questions that are international. This age calls for men who not only think nationally but internationally.

And such a one was our beloved friend who has gone from our midst. He was a big man who dealt with big things in a big way. There was nothing petty or mean in his soul. In all of my relations with him I never heard him utter a trivial or commonplace remark. His active mind was constantly engaged in the contemplation of important measures relating to our country and to the world. It is given to some men to have only a fleeting vision of a great project or to have borne in upon their hearts some great idea. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS lived in the atmosphere of great ideas and great ideals, and he had visions of many great projects, policies, and truths which guided him in his noble and exalted aims. When he thought of his State it was to regard it as a sovereign nation with a great mission and with great responsibilities resting upon it. When he thought of the Nation which he loved so well it was to regard it as the great political and moral guide to the world, and he believed that the democratic forces of our country would lead this Nation to glorious heights and evolve moral and spiritual forces which would enlighten all nations. He exemplified in high degree the words of Lord Bacon wherein he says:

> It is a great error and a narrowness of the mind to think that nations have nothing to do one with another except there be either an union in sovereignty or a conjunction in pacts or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

Mr. President, FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS was an intensely patriotic man. He loved his country with a passion and devotion that few men possess. He was always planning for its development and progress and for its future. No mere temporary expedient satisfied him. Legislation to command his support must be comprehensive, general, and fundamentally sound. He was analytical and philosophical. He believed that there was law and unity pervading life and man's activities.

He was not a pessimist. He believed the world was growing better, and as the years were lost in the centuries the world would grow better and liberty and progress would crown all nations and all peoples. To him there was no death. There was life everywhere and humanity to him was one living stream the source of which was in God and the end of which could only be found in the Eternal and Omnipotent Power which guides all things. With such views he could not be other than intellectually honest, which can not be said of all men in public places. It was impossible for him to reason in a circle. He saw the objective and with steady eye and courageous heart he went with unerring step.

Senator NEWLANDS was a courageous man. There was not a drop of the coward's blood in his body. With a courtliness that few possess he met his adversaries. He was just and tolerant to his opponents, but he did not hesitate to denounce injustice and to unmask heresy and lies, no matter by whom they were cloaked or who were their protagonists. Whatever he believed he believed with all his heart. If an idea took possession of his soul and he believed that it was right, he became a crusader in its propagation. He was patient, persevering, relentless in the pursuit of any cause which he espoused.

Senator NEWLANDS, as I have stated, was a man of high ideals. Whatever appeared to him to be unjust or immoral or not in consonance with the spiritual teachings of a great Christian people met with his stern disapproval. He was not a Pharisee nor did he make frequent proclamation of his religious views, but he had a profound belief in God, a living faith in the immortality of the soul, and a sincere regard for the great spiritual forces which animate and control the world.

Mr. President, the life and the death of this great man bring convincing proof of the immortality of the soul. It is impossible to believe that the mind and soul and being that could conceive the great thoughts to which our deceased friend gave expression, and comprehend the vital and spiritual forces which found expression in his life, should perish. If there is persistence of force, there is persistence of life; and the great soul of our loved friend still lives, mingling with the just and actively engaged in service which contributes to the accomplishment of the purposes of the Everlasting Father.

He left us at a time when great problems pressed for solution. This hour calls for giants. We shall miss him in this hour and in the days pregnant with mighty events that are immediately before us. We feel that in his death we suffer an irreparable loss. God grant that to others may be given something of the genius and gifts and powers so richly possessed by him. His life was rich in good deeds and in great achievements, and he has left a patrimony to his State and to the Nation that enriches us all. We will go from this memorial service with higher purpose and resolve to serve our country and humanity, and endeavor from his life and his glorious service to obtain that inspiration which will lead us, falteringly indeed, in his footsteps to that high plane which he trod and into the field where he rendered such rich and profitable service.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, death has been very busy in this body; and the transitory character of human affairs has been brought home to us in unexpected ways.

When the great statesman, Edmund Burke, felt the poignancy of domestic grief, in the midst of his labors, with introspective glance, he said: "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!" If we thought only of the inevitable end we would become morbid, and constantly have in mind that thought of Burke, "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!" But it is in human nature to be hopeful and optimistic. Normal men do not ordinarily dwell upon mortality; and it is well that it is so, because, as it has been observed, no development is possible to the individual and no progress is possible to the race where the power of death to destroy life is not conquered in thought and feeling. Therefore we go on our accustomed way; the ranks which have been depleted are filled; and we pause, as to-day, to express our sorrow for the death of our beloved colleague, feeling our duty done.

He might have prolonged his years, as many another Senator, by avoiding the strenuous character of public life and retiring before his appointed time; but among brave and valorous men there is never a disposition to leave the scene of conflict. They prefer to die fighting. The Empress Theodora said, when she was admonished that her duties led inevitably to a premature end, that "the throne is a glorious sepulcher." The Senate is a glorious sepulcher. Men who die in the service of the State, men who yield all that is mortal while serving in the Senate of the United States, go out gloriously. They might have saved a few years of their lives by retiring, and eke out a feeble existence leading to the inevitable end; but no! Instinctively and consciously they remain in the public service, and go down fighting. And so, since death must come to all, it is well that our colleague should die in the midst of his labors and in the fullness of his fame.

It fell to my lot to be with him on the last day. He was my neighbor and friend. We were bound together by those endearing ties of our common western citizenship and by associations growing out of our residence in the city of San Francisco, as well as in the city of Washington. In our club on the very day of his death I found him in his usual good spirits and apparent health. We sat down at a small table together and had lunch and discussed questions of life and death, prompted by his indisposition, which then seemed trivial, and we discussed current and pending legislation. Foremost, I remember, in his mind was the solution of the railroad problem, and he was waiting to hear what determination should be arrived at by the President, before whom he had laid the facts. It is a regret to recall that he died before the solution of that question had been made. Public control was declared by the President on the very day of his obsequies. But the labor, the thought, and the anxious hours that he gave to a consideration of that and other public questions no doubt brought about his untimely end, because when I observed that he looked well and inquired about his general health he said that he had never felt better in his life than when he rose that morning. But his vitality had been undermined. When I suggested then he must be suffering from some passing ailment he said, "No; it is more than that; a near relative has just died of heart trouble, and I feel that my affection is of the heart." Then he showed by his expressed feelings that he was suffering a sense of suffocation. So that fatal clot of blood was working his destruction, although he bore all the appearance of health and vigor.

As I sailed by with colors flying,
You would not know that I was dying.

He consulted a doctor, who reassured him, doubtless, because he returned to the club, but after going home that night he died.

The Senate has been informed about the particulars of his career, how he was born in the South, educated in the East, and cast his destinies in California and in Nevada.

California and Nevada are closely allied. The great mountains that stand between us are the glory and pride of both States. The beautiful Lake Tahoe, seated in the mountain crest, is the common possession of Nevada and of California. Senator NEWLANDS was as much a Californian as he was a Nevadan. California may be said to have given Senator NEWLANDS to Nevada just as she had given in another generation Senator Baker to Oregon. We claim as ours the fame of these great men and hold them as dearly as do the Commonwealths that particularly honored them by elevating them to the Senate of the United States.

But what made Senator NEWLANDS in this body a unique figure? He was not a practical politician. But he was a man endowed with vision. He served an ideal. He could see and did see very much further than the average of his colleagues, and he wrought for the future, that future which could not reward him, as he wrought for this disfranchised city of Washington with all the zeal which too often only signalizes, in other fields, the pure selfishness of man.

He saw the great West with the poet's eye and he saw the possibility of reclaiming it. To draw no invidious comparison, Daniel Webster, practical statesman, saw the great West with its trackless prairies, its forbidding deserts, impassable mountain ranges and torrential streams, and he said we can never take in that territory as a part of the Union; it is too difficult to reclaim and too remote to govern; and he expressed the hope that an empire would some day be set up in the far West which would maintain amicable relations with the Federal Government. That great man, Daniel Webster, who hoped that his eyes would not look, in the final hour, upon broken and dismantled fragments of a glorius Union, could not in a constructive way see the policy and the possibility of bringing together plain and mountain and desert and erecting a State worthy of admission into that Union which he so much loved. But Senator NEWLANDS saw this, and the Newlands Act, of which we have heard, is perhaps the greatest monument to his fame.

Then he turned from the reclamation of the desert, by putting water upon it, to the control in other regions of the mountain streams where water, getting away from control, devastated great areas. Water, like fire, is an excellent servant, but a very bad master.

In doing these things, accomplishing such comprehensive results, he did not seek to impose any burdens upon the common country, which would indubitably benefit in the largest possible way by the reclamation of waste lands suitable for human habitation. Nations go to war at the cost of millions of lives and millions of treasure to acquire territory, but the Senator saw the territory we needed within our own confines, and to spend money upon it to redeem it was a higher and a better method of enlarging our arable domain for the benefit of the people, and became a constructive legislator.

But even then he provided a fund which was to be known as a revolving fund—that is, in the first instance, the Government would put the land by a large outlay under water, and the beneficiary, holding the land, would over a long period of years return the money to the fund, and the fund then would be available for further projects.

When he came before the Senate to ask within my time for $600,000,000 to check the ravages, particularly, of the Mississippi River, which came down from its mountain fastnesses like a bandit, ravaging fertile valleys below, the Senate looked upon him as a visionary, in an incredulous way, surprised at the magnitude of the amount, $600,000,000; but they had to listen to him week after week on the necessity of such a work to save the lands threatened by destruction, and furthermore on the pressing need of coordination in order to get the maximum of service out of the departments and the bureaus. Senator NEWLANDS's discussion of "coordination" became almost a byword, and yet, justifying him again, as he has been justified in all his public acts by time, he had been gone but a short space when in this crisis we found it necessary to give the President power, in order to prevent duplication and waste, for that coordination for which the Senator pleaded so eloquently on this floor. He did not have the rough ways, he did not have, perhaps, the persuasive power to immediately carry his project, cajoling his colleagues by one specious method or another, but he had the quality of perseverance and he kept talking upon his subject until he commanded a hearing.

While it is true he did not get the desired $600,000,000 for the purpose of restraining devasting streams, he got a substantial sum, as I recollect, as an appropriation for the purpose of determining exactly how these great evils should be righted, how the great damage should be averted, and how the people of the interior valleys of this country could live in security and reap the rewards of their labor. He felt for the men who worked; he kept apace sympathetically with the industrial evolution of the times as no other man, and his heart went out to those who were handicapped by fortune in the daily struggle on every side, but the result of whose combined labors, he believed, made the national wealth and the national greatness.

His heart and mind in full accord were moved by what he knew and saw and felt.

'Tis hard to sow in spring and not to reap
The autumn's yield;
'Tis hard to till and when tilled to weep
The fruitless field!

I have heard him in the presence of the President tell of the unrewarded labor of the pioneers of the West. He said—and he was capable of demonstrating it—that all the money spent by individuals, not counting their time wasted, in exploration and discovery of the precious metals was far in excess of the yield by the mines of the West; and if the Federal Government had out of its Treasury from the beginning pursued that policy of development on its own account, for that same reason its expenditures would have been far in excess of the return.

So he pleaded for consideration of the man who was willing to take his chance in the difficult places of the earth and discover the presence of the minerals, and then by his labor, although he himself may be lost, unknown to fame and unrewarded, make the Nation his debtor by revealing the treasures otherwise hidden from human ken.

But what appealed to me very strongly in observing the course of the Senator in this body was his love of the beautiful. It is not common in legislative bodies nor among the mass of the people to find any great devotion to art. Our art seems to be reserved for a select few, and we depend upon the leaders in the great moral, spiritual, and artistic movements to command a following and achieve results.

The city of Washington, planned by L'Enfant, is perfect in conception, and only where L'Enfant's designs have failed of execution by a subsequent generation has Washington been marred. It is the constant surprise of newcomers that the city remains so beautiful; but it is due only and wholly to the vigilance of such idealists as Senator NEWLANDS. Plato said that children should not be allowed to grow up amid the images of evil, lest their souls simulate the ugliness of their surroundings, and I could appropriately paraphrase our great American sculptor, W. W. Story, when he said:

Is this the stately form I saw
In Greece a thousand years ago,
Who ruled the world by beauty's law
And used among the gods to go?
Now scant in garb, a mendicant
She stretches forth her tearful palms,
And Congress in pity for her want,
Contemptuous, tosses her its alms!

That is the spirit in which Congress has conserved the beauty of the Capital. When the invading bands of a heedless commerce, for the purpose of saving money and sacrificing art, sought to construct smokestacks under the very Monument of Washington in the Mall, it was the Senator from Nevada who persistently arraigned those who attempted this perpetration. He had behind him the American Institute of Architects and the Commission of Fine Arts, whose approval he demanded from a self-sufficient Congress on all occasions before public monuments and public buildings were constructed within the sacred precincts of this District.

Loving art and in a most practical way defending art, meeting every obstruction that might be put in the path of the accomplishment of Washington's dream and L'Enfant's plan, he valiantly on more than one occasion saved the city. I know the people of Washington appreciate his service. I know that artists have enshrined his name.

So he is tied to the West and to the East by the indissoluble bonds of affection. Nature and art mourn his loss.

So long as the desert yields to the will of men and engineering skill restrains the mountain torrents to create homes for the helpless and promote happiness in the reclaimed regions of the West; so long as Beauty sits enthroned by the Golden Gate—because his labors there were just as efficacious as here—or by the shores of the Potomac; so long as the snows upon the Sierra Nevadas look down upon the sister States, yielding sustenance to field and farm; so long as friendship remains, binding heart to heart, this beloved and lamented Senator shall not be forgotten.

He shall stand as a sentinel!
He shall still rule us from his grave.

In our conversation that fateful day he said he felt that upon him was a grave crisis and could not expect immunity because he had attained, he said, nearly 70 years.

Edwin Arnold, pessimistic, with his heathen philosophy upon his lips, had written—

This life of man so pleasant
Ran it not to waste and woeful finishing
In time's dry sand?

But I think the Senator, if he were consulted, in the words of his poet friend, Edward Robeson Taylor, of San Francisco, would rather say:

Death, take my body; it has served me well;
Nor do I now begrudge thy longed-for dole;
But to thy very face dare this I tell.
Thou shall not have the treasure of my soul!

His pure spirit, pure and untrammeled, has, let us believe, taken its heavenly flight, but he will also enjoy, I am convinced, an earthly immortality not only in the pages of the history of the West and of his country but in the loving hearts of his friends and his colleagues and his countrymen.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in the fall of 1891 I was in Salt Lake City, Utah, on law business and noticed in the morning newspaper that an irrigation congress was to be held there that day. I concluded that I would attend the opening exercises, and there I met for the first time Mr. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, who was the leading spirit in the sessions of the congress. Mr. NEWLANDS was then a thin, delicate-appearing man, but he made a speech that was one of the most remarkable I had ever heard on the need, indeed the necessity, of irrigation for the arid West. It was there that I learned, perhaps for the first time, the reason why the soil of the arid West is so fertile; why it is that it needs no fertilizer and will not for many years; that in the aridity of that region is contained the compensating advantage of fertility. That was one of the features of his speech that impressed me very much.

In the East, where there is more rainfall, of course the washings of the ages upon the soil have dissipated its fertility. All soil is nothing but disintegrated rock, and it is necessary to preserve the mineral salts in that soil in order to retain its fertility. The arid condition of the Great American Desert has been the principal factor that has preserved the fertility of the soil in that great expanse of territory and saved it for these later ages, to be brought to a condition which can produce crops in more abundant quantity and of better quality than those which any other soil can produce. By reason of excessive rains in other portions of the country, which melt and dissipate the mineral salts, the very fertility which is the basis of great and excellent production is wasted. It, therefore, becomes necessary to supply fertilizers in those sections.

Knowing that the region west of the one hundredth meridian, which passes through the State of Kansas, was of the nature that needed the aid of irrigation, FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS realized the great problem that he was undertaking in a career which he at that time anticipated would follow in the next few years, and he made his beginning in his speech in favor of the irrigation of that vast extent of territory that could supply millions and millions of people with food and would afford homes for millions of people on which to live prosperous and happy lives.

At that time Mr. NEWLANDS was not in office, but it was then stated to me—for his speech made a lasting impression upon every person who heard him—that he expected to run for Congress and would no doubt be elected. The next year he was a candidate for Congress and was elected by an overwhelming majority. When he came to Washington he began his work in an attempt to get Government assistance in the reclamation of the arid lands of the West. He followed up his effort by speeches in the House of Representatives and in many conferences and many conventions which he attended. Two years after that I was elected to the House of Representatives, and, having met him at Salt Lake City, renewed my acquaintance with him and assisted him in every way that I could in getting his projects, his bills, his ideas concerning reclamation indorsed by the Congress.

After some years it was deemed advisable by the western Senators and Representatives to appoint a committee of 17 Members, consisting of 1 from each of the 17 arid States and Territories, to draft a bill that would be acceptable to the Senate and the House of Representatives. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, at that time still a Member of the other House, represented the State of Nevada and I happened to represent the State of Colorado on that committee. We met at night and we consumed probably a period of six weeks in formulating the bill and reconciling the various differences of opinion in reference to it, but the leading spirit of that committee was FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS. While he differed in some respects upon some of the points that were made by other members of the committee, he, nevertheless, was possessed of that spirit of amiability and of fairness which prompted him always to concede merit in the contention of others. When it came to name the man who should introduce the bill in the House of Representatives, I had the honor of moving that Mr. NEWLANDS be named as the one to do so, which was agreed to; and he introduced the bill. That bill thereafter became an important subject of discussion in the Congress.

Nearly all of the parliamentarians of the House of Representatives were against the passage of the bill; all of the leaders, if might be said, of the House were opposed to it. Dire predictions were made of its total failure, and arguments on the impropriety of the Government going into the field of business were vigorously urged. There was a parliamentary filibuster, as it might be termed, started against the measure. For some reason or other, in the bringing in of the rule for consideration of the bill the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon was fixed as the time when its consideration should cease if a vote had not then been taken. It was rather a singular order, and it was thought by some of us that it had been imposed with an idea of letting the hour of 5 o'clock come during debate and then of letting the bill be relegated to the calendar, with possibly but little chance of again getting it up for consideration at that session, for it was near the close of the long session of Congress, and the short session is always crowded with work, so that a measure can hardly be supposed to have a chance of passage at a short session if there is strong objection to its consideration.

It became necessary to limit the debate on each amendment which was offered. Senator NEWLANDS and I had grown very intimate by that time and we frequently conferred over plans for the bills advancement. He was a very courteous, kindly man, and loath to offer motions to cut off debate. He therefore requested me to make the necessary motions in the attempt to limit debate on each amendment, so that we should certainly reach the end of the consideration and secure a determination of the measure by 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I did so, and I had to make many such motions; I had finally to move to limit the time of debate on amendments to a very few minutes; in fact, sometimes to three minutes. It was only at 10 minutes of 5 o'clock that the vote was ordered to be taken upon the bill. Senator NEWLANDS was present at all times, and was active in the endeavor to utilize every force and every particle of his influence in favor of the passage of the bill; and at last, when the Newlands bill was passed in the House of Representatives, it was regarded as one of the greatest achievements of that Congress, and, indeed, of many Congresses which had preceded it.

Mr. President, we all loved FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS. He was intimate, I believe, with every Member of this Chamber. He was always pleasant. He often told me that he thought that his good nature had prevented his getting consideration of some of his measures; that he ought, perhaps, to have used the weapon which is sometimes used of objecting to the consideration of other measures until his measure could be considered by the Senate; but his nature was too kindly to permit him to do so. He was always considerate of and most liberal in his attitude toward the opinions of others. So beloved was he that I believe there was no Member of this body who did not sincerely grieve when he realized that FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS had expired.

Mr. President, we all honored him; we all appreciated his ability; we all recognized his greatness; and we know that he will be regarded as one of the greatest Senators who ever sat in this body from the West.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, two or three things attracted me to Senator NEWLANDS. He was born on the banks of the Mississippi River, in the city of Natchez, and my home is on the river about 120 miles north of that city. Senator NEWLANDS was greatly interested in questions relating to water in some form or other, and I have also during my public life always been intensely interested in the same subject.

The first thing that attracted me to him after I entered Congress in 1899 was his very enthusiastic and persistent advocacy of the Newlands reclamation bill, which had been under consideration for some time. He was not a man who went into anything half-heartedly, but was the most persistent man whom I have ever known in either House of Congress. When he undertook to advocate a measure he did so with his whole heart and soul; he did so with every appearance of having the utmost faith himself in it and with the determination to win.

There was a fellow feeling between the people of the West and myself in their efforts to secure the irrigation of their arid lands. They desired to put water on land which had none, whereas in my portion of Louisiana the people wished to restrain the floods of the mighty Mississippi River which swept down to the Gulf with the accumulated waters of 31 States, frequently bearing death to many persons and destruction to vast quantities of property. It seemed to me to be very natural that, as I desired the water kept from the lands of my State, I should aid the people of the West in their effort to put water on their arid lands; hence I early took an interest in Senator NEWLANDS and the great measure which he advocated so enthusiastically.

It was a long time before he could secure the passage of his bill. I well recall that the river and harbor bill, in which I was intensely interested, was talked to death by Senator Carter of Montana because of its failure to carry an appropriation of about $300,000 to irrigate some lands in the State of Montana. That was in the spring of 1901; and the great bill carried $54,000,000 for improving the waterways of the Nation for purposes of navigation.

Within a year from that date the sentiment in favor of irrigation had grown materially, Senator NEWLANDS and other friends had been doing wonderful work, and President Roosevelt, the remarkable man who then occupied the White House, had sent to Congress the strongest kind of message in favor of general irrigation in the West. With the aid of that message, and of many representatives from the Mississippi Valley, Senator NEWLANDS succeeded in passing his great reclamation act, to my mind one of the most magnificent pieces of constructive legislation passed by Congress during the 19 years of my service—a measure under which over $100,000,000 has been expended, which has made not two blades of grass to grow where none grew before but wonderful crops, beneficial to the whole Union, on millions of acres of land that were entirely arid before, and initiating a program which is going to result in the reclamation of a great many more millions of acres of land now utterly worthless because of the lack of life-giving water.

It was a wonderful conception, a marvelous accomplishment, and it is the greatest monument, in my judgment, to the memory of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS and the other western Representatives and Senators who worked so hard and so faithfully to secure its passage.

Another matter that caused me to take an interest in Senator NEWLANDS was his enthusiastic advocacy of flood control. That matter has been alluded to by one or two Senators who have preceded me, but it came home to me, Mr. President, as perhaps no other Member of this body, for my own section of Louisiana has time and again been devastated by the Mississippi's floods. My State has 14,000 square miles of land subject to overflow when that great river breaks its bounds. There are 28,000 square miles of such land in the valley of the Mississippi, and great floods have often swept over that area, more fertile than the valley of the famous River Nile.

During his entire congressional career, at least since I have been a Member of Congress, which embraces a period of 19 years, Senator NEWLANDS was a friend of flood control. He had a great conception about it. He desired to control water in all its forms from the time it fell from the clouds until it evaporated and became a cloud again. His idea was that Congress should create a great waterways commission and give it money and authority to handle water for every purpose, to purify the streams in order that the water might conserve the best purposes of health and sanitation, to regulate the underground flow of water in order that agriculture might be benefited and improved; to regulate it so as to increase the growth of our forests; to drain the 77,000,000 acres of swamp lands in this country, 120,000 square miles of swamps, an area equal to two and a half times the total area of the State of Louisiana; to control floods in every part of the Nation, not alone on the Mississippi River but all over the Union; and his conception always took in the use of our internal waterways for purposes of navigation.

It also included the control of the mountain torrents for hydraulic power. He wished to harness this water and create an enormous quantity of valuable power. His plan was a big one. Years ago he introduced the first bill for the Newlands National Waterways Commission, and sought to have Congress appropriate $60,000,000 a year for 10 years—a total of $600,000,000. Some day that sum will be appropriated; but the Senator looked further into the future than most of us, and I doubt if a dozen Senators agreed with him on the large appropriation to be carried in his bill. I for one disagreed with him on it, but he finally persuaded the majority of the Senate to create the National Waterways Commission and arm it with the necessary money and power to make investigations and report upon all of the uses of water—appropriations for same to be made hereafter if the reports are approved. Every legitimate and proper use of water is to be studied and reported upon by this great commission, which was provided for in the river and harbor act of last year. It was a Herculean task to persuade Congress to agree to the creation of that commission, and it gives me much satisfaction to recall that I aided Senator NEWLANDS therein to the best of my ability. The Senator did not live to see the commission actually appointed. Its members have not yet been named. I presume the President has been so engaged by his duties in connection with the war that he has not found time to select the seven strong men for this truly great commission; but they will be appointed some day, and will evolve plans to be presented to Congress that, in my judgment, will result in very beneficial laws, which, in turn, will become other great monuments to the memory of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

Mr. President, I knew the Senator well. Though I differed with him on some subjects, I admired his ability greatly, and I was much pained and shocked when I heard of his untimely death.

One of the best friends and greatest admirers of Senator NEWLANDS was Mr. F. H. Newell, for a long time head of the Reclamation Service and now chief of the department of civil engineering in the University of Illinois. Prof. Newell has sent me a brief statement with regard to the Senator, which I will conclude my remarks by reading:

FRANCIS GRIFFITH NEWLANDS.

"Senator NEWLANDS remains in the memory of his friends a man at all times courteous and considerate of others whether Senators or servants. With his strong, decided views on many points he necessarily differed from many of those about him, but in his intercourse or reference to his opponents he preserved a rare degree of consideration for them. In spite of the difficulties, embarrassments, and petty annoyances which make up the life of an active business man and Senator he maintained his characteristic poise, meeting all situations with his rare sense of humor.

"As a statesman his chief characteristic was that of the breadth of his views and his grasp of national and international relations. He was a man of vision without being visionary. His thoughts were not bounded by civil divisions, but included the whole United States and its relation with other countries. He looked far ahead and discussed the needs of legislation so much in advance of his colleagues that one of them jokingly said: 'Whenever we want to find out about a subject now being discussed we look up what NEWLANDS said concerning it 10 years ago.'

"Thus it was with the reclamation act, which is forever connected with his name. He worked for this ideal even before coming to Congress and endeavored to persuade the State of Nevada to take the lead. Failing in this he, as Representative from Nevada, drafted many bills providing for the reclamation of the arid west; in season and out with rare persistence and tact he kept continually forward the conception that it was the duty of the Nation as the proprietor of unutilized but valuable lands to make these available for homes. He attracted to the support of these measures other men both in and out of Congress and presented his ideas so clearly and persistently that they could not fail to be adopted.

"Senator NEWLANDS seemed never to tire, but displayed a most unusual persistency in his advocacy of large ideals and measures such as those embodied in part in the reclamation act. This had no sooner passed into law and become effective than he took up and urged year after year the continuation of similar principles which involved a higher degree of cooperation and coordination of governmental functions in developing and utilizing other resources in the United States. At the time of his death he was still urging action which would extend to other parts of the country some of the benefits of water conservation, flood protection, and development of power such as were in part covered by the reclamation act. The country as a whole lost in his death the activity of one of the most unselfish and yet persistent advocates of internal development."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was acquainted with Senator NEWLANDS during the last 25 years of his life. I met him at the convention of 1892 in the city of Chicago. My subsequent relations with him were intimate and cordial. I was not in Washington when he died. The news of his demise reached me through the press dispatches. I was not even aware that he was ill when I learned that he was dead.

During my membership in this body our acquaintance ripened into a close and intimate friendship. Naturally I saw much more of him than before, and I learned to appreciate him, not only as a fellow legislator but as a companion in all that the term implies. His death was a great shock to me, and I could not but reflect how many Members and former Members of this body had passed away during the short term of my service in it. I have had frequent occasion since then to indulge in the same reflection, for the hand of death has been busy in this body since it convened on the 2d day of April, 1917. Ten of our Members have gone to their long home. Who will next be called we do not know, but I am sure that if it can be said of him, as it can be said of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, that his life was an open book, and his work an earnest of his devotion to his country, he will not have lived in vain.

Senator NEWLANDS possessed in high degree two fundamental qualities of statesmanship—the one, perseverance; the other, imagination. The union of these in a man bent upon the accomplishment of a given object makes him a strong force for its ultimate accomplishment. He believed thoroughly in this Republic, and loved the West with a passionate devotion. It was the mainspring of his efforts for western development.

Senator NEWLANDS was a national representative. He was a stateman in the broadest sense. We are too prone, as Members of the Congress of the United States, to regard ourselves more as the representatives of the political divisions which choose and send us here. We are too apt to exalt the wants, prejudices, preferences, and selfishness of our immediate constituencies above the calls and requirements of national duty. Hence it is reassuring to find in such surroundings a man of broad national views like Senator NEWLANDS, who regarded his duty always as first to the Nation, yet loyal to his State.

It has been said that a sense of duty arises from a consciousness of public responsibility. His consciousness of public responsibility was always present with Senator NEWLANDS, and the dominant note in all of the utterances which he made upon this floor when speaking to some great measure pending before it.

He had also the element of moral courage—a quality greatly needed in public life, and, unfortunately, all too rare in this hour of the Nation's crisis. He did not act impulsively, but only after due and careful deliberation. Having resolved upon a course he could not be dissuaded from it. He was not a Titan, striking sledge-hammer blows in behalf or in defense of his purpose. His power was rather that of the sunshine. Its constant play upon the forces of the opposition sometimes slowly but always surely overcame opposition or tended to the accomplishment of his objects.

His disposition was singularly sweet and attractive. I have seen him occasionally lose his temper when under great provocation. I never knew him to remain out of humor 10 minutes at any time. He could not be an enemy, because he could not carry malice long enough to provoke resentment. He won his way through the world by a genial disposition, an excellent temper, a quiet but overwhelming determination, and a thorough acquaintance with every subject which engaged his energies. He is gone, Mr. President. His death has left a void among us which can not soon be filled. As we mourn his loss, we pay tribute to all that he did and all that he desired. Let us hope that "when," in Tyndall's phrase, "we shall like streaks of morning cloud have melted into the infinite azure of the past," the same may be said in small measure of ourselves.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I very deeply regret that absence from Washington made it impossible for me to be in the Chamber during the entire memorial services.

I shall not attempt to express, even measurably, my sense of the overpowering loss which, as an individual, I sustained in the death of Senator NEWLANDS. We were close, intimate friends, and I entertained for him an affection which during my whole life I have felt for few, very few men. We were companions in so many conferences and discussions upon public affairs that it is difficult for me to realize that never again am I to experience the joy of his delightful presence, the warmth of his gracious personality, and the strength of his wise and exalted counsel. In all the wide range of the subjects in which we were so vitally interested no man ever helped me more than this sound-hearted, broad-minded, highly cultured, well-trained student of political economy. To the end of my days I shall gratefully remember his exceeding kindness, his fine inspiration, his wonderful fellowship, and his earnest, though tolerant, leadership. I shall never cease to mourn the fate which carried him from our world to the rewards of the future at the very climax of his usefulness and power.

My chief, indeed my only, purpose upon this occasion is to record in an enduring way my estimate of his service as a Senator of the United States and of the value of the heritage which he has bequeathed to us and to all who are to follow us.

My acquaintance with Senator NEWLANDS began in the early years of the last decade when he, as Senator and member of the Waterways Commission, and I, as governor of Iowa, came together in an effort to advance the movement for water transportation. He had been long engaged in the work. I was a stranger to it. He was familiar with every phase of the subject. I had yet to grasp its full significance and supreme importance. Comparisons are said to be odious, and I recognize that there have been and are many men whose contributions to this subject have been invaluable, but I am sure that I may be permitted to say without offense that in the persistency of his labor, in comprehension of the whole intricate problem, in the tremendous energy he expended in turning the country toward practical achievement, in the zeal with which he reiterated his well-matured views upon every proper occasion he rose high above all his fellows. It is in these and in kindred qualities that his greatness is to be found.

He was not a dreamer, but a man with vision, and he was always able to clothe his abundant imagination with the realities of development. He was a prophetic philosopher and could not only foretell in speech but could clearly see the course which the Nation must pursue to attain its ends. He loved to surround himself with pictures of things as they are to be, and they were as real to him as they will be to the generation before which they will rise up in form and substance.

How often have we heard him from his place in this forum with unflagging industry and noble eloquence appealing for the future—for the reclamation of our deserts; for the preservation of our forests; for the proper use of all our natural resouces; for the regulated flow of our streams; for the construction of reservoirs to confine our waters in flood time; the straightening of channels; the protection of river banks; and the indissoluble union that must be established between land and water carriage, all to the one great purpose that every force capable of working in harmony should be invoked and the mighty volume of production be distributed throughout the country easily, quickly, and cheaply. All these things will come, and are coming day after day; but he was one of those rare men who could visualize them as a complete whole even before their disjointed parts began their inevitable movement toward each other. We used to jest with him now and then about his frequent use of the word "coordinate," but we knew all the time that he employed it with the utmost discrimination and accuracy. The truth is that the word was not only frequently upon his lips but it was the keynote of his life. He perceived, as few of us do or can, the actual relation between the potentialities of nature and the activities of humanity. Most of us fail to grasp this vital kinship and lose the strength that ought to be summoned to achieve the desired result. With him it was instinctive, and in felicitous, faultless language he could marshal all the contributing factors until his hearers could see them converging to accomplish a common purpose. This was his coordination, and nothing truer or higher can be conceived by mortal man.

When I came to the Senate in 1908 Senator NEWLANDS was a leading member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and soon became its ranking minority member. With the change in the political complexion of the Senate he rose to the chairmanship and continued as the head of the committee until his death. It happened that I was assigned to that committee, and shortly after the change in the administration I became the ranking minority member. I mention these things only to indicate the opportunity I had to know the qualities of his mind and the integrity of all his work.

This committee undertakes the consideration of all bills relating to our interstate commerce save those which affect the improvement of rivers and harbors. In times of peace the authority to regulate commerce among the States is the broadest and most important power granted by the Constitution, and it was most fortunate that leadership upon such a subject was conferred upon a man so superbly fitted to guide and direct. He was diligent, watchful, and tactful; but that is saying little, for these are common characteristics. He was vastly more. He brought to the committee that wide knowledge and perfect understanding of the relation which the component parts of commerce bear to each other, which I have mentioned with respect to other subjects. The regulation of our 250,000 miles of railway was his chief concern. While admitting that the interstate-commerce act and the Interstate Commerce Commission had done much to correct the wrongs and mistakes of transportation, his unerring vision detected the inherent and fundamental defects in the system. It was again an instance of want of coordination. Not for a moment did he hesitate in reaching down to the underlying causes of failure and in exposing them to the view of less analytical observers. He believed that adequate regulation could not be secured until all railway corporations were organized under the laws of the United States, and without entering into the detail of his marvelous plan it is enough to say that, under my observation, he gave 10 years of his life to the movement, and led it from the darkness of total obscurity and the weakness of almost universal opposition to the very point of general approval and acceptance. With the dawn of victory gladdening his weary eyes, the summons of the Master came.

Greatness is elusive and hard to define. No man is great in all things and few are great in anything.

The man who leaves behind him an indelible impress for good upon the world was a great man. The man who found his country wrong in any material thing and by his influence left it right was a great man.

In this rank I enroll FRANCIS GRIFFITH NEWLANDS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, the passing of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS came at a time when the State, and in large measure the Nation, could ill afford his loss.

Never before were the people of the United States and the Congress faced with problems affecting so directly every phase of our national life and our international relations, whose solution will shape the destiny of man for centuries.

The welfare of our present and future millions depends absolutely upon the decisions that must be reached in this Chamber. To the wise solution of these problems must be brought not only the wisdom and experience of the past but an ability to penetrate the future and judge its needs. This demands vision. Such vision had Washington; such vision had Lincoln; and such vision had he whom we miss and honor at this hour.

Had Senator NEWLANDS lived, his vision, his energies, and his talents would have been generously devoted to the great new work at hand, and his advice and counsel would have made straight and plain many of the paths that now seem dark and uncertain. But it is not to be given to us to measure what that service might have been, for he has taken his honored place among those who have served the Republic, and his name stands high upon the Nation's honor roll as one who foresaw and made wise provision for his country's development and welfare.

Now that the Book of Life is closed to him here, of how little moment it is, where and when he was born, or from whence he sprang; of how little concern is a record of his comings and goings and the events that marked his useful life of 69 years. His fame rests not on these, but will endure through his great works accomplished here; through his clear vision coupled with rare capacity for work which made him one of the great constructive statesmen of his time. He will live in the hearts of grateful millions as that great empire reaching from the watersheds of the Mississippi to the boundaries of California attains its highest development and fructifies because of the wise and beneficient plans of water storage and control and the irrigation and reclamation of arid lands, so ably fostered and developed by him.

In reviewing the life work of Senator NEWLANDS, recalling many conversations had with him on the great problems to which he had addressed himself, there has repeatedly recurred to me the words and the vision of another great statesman, Edmund Burke, who said in his speech on conciliation:

> "Young man, there is America—which at this day serves for little more than to amuse you with stories of savage men and uncouth manners; yet shall, before you taste of death, show itself equal to the whole of that commerce which now attracts the envy of the world. Whatever England has been growing to by a progressive increase of improvement, brought in by varieties of people, by succession of civilizing conquests and civilizing settlements in a series of seventeen hundred years, you shall see as much added to her by America in the course of a single life!" If this state of his country had been foretold to him, would it not require all the sanguine credulity of youth, and all the fervid glow of enthusiasm, to make him believe it? Fortunate man, he has lived to see it! Fortunate indeed if he lives to see nothing that shall vary the prospect and cloud the setting of his day!

Senator NEWLANDS had the same vision of Burke as to the future of America. And to him was given the privilege and the opportunity to make much of the dream of both come true.

His life spanned a period in the development of the United States of America in which greater progress was made in the work of controlling and utilizing the forces of nature for the benefit of mankind than had ever been made before in any period of human history.

When he was a youth the vast territory extending from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean was almost an unbroken wilderness, unpopulated and undeveloped. Through the ensuing years the part he took in its transformation is conspicuous and truly worthy.

From the beginning to the end of his public carreer, both as a Member of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, covering a period of 25 years, his dream of conquest was for the conquest of the deserts and their subjugation to the uses of mankind. To a large extent he lived to see the fulfillment of that dream. It is conceded by those familiar with the events leading up to the enactment of the United States reclamation act in June, 1902, that without his efforts in its behalf there would have been no such law, though no one could have been more generous than he in extending to his coadjutors in that great undertaking the fullest measure of credit and recognition. The reclamation act before its passage was known as the Newlands national irrigation bill. He suggested the plan of providing a revolving fund from the proceeds derived from public-land sales, and around the measure embodying this idea he organized the western Representatives solidly in its support. The success of the engineers of the Reclamation Service in the contruction of the great engineering works built under the reclamation act was to him a source of never-failing gratification.

Great as was his work on reclamation, of more far-reaching import were his efforts on water control, centering largely on the Mississippi and its vast watershed.

He was born at Natchez, Miss., on the banks of the great Father of Waters. Those were the days when the river was crowded with the splendid river steamers, which were a feature of the earlier development of transportation in this country.

It is an interesting fact that one of the greatest ambitions of his later years was a restoration of the rivers of the country to their rightful place as a part of a great coordinated system of rail and water transportation, and particularly that the Mississippi River, on the banks of which he was born, should again enjoy its rightful heritage as one of the greatest carriers of water-borne commerce in the world.

Looking backward he saw in his mind's eye that mighty river carrying on its bosom the crowded commerce of a vast inland territory, teeming with a life filled with events that stirred men's blood and with a romance that fascinated their minds.

Looking forward he saw the vision of that magnificent river harnessed and controlled, its floods conquered and made to do man's bidding, its depth standardized and flow regulated, its banks stabilized and lined with thriving communities, the gateways through which a rich and populous land, well named "The Sugar Bowl of the Continent," shall pour into the world's commerce its contributions to the needs of man.

Since Marquette first threaded the swamps of that river's valley and Ponce de Leon sought the Fountain of Youth along its lower reaches, the menace of devastating floods has hung like a pall over that region. The Ohio, the upper Mississippi, and the Missouri have poured their flood waters into the lower Mississippi without let or hindrance.

Looking forward, again, into the glass of the future he saw the floods prevented at their source; he saw the freshet waters held back and absorbed into Mother Earth, our greatest reservoir, to nourish the growth and increase the fruitage of plants and trees; he saw the floods impounded in surface reservoirs and used to drive the power wheels for industry; he saw the source streams on all that vast watershed, comprising one-third of the entire area of the United States, regulated and controlled; he saw the time when floods shall be no more, and when the now wasted flood waters shall be proved to have been, as he so well characterized them, "The Nation's greatest asset," he saw the channels of all the source streams which are now raging torrents in winter and dry beds in summer changed to cool and beautiful perennial streams, flowing gently through deep pools, between banks overhung with verdure, and led out through myriads of ditches to carpet the fields with green and water the gardens around countless homes where men and women and their children shall have found a land of plenty.

It is not alone in the arid region that irrigation is a blessing. In the not distant future, in every State of the Union, millions of irrigated garden homes will contribute food for the family, and the Nation will be astonished at the yield from the magic touch of water. In the humid region supplemental irrigation is crop insurance, and will prodigiously increase crop production. These are the benefits of source stream control and river regulation in which every farmer may participate, whether his farm be located on the prairies of the central West, among the hills of New England, in the Allegheny or Appalachian Valleys, or in the arid region.

His labors in this field of water conservation, water development, and water utilization were not limited to the West. He thought always as a national statesman, never as a local representative only. His vision of the national benefits from the control and use of water covered every watershed in the United States and every use to which "the Nations greatest asset," its unused waters, could be put. Not the least of these uses was navigation, and a great national network of waterways was the keystone of the arch of the system he proposed.

His efforts in this field culminated in a legislative measure known as the Newlands river-regulation bill. That bill provided a complete and comprehensive system for regulating the flow of all the rivers of the United States and all their source streams, through coordinating for teamwork, in place of the chaotic confusion that now exists, the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, in cooperation with the States and all local agencies, or, as he himself expressed it in the bill, "with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portions as belong to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests."

The larger measure was summarized and epitomized in an amendment to the river and harbor bill which became a law on August 8, 1917, and has been known as the Newlands river-regulation amendment. The appointment of the commission created by this river-regulation amendment will practically bring to fruition the life work of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS in that field. It was his belief that the creation of that commission, not as a mere investigating commission, but as a permanent coordinating commission, with a membership in sympathy with the broad and comprehensive purposes of the act, would insure to the people of the country the far-reaching benefits contemplated in the original bill, as fast as the work of construction can be practically carried forward. Every great structure built in the future through the work of that commission will stand as an enduring monument to the life work of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

While water conservation is perhaps the most conspicuous achievement of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, it by no means marks the limit of his accomplishments as a national legislator. He took an active part in many matters of national importance. It may be said of him that throughout his long career in Congress there was hardly an important subject that had not the benefit of his intelligence, his judgment, and his powers.

Senator NEWLANDS's quarter of a century of service in Congress was marked by unremitting study, which took him deep into the fundamentals of the various phases of the legislation he sought to develop, by tireless energy, and finally by high accomplishment. As has been well said before, any one of several of his efforts was great enough to have been the great life work of a great man. He fairly earned the verdict so freely given him by the people of Nevada, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Mr. President, on August 2, 1917, Senator NEWLANDS delivered in this body an address on river development, water conservation, and coordinated rail, river, and ocean transportation. At that time permission was granted the Senator to insert historical statements on this measure, containing extracts from messages of various Presidents, extracts from reports of committees, and other public matter, both in newspapers and in the public records, and letters relating to this subject. When I arrived in Washington I found that these remarks had been corrected and these historical data had been supplied, and permission having been granted at that time, I now send to the desk the remarks of the Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS on the subject just enumerated, with the data attached, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Without objection, they will be ordered printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"RIVER DEVELOPMENT—WATER CONSERVATION—COORDINATED RAIL, RIVER, AND OCEAN TRANSPORTATION.

[Remarks of Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada, in the Senate of the United States, Thursday, Aug. 2, 1917.]

The Senate had under consideration the conference report on the river and harbor bill, confirming the following Senate amendment:

Mr. NEWLANDS. "Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] as to the importance of bringing the rail and water carriers into coordination and cooperation. I wish, however, to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that, desirable as the cooperation and coordination of rail and water carriers is, we must have a perfected instrumentality for rail carriers and must have a perfected instrumentality for water carriers; and a complete and perfect waterway is as essential for water carriage as a complete and perfect railway for rail carriage.

THE RHINE AND THE DANUBE.

"We have been singularly lethargic in our movement for the perfection of our waterways. The newspapers announce that, even during the stress of war, Germany and Austria have agreed upon a plan, and are now engaged in its actual execution, of connecting the headwaters of the Rhine, which empties into the North Sea, with the headwaters of the Danube, emptying into the Black Sea. When that is done we shall find as the result that the perfectly coordinated system of waterways of Germany—uniting all her waterways by artificial connection in such a way that you can proceed from one part of Germany to any other part of Germany by waterway—will be united with an equally perfected system of waterways in Austria. When this war ends that great union of coordinated empires will have the most perfect system of rail, river, and ocean transportation in the world.

COORDINATED RAIL AND RIVER TRANSPORTATION.

"Mr. President, I wish to add something further to what the Senator from Minnesota has said. He has suggested that, as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I should apply my energies to bring the rail and waterway carriers into coordination. I wish to say that that matter has received my utmost earnest attention, and is now before the Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and the House of Representatives, of which I have the honor to be chairman, and which is considering the whole question of waterway transportation. If the Senator will read the reports of the hearings held by that joint committee, he will find how large a space is devoted to the consideration of a perfected waterway system, with a view of bringing rail carriers, river carriers, and ocean carriers into coordination.

"Now, Mr. President, I wish to express my great gratification that the amendment of the Senate providing for a waterways commission has been accepted by the House conferees.

THE RIVER REGULATION BILL.

"This amendment embodies the substantial features of a measure known as the river regulation bill, which some of us have been urging for years for the practical coordination of the engineering and scientific services of the country engaged in the study of our water resources in order that those resources may be fully utilized for navigation, irrigation, swamp and arid land reclamation, water-power development, and all other useful purposes for which the surplus waters that are now wasted may be beneficially used, and for the coordination of the Nation with the States in plans and works for the full development from the source to the mouth of all waterways in such a way as to eliminate destructive floods and to utilize flood and stored waters for beneficial and wealth-producing purposes.

"Such legislation was approved nearly 10 years ago by the Inland Waterways Commission appointed by Mr. Roosevelt, and has been supported by Mr. Roosevelt and by Mr. Taft, as well as by President Wilson and his Cabinet. Whilst the provision in the river and harbor bill does not carry the large appropriations contemplated in the original bill introduced by me and urged for so many years, it does provide for its entire plan of organization and administrative machinery, and under it plans for construction can be perfected and submitted for the approval of Congress.

"I predict that the passage of this measure will open up a new era in transportation and that under it a perfectly coordinated system of rail, river, and ocean transportation will be developed. I predict also that destructive floods will be mitigated and eventually eliminated; that swamp lands will be restored; that arid lands will be reclaimed; that intensive cultivation and forestry will be stimulated by supplies of stored water; that water power will be developed for municipal and power uses; and that under its provisions a remarkable conservation of the natural resources of the country will be established.

"No one can picture the beauty and perfection of our waterway system when our river banks can be made stable, when the channels become fixed and the flood plane determined and controlled, and when thriving towns and cities will be established at places which have been for years threatened with constantly rising floods and recurring overflows.

WATER CONSERVATION A WAR MEASURE.

"As a war measure nothing surpasses in importance this measure. Our rivers, connected with each other by artificial channels, and with the Great Lakes, and with the gulfs and oceans, will carry the cheap and bulky articles of freight which are now burdening our railroads to the point of congestion.

"We must not overlook the fact that the war is enormously stimulating industry along lines that are largely temporary. Peace will bring far-reaching stagnation, unless some great constructive policy for building internal improvements is substituted for the stimulus to industry created by the war, which will be withdrawn when peace returns. The plans for such a great national constructive era for internal improvement and development can now be made before the war closes. The instant peace has been achieved this Nation can turn the same indomitable energy that it is now devoting to winning this war against a foreign foe to winning a greater war against the destroying forces of nature, and to the creation of new wealth, by building waterways, by creating new communities on reclaimed lands, by developing water power, by controlling floods, by planting forests, by preventing forest fires, and by conserving for the best and highest use, for the benefit of all the people, the natural resources of the country.

THE SAME ALL-CONQUERING ENERGY.

"The greatest waste that takes place in this country to-day is the waste of its surplus waters, which are the Nation's greatest asset, but which now run to waste in the sea, carrying destruction in their path in the form of devastating floods. We must learn to conserve that waste and to transform it into wealth—we must learn to fight that devastation with exactly the same all-conquering energy that we are now devoting to war. In no other way can the period of industrial depression that will otherwise be the aftermath of the war be so effectually averted. If that is to be done the great work of making the working plans for construction must be done before the war ends. It must be begun now and prosecuted with the same diligence that war measures are being prosecuted. This great work of building internal improvements and creating densely settled rural communities on newly reclaimed lands and on old lands protected from overflow or fortified by an abundant water supply, will furnish a way of providing for the industrial employment of the hundreds of thousands of men who will return from the war when it has closed and their terms of enlistment have expired, and for whom occupation must be provided in time of peace.

STRENUOUS ECONOMIC COMPETITION.

"We can not ever expect to maintain a large army in idleness in this country in time of peace, but we can maintain an industrial army. The pressure of the strenuous economic competition that will prevail in the world after the war will not permit the economic waste of a large army of idlers. If we have an army it will have to be a working army, engaged in the construction of works of internal improvement, such as are contemplated in this provision for river regulation which is embodied in the river and harbor bill.

"In the economic era that lies ahead, that nation which applies the greatest science and skill in the elimination of waste, in the conservation of natural resources, and in the development of opportunity, will fare best in material progress, in the creation of national strength and wealth, and in the progressive development of world influence. This river-regulation provision opens the gate wide for us.

A CONSTRUCTIVE EXECUTIVE.

"Mr. President, the agitation which has finally resulted in the adoption of this measure has been going on for more than 10 years; very many have contributed most materially to its advancement; waterways associations and chambers of commerce and boards of trade throughout the country have had their attention directed to this movement and have approved it, and many eminent, energetic, and public-spirited men have contributed to its advancement. I wish to say, however, that my experience in Congress has been that it is very difficult for an individual Member of Congress to initiate and carry through within a reasonable period any great constructive work of legislation. It took 10 years to carry through the reclamation act, and then we had to summon to our support the matchless energy of Theodore Roosevelt, without whose aid the passage of that bill would probably have been much longer delayed. It is absolutely essential that there be a constructive Executive to focus the attention of the country and of Congress upon a particular constructive measure. So it was in reference to the Trade Commission, a measure which had been pending here for years, and which needed the energizing force of President Wilson to carry it into accomplishment; so it is with this measure. Every friend of waterway development is indebted to Mr. Wilson for the painstaking attention which he has given to this subject. He appointed a Cabinet committee to investigate it and to make a report to him, and ever since that time he has been the firm and consistent friend of a great, comprehensive measure for the development of our waterways and the conservation and utilization of our water resources.

THE EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

"I can not in this connection close in reference to those who outside of Congress have been active in this movement without referring to Mr. George H. Maxwell, the Executive Director of the National Reclamation Association, who is so prominently identified with the national reclamation movement, who conducted the educational campaign throughout the country for 10 years which finally led to putting that measure upon the statute books; who, ever since then, has been continuously connected with the Nation-wide educational campaign for the passage of this measure, and who, as the trusted adviser of the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh and of the Reclamation Association of Louisiana, gave his ripe experience to the subject of conducting this great educational campaign, and the prosecution of the work of those organizations. In connection with that work, he lived for nearly three years in Pittsburgh, from 1908 to 1911, studying the flood problems of the Ohio River Valley, and during 1912 and 1913, the two great flood years, he was in New Orleans studying the flood and waterway problems of the Mississippi River Valley.

"Mr. President, I would be glad to mention other names, among them the names of Frederick H. Newell; Gifford Pinchot; the late W J McGee; Herbert Knox Smith; Walter Parker, of New Orleans; Robert H. Downman, of New Orleans; Joseph N. Teal, of Oregon; the late Charles B. Boothe, of Los Angeles, for many years president of the National Reclamation Association; William E. Smythe, of San Francisco, the founder of the National Irrigation Congress; Francis Cuttle, of Riverside, chairman of the Tri-Counties Reforestation Committee; J. L. Craig and George McM. Ross, of Stockton, Cal.; Gov. Hall, of Louisiana; Gov. Capper and J. B. Case, of Kansas; and Herbert Quick, of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

"The General Federation of Women's Clubs of the United States, through its present chairman of conservation, Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, and her predecessor, Mrs. Emmons Crocker, have been unfaltering in their support of this measure, which is equally true of innumerable State and local women's clubs, under the leadership of such loyal adherents as the late Miss Hattie M. Carstens and Mrs. B. F. Williston, of Detroit; Mrs. Foster Elliot, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Roydan Douglas, of New Orleans; and many others who ought to be mentioned. In fact, there is hardly a State in the Union which has not furnished its quota of zealous advocates of this plan for river regulation which is embodied in the measure now befor the Senate. Their name is legion, and the mention of a few involves no lack of appreciation of the faithful work of the many who are entitled to recognition."

Mr. HENDERSON. In this connection, Mr. President, I ask leave to insert a historical statement of this measure containing extracts from the messages of various Presidents, extracts from reports of committees, and other public matter, both in newspapers and in the public records, as well as letters relating to this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., April 5, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I thought you might be interested in the inclosed letter, which I have received from J. B. Case, of Abilene. You probably know Mr. Case. He is one of our finest citizens and a great booster for your bill. I think he is right in his views.

With best regards, I am,
Very respectfully, ARTHUR CAPPER.

FARMERS' LOAN & TRUST CO.,
Kansas City, Mo., April 3, 1917.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Topeka, Kans.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I inclose a clipping of the Star of this date, which goes to show how slow and careless the people of the United States perform and also goes to show the great projects that Senator NEWLANDS has figured out in the interest of the West; I say West—in the interest of the whole country; but it looks to me as though it were up to the West to push this matter of the Newlands bill harder than we ever have before.

It also goes to show that with Germany's great war and expense that the present indications of war in the United States should be no reason why this Government should not take up the Newlands project with the sum of $600,000,000 in comparison with the $163,000,000 which Germany has already appropriated for a like construction.

I have recently been drafted by this company as its president, but do not think I will change my residence, as I expect to spend part of my time in Abilene as usual.

Yours, truly, J. B. CASE, President.

GERMANY PLANS A NEW SHIP CANAL.

In the midst of war Germany is planning vast industrial developments and internal improvements to be carried out after peace comes. One of the most gigantic of these has in it a lesson for Americans, and especially for those of the Middle West. It is a ship canal 440 miles long, 120 feet wide, and 11 feet deep, capable of floating vessels of 1,200 tons, to connect the Main and the Danube Rivers. It will cost $163,000,000 and will require eight years to build. The Bavarian Government has already made arrangements to raise its share of the cost.

By following the course of this canal on a map of Germany an idea of its importance may be had. The River Main is to be deepened from its confluence with the Rhine at Mainz to Nuremberg. From there the canal will go south to the Danube. When this work is finished boats from the North Sea may enter the Rhine, go up to Mainz and enter the Main, and so on to the Danube and down that river to the Black Sea.

Why is Germany going to spend such a vast sum on an internal waterway? The answer contains the lesson from which America may profit. Mainly this work is to be done to relieve railway congestion. Germany's plans for great industrial development can not be carried out if the railways are to become congested with freight and traffic delayed. Experience has shown that in times of great activity the railroads are not adequate to handle the traffic. Germany has had that experience, just as we had it this year, and many times before. Germany, with an already widely developed system of waterways, has learnt how water-borne traffic relieves railway congestion. Between 1895 and 1905 the traffic on German waterways increased 125 per cent, and on railways it increased 71 per cent. The two systems work together, the waterways taking the poorest paying heavy merchandise, such as coal, sand, lumber, hardware, leaving the railways free for passengers and fast freight.

America's waterways are undeveloped. In time they will all be great arteries of transportation and then we shall not have the whole railway transportation system of this country stalled because of congestion from trains of coal and wheat and lumber and iron ore moving slowly on every line. Those commodities will go by water, as they do in Germany. If the United States is to keep up with Germany in the race for the world's trade we must plan for as great efficiency as Germany has, and one of the things contributing to that efficiency is water-borne transportation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 18, 1917.

Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You and I have been interested for years in the matter of the development of our inland waterways. You may possibly remember my book, American Inland Waterways, published in 1909 by Putnam.

For some years I have refused to take any interest in the matter of this development because of the conviction which has been borne in upon me that all plans for restoring commerce to our rivers will be futile, save under exceptional conditions, until a national policy is adopted which will require the railroads to correlate their business with the business of the waterways; will prevent them from pursuing policies which are destructive to waterway commerce; will enable shippers to route their shipments by land or water, in whole or in part, according to their needs; which will force joint traffic arrangements between water lines and railway lines; and which will build up our inland harbors with freight-handling appliances and means generally for putting the waterway transportation lines as nearly upon an equality with railway lines in the matter of service as is possible.

I am taking the liberty to address this letter to you at this time because of the fact that the railroads are, in my opinion, absolutely sure to break down completely under the load of freight which they will have to carry during this war.

We are urging the farmers to produce and produce, and to continue to produce, but we are providing no additional transportation of any sort for them. The slow, heavy freight not only ought to go by water where possible, but additional possibilities for its movements ought to be opened up, and the railroads should be, if necessary, coerced into allowing that sort of freight to come by water instead of breaking their backs trying to carry it by rail.

I certainly doubt whether complete development of the interior of a country like this can ever take place except by the development of our waterways.

Under the present conditions of the American railways prosperity can develop only up to a certain point. When this point is reached, prosperity is strangled by lack of transportation. This condition is intolerable, to my mind, and within six months I feel sure that it will be so regarded by all minds.

Whatever is necessary to be done in the way of legislation or constitutional amendments ought now to be done, in order that we may adopt a national waterways policy which will include not only reforestation to prevent the silting up of our waterways, but also headwaters control, a system of reservoirs on the general principles advocated by Mr. Marshall O. Leighton in 1907, and the development of the water powers which will be made available by such a system. At present the constitutional doctrine that nothing can be done in these matters except in the interests of navigation makes all coordinated effort in that direction difficult. May I suggest that now is the time for a "spring drive" in the direction of waterway development. I do not for a moment believe that you are oblivious of the fact that the present crisis is an opportunity, and I am writing this to express my belief that the breakdown of transportation which is now apparent will soon make transportation one of our big issues.

There are no cars for coal. The Packard Co. are delivering their automobiles all over the United States, even as far as the Pacific coast, by having them driven overland on account of lack of cars. I am told that in the city of Flint, Mich., there are from 15,000 to 20,000 automobiles parked in open places of the city for lack of storage room, every one of which has been sold to a customer but can not be delivered for want of cars. What will happen under the pressure of war and war orders and the movement of troops is something which the country and its legislators have not yet realized.

Please pardon this long letter, which I will not make longer unnecessarily.

Yours, sincerely, HERBERT QUICK,
Member Farm Loan Board.

HISTORICAL STATEMENT REGARDING THE WATERWAY MOVEMENT.

THE NEWLANDS RIVER REGULATION AMENDMENT: SECTION 18 OF THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL OF AUGUST, 1917.

[By George H. Maxwell, executive director National Reclamation Association.]

A historical statement of the national campaign that has led up to the final adoption of the great comprehensive plan for river regulation provided for in section 18 of the river and harbor bill of August, 1917, known as the Newlands River Regulation Amendment, in place of the old and hopelessly inadequate, piecemeal system of river improvement is a most interesting chapter in the legislative history of the United States.

The river-regulation movement harks back to the very beginning of the agitation for national irrigation and water conservation in the West—even farther back than the founding of the National Irrigation Congress by William E. Smythe, more than a quarter of a century ago. Many of the early pioneers in the movement, like Maj. J. W. Powell, did not live to see the realization of their visions, but we are now within reach of that realization.

River regulation—the control of the surplus flow and flood waters on the source streams by systems of reservoirs—was the original idea of this movement when it first took the form of a nation-wide campaign.

The Newlands Reclamation Act, passed in 1902, was a compromise and provided only for the reclamation of specific tracts of land where the cost of the reclamation could be reimbursed from the lands reclaimed. It was not a complete adoption of the comprehensive national policy which had been theretofore urged upon Congress, the policy of regulating the flow of all rivers by reservoirs so as to increase the water resources of the Nation, without reference to any specific use of the water or any particular tract of land any more than has been the policy in other river improvements under the river and harbor bills.

The Newlands Reclamation Act was only a stepping stone to the more comprehensive river-regulation policy, which included in its scope the full conservation and utilization of all the vast unused and now wasted water resources of the United States, not only for navigation but for every beneficial purpose for which the water could be used.

Immediately following the inauguration of the new national policy provided for by the Newlands Reclamation Act the advocates of a nation-wide policy of river regulation returned to their active efforts to secure the inauguration by Congress of the whole broad river-regulation policy, and those efforts have at last culminated in its adoption through the enactment of this Newlands River Regulation amendment.

The most interesting and complete historical statement heretofore published with reference to this movement is found in the report of the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh, pages 1 to 5, from which the following is quoted:

"HISTORICAL.

"The regulation and control of the flow of navigable rivers in aid of interstate commerce is an important factor relating to the conservation, development, and use of the natural resources of the United States and the enlargement of its internal trade and commerce. When such a national policy has been adopted on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the problem, it will not only promote navigation and water transportation but must also necessarily include the storage of flood waters for flood prevention and for all other beneficial uses and the protection of watersheds from denudation and erosion and from forest fires.

"Much has already been done, in a disconnected and inadequate way, toward the inauguration of such a comprehensive national policy for river regulation, and the work done and measures advocated by the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh are in the direction of an ultimate enlargement of that policy, which will be vastly beneficial to the entire country. The progress thus far made has been accomplished as the result of three organized movements:

"First. The national irrigation movement, culminating in the passage of the national irrigation act, which became a law on June 2, 1902. Under this act about $60,000,000 has been thus far expended in the construction of works for water storage and control in the western half of the United States. Several large reservoirs have been built on the headwaters of the Missouri River and its tributaries.

"Second. The Appalachian Forest Reserve movement, resulting in the passage of the Weeks Appalachian National Forest Act, which became a law on March 1, 1911. The purpose of this act, as expressed in its title, is 'to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers.'

"Third. The national storage-reservoir movement, which was first in order of date and was inaugurated by the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh through the National Board of Trade in December, 1898. The resolution then presented by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce to the National Board of Trade urged 'the storage of flood waters on the upper branches of navigable streams, to be held in use for irrigation, for checking damaging floods and liberating water in times of drought that will preserve streams in navigable condition.'

"In behalf of this proposition Mr. George H. Anderson, then secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, submitted a report, the preamble of which was as follows:

"Your committee, to whom has been referred the subject of the storage of flood waters on the higher tributaries of the navigable streams in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys for improving navigation, providing for irrigation, etc., present the following report:

"After the discussion following the reading of this report, which is published on pages 59 to 76 of the Report of the Twenty-ninth Annual Meeting of the National Board of Trade, held in Washington in December, 1898, and in Appendix No. 6 of this volume, a resolution was adopted by the National Board of Trade embodying substantially the recommendations of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce on this subject and laying stress upon 'the value of a system of improvement on the navigable waterways of the Mississippi and Ohio Basins for irrigating and making productive vast areas of arid lands, for the continued improvement of these rivers for transportation purposes, and diminishing the destructive power of floods.

"NATIONAL IRRIGATION MOVEMENT.

"The movement thus started by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce was taken up by the National Irrigation Association, organized on June 2, 1899, and brought about the enactment of the national irrigation act previously mentioned. This association has persistently advocated the adoption of a national policy which is stated in the constitution of the association as follows:

"The preservation and development of our national resources by the construction of storage reservoirs by the Federal Government for flood protection and to save for use in aid of navigation and irrigation the flood waters which now run to waste and cause overflow and destruction.

"A national educational propaganda was inaugurated, based upon the action of the National Board of Trade on the resolution of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and also upon the recommendations of the Chittenden Report, Document No. 141, House of Representatives, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session. This report was made under an appropriation contained in the rivers and harbors act of June 3, 1896, which provided, in section 8, for a number of preliminary examinations, among which was the following:

"For the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water, to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks and breaks of levees, and to reinforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water seasons, at least one site each in the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

"The Chittenden Report, transmitted to Congress on December 6, 1897, now out of print, has attracted wide attention and may be found in part in the report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1898. An abstract of this report will be found in Appendix No. 6 of the report of the flood commission. After a most exhaustive examination and consideration of the whole question of the effect and value of reservoirs to aid navigation, to prevent floods, and to furnish water for irrigation, the following conclusions were stated:

"First. A comprehensive reservoir system in the arid regions of the United States is absolutely essential to the future welfare of this portion of the public domain.

"Second. It is not possible to secure the best development of such a system except through the agency of the National Government.

"The work of the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh has related primarily, of course, to the conditions on the headwaters of the Ohio River. It is worthy of note at this point that in considering the effect of flood-water storage on the Missouri River upon floods in the lower Mississippi Valley, Col. Chittenden said:

"The floods of the Mississippi are formed by the heavy rains in the low regions east of the ninety-eighth meridian and very largely come from east of the Mississippi itself. The great controlling element, in fact, in all the lower river floods is the Ohio River.

"The relation of flood-water storage on the upper Ohio and its tributaries to river regulation and flood prevention in the lower Mississippi Valley is thus clearly set forth, and makes manifest the fact assumed in the resolution of the Pitsburgh Chamber of Commerce to the National Board of Trade in December, 1898, above referred to. Considered from a national point of view, flood-water storage on the Ohio Basin is but one aspect of a great national problem, which is coextensive with the entire drainage basin of the Mississippi River and all its tributaries, covering an area comprising more than one-third of the United States, and stretching from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the crest of the Appalachian Range, on the east, to the crown of the continent, on the west. Hence any attempt to localize the problem must fail.

"In presenting the arguments, which make it clear that reservoir construction for river regulation is naturally and necessarily a national function, Col. Chittenden, on pages 55 and 56 of his report, says:

"In the case of reservoirs it not infrequently happens that some of the very best sites are to be found close to State lines, where the waters so stored will flow immediately into neighboring States. In these extreme cases the States where they are located could not, of course, be expected to construct reservoirs, and the States to be benefited would not be likely to go outside their own borders to do so. The function clearly pertains to that sovereignty which covers all the country and embraces the streams from their sources to the sea. It alone can store these waters and be sure that it is reaping the full benefit.

"The policy of the Government in the matter of the preservation of the forests of the country is a case directly in point. There seems to be a well-nigh universal consensus of opinion that the preservation of the forests of the arid regions is distinctly a Government duty. * * * Inasmuch as the commercial value of these forests is practically insignificant, except for furnishing fuel and rough timber, the water question is really the more important one. If it is properly a Government function to preserve the forests in order to conserve the flow of the streams, surely it can not be less a Government function to execute works which will conserve that flow even more positively and directly. Granting all that can be said of forests in this connection, they certainly can never prevent the June rise, and it is precisely this waste flow which reservoirs will help to save. The forests ought unquestionably to be preserved, and the Government is the proper agency to do it, but the principal arguments therefor apply with accentuated force to the construction of reservoirs.

"The precedent for the construction of reservoirs for river regulation and to reinforce the flow during low-water season had already been established by the construction, beginning in 1881, of five reservoirs on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, where dams were built across the outlets of natural lakes. These reservoirs are described in Appendix No. 5 of this report, and are referred to at some length by Mr. Anderson in his paper mentioned above.

"FOREST MOVEMENT.

"The National Government has now, however, by the enactment of the Appalachian National Forest bill, gone to the full extent of recognizing and using its constitutional power to control and regulate the flow of navigable rivers at their sources not only by the building of artificial reservoirs but by preserving the forests and woodland cover on the watershed as natural reservoirs.

"The maintenance and preservation of natural reservoirs by forest preservation, as provided in this act, and the construction of artificial reservoirs, as advocated by the flood commission of Pittsburgh, on the headwaters of the Ohio River in the Appalachian Mountains, involve the exercise of a constitutional power which is precisely the same in both instances. It is the same power which was exercised in the creation of the California Débris Commission, to prevent the silting up of navigable channels by the débris from hydraulic mines. It is also the same power which was exercised in the construction of levees on the lower Mississippi to aid in maintaining a navigable channel, notwithstanding the conceded fact that one of the greatest moving forces in that case was the necessity for protecting the plantations from overflow.

"So, in the case of reservoir construction on the headwaters of the Ohio River, the constitutional power being so clearly established, the enormous damages by floods in the Ohio Valley, estimated to average at least $50,000,000 a year, and in some years to be as high as $100,000,000, furnishes strong ground for relief from the National Government; when it is conceded that such regulation of the flow of the river by reservoirs as would, beyond question, immensely aid navigation and would also give relief from these destructive floods. Senator Burton clearly saw this aspect of the question when, in his speech in the Senate on the passage of the Appalachian National Forest bill, he said:

"Another thing that the Federal Government ought to do if this precedent is established, and it ought to do it right away, is to provide means for the prevention of floods. At certain seasons of the year we can hardly take up a newspaper without reading of the loss of life and of the mammoth destruction of property as a result of floods in the Ohio, the Mississippi, and various other streams of the country. Those floods have a direct influence upon navigation. If we are going to inaugurate this policy, why not protect these manifold interests by preventing floods and save the tremendous loss of property and the very pitiful loss of life which so frequently occurs?"

"EXTENSION OF POLICY TO RESERVOIRS.

"The National Government having, by the passage of the Appalachian National Forest Act, inaugurated the policy of maintaining natural reservoirs on the tributaries and source streams of the navigable rivers, for the purpose of regulating their flow, and having extended the policy of national forest reserves for that purpose into the Appalachian region, it is manifest that even-handed justice between the different sections of this great country requires that the policy of building artificial reservoirs for river regulation should also be extended over that portion of the United States lying east of the Mississippi River. Thus far everything done under that constitutional power, for the control and regulation of the flow of the navigable rivers, has been on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, or in the lower valley of that river, or in the vast territory to the west of it. The entire territory extending from the Mississippi River on the west to the Atlantic seacoast on the east has been excluded from any local participation in the benefits of expenditures under that policy.

"The flood commission of Pittsburgh now urges that the policy already inaugurated in a part of the country be made broadly national and that the East as well as the West shall be made beneficiaries under it. The Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh has at all times, from the very first, been an active and consistent advocate of the reservoir policy in the West, and now, with the same broad vision of national benefits, the flood commission organized by the chamber of commerce urges its extension to the East. All who advocate national irrigation in the West, national drainage in the South, or flood prevention in the East through national river regulation are practically supporting one and the same national policy and should unite to accomplish its Nation-wide adoption.

"Pittsburgh took the lead in urging this broad application of the policy as far back as 1898, and has aided other sections to secure the first benefits from its adoption. It is therefore peculiarly appropriate that Pittsburgh, after spending over $100,000 to establish the facts and showing the practicability and necessity for the adoption of the same constructive national policy in the Ohio Valley, should take the lead in a national campaign to extend the national policy of flood-water storage over the entire United States, and to all navigable rivers and their tributaries and source streams.

"THE NEWLANDS BILL.

"A bill providing for such a broad national extension of the policy of river regulation was introduced by Senator NEWLANDS in the Senate of the United States on March 1, 1911, the day the Weeks Appalachian National Forest bill became a law by the signature of the President. The purpose of this Newlands river-regulation bill was to so enlarge the forest policy inaugurated by the Weeks bill as to make it cover the entire United States, and to supplement the establishment and maintenance of the natural reservoirs, which the forests and woodland cover create, by an adequate national system of artificial reservoirs for flood-water storage. This bill, which is printed in Appendix No. 6 of this volume, was Senate bill 10900, in the Sixty-first Congress, third session, and Senate bill No. 122, in the Sixty-second Congress, first session.

"The Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh has in the past supported both the national irrigation act, which was known as the Newlands bill in the House of Representatives when it passed that body, and the Weeks Appalachian National Forest Act; and has extended its indorsement and support to the Newlands river-regulation bill by the adoption on April 13, 1911, of the following resolution:

"Whereas a bill was introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator NEWLANDS on March 1, 1911, entitled:

"A bill to create a board of river regulation and to provide a fund for the regulation and control of the flow of navigable rivers in aid of interstate commerce, and as a means to that end to provide for flood prevention and protection and for the beneficial use of flood waters and for water storage, and for the protection of watersheds from denudation and erosion and from forest fires, and for the cooperation of Government services and bureaus with each other and with States, municipalities, and other local agencies; and

"Whereas the primary purpose of said bill is to bring into conference and cooperation the National Government with the States, municipalities, counties, and local districts for the construction of the works necessary for the regulation of the flow of rivers and for flood prevention and protection, and it provides a fund of $50,000,000 annually for 10 years for said purpose; and

"Whereas the passage of said bill by Congress would result in the relief not only of Pittsburgh but of all cities and communities on the Ohio, Missouri, and Mississippi Rivers from destructive floods, and increase the flow of the rivers in the low-water season for navigation: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh hereby indorses said Newlands river-regulation bill and requests the Senators and Congressmen from this State to urge its passage by Congress."

The bill referred to in the foregoing resolution has been designated and known throughout the country as the Newlands river-regulation bill. It was printed in full on pages 391 to 396 of the aforesaid report of the flood commission of Pittsburgh, being S. 10900 (61st Cong., 3d sess.), introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS on March 1, 1911, and reintroduced by him as S. 122 (62d Cong., 1st sess.) in the following session of Congress, on April 6, 1911.

The Newlands river-regulation bill was evolved and developed from a bill known as the Inland Waterways Commission bill, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator NEWLANDS on December 4, 1907 (S. 500, 60th Cong., 1st sess.), and which had been prepared with a view to securing the legislation necessary to inaugurate the national policy with reference to river regulation and a national system of waterways which was subsequently recommended by the Inland Waterways Commission in its report of February 3, 1908.

The following is a copy of the Inland Waterways Commission bill above referred to (S. 500, 60th Cong., 1st sess.):

THE NEWLANDS BILL INTRODUCED IN THE SENATE DECEMBER 4, 1907.

"A bill (S. 500) providing for the appointment of an inland-waterway commission and for the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the country with a view to the promotion of transportation between the States and with foreign countries.

"Be it enacted, etc., That a special fund shall be established in the Treasury, to be known as the inland-waterway fund, to be used in the examination and survey for and the development of the inland waterways of the country; and the sum of $50,000,000 is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as such fund.

"SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be made examinations and surveys for the development of the inland waterways of the country, including the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Atlantic coast and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Pacific coast and their tributaries, and for the connection of such rivers with each other, wherever practicable and desirable, by connecting canals and by coastal canals, with a view to the promotion of transportation between such rivers by vessels of a standard draft; and to investigate all questions relating to the development and improvement of the inland waterways of the country, with a view to the promotion of transportation; and to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities and sites, and the regulation and control thereof, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce.

"SEC. 3. That in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations and to construct the works provided for by this act, he is authorized to appoint an inland waterways commission, to be composed of ——— members, and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service related to waterways, and to appoint such experts and other persons and create such board or boards in connection therewith as the work may require, and to fix the salaries of all commissioners, experts, and other persons employed under this act until the same has been fixed by Congress, the official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act to be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation fixed under the terms of this act.

"SEC. 4. That such commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all the moneys received and expended in the construction of works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and such commission shall furthermore give to either House of Congress such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress.

"The President shall cause to be provided for the use of the commissioners and other employees under this act such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of their duties.

"SEC. 5. That if after such examination, survey, and estimate such commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable, it may, with the approval of the President and through the appropriate service, construct or execute, or cause to be let, contracts for the construction or execution of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and execute as parts of the whole project: Provided, That the necessary moneys therefor are available in the inland waterway fund.

"SEC. 6. That such projects may include such collateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, and for the utilization of water power as may be deemed advisable in connection with the development of a channel for navigation or as aiding in a compensatory way in the diminution of the cost of such project.

"SEC. 7. That such commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits: Provided, That the cost of such collateral works shall be paid, if practicable, out of funds provided therefor by Congress, but if sufficient provision therefor is not specially made by Congress, such commission is authorized to pay for the same out of the inland waterway fund; but the total payments made on account of such collateral works from such inland waterway fund shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, and provision shall be made, as far as practicable, for the reimbursement to such fund of such payments by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby: And provided also, That the inland waterways developed shall remain free for all the uses of navigation.

"SEC. 8. That such commission shall make, with the approval of the President, rules and regulations governing the cooperation and compensation to the fund, wherever practicable, by the conveyance of reclamation rights, the lease of water power, and such other means as may be beneficial to the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals entering into such cooperation.

"SEC. 9. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the country.

"SEC. 10. That the President is authorized, whenever the inland-waterway fund is reduced below $20,000,000, to make up the deficiency in such fund by the issue and sale of bonds in such amount and for such time as he shall deem advisable, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding — per cent per annum; but the amount of bonds issued shall not at any time exceed the difference between the cash on hand in such fund and $50,000,000."

The foregoing bill, known as the inland-waterways bill (S. 500), upon its introduction was referred to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and by that committee the bill was referred to the War Department for its suggestions and recommendations.

The bill was returned by the War Department to the Committee on Commerce with a communication, bearing date April 17, 1908, from the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, approving the bill, with some amendments which were suggested in detail in the communication.

Extracts from this communication from the Secretary of War were embodied in an address by Senator NEWLANDS in the Senate on February 18, 1910, at the time of the introduction by him of the first river regulation amendment on that date, from which address the following is quoted:

"Here is what Secretary Taft said upon this subject in his letter of April 17, 1908, addressed to the Senate Committee on Commerce regarding Senate bill 500, which I had introduced in the Sixtieth Congress, and which was similar in its terms to Senate bill 3717, introduced by me in this Congress.

"(c) The bill provides for correlating the existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor through certain powers vested in the President. The need for some such plan is sufficiently shown by the fact that while this country is better endowed with waterways than any other our streams are less used for navigation and other public purposes than those of other countries. Since this provision touches duties placed on the War Department by law, it has received careful consideration. It does not appear that the measure would interfere with the functions of the War Department, or with the continuation and extension of the engineering work now performed there, but it is believed that the provision for administration would tend to promote the general welfare. Accordingly this feature meets the approbation of the War Department.

"(e) The bill provides also for the initiation of projects by a board of experts. These provisions affect the work of the War Department and have had careful consideration. Suitable provisions for expert initiation and prompt execution are essential to the proper development of any system of river improvement. The chief defect in the methods hitherto pursued lies in the absence of executive authority for originating comprehensive plans covering the country or natural divisions thereof. The creation of an Inland Waterways Commission for the purpose of initiating plans for the improvement of waterways seems to me a more effective way of a general plan for the improvement of all the waterways in the country than under the present provisions of law. This would not dispense with the admirable machinery furnished by the War Department for the improvement of waterways when the plan has been determined upon and is to be executed. But it supplies what does not exist in the law now—a tribunal other than Congress charged with the duty of originating and developing a satisfactory plan.

"Secretary Taft adds:

"3. In its present form the bill might be construed to curtail indirectly certain functions of the War Department, which is now charged with large discretion in waterway affairs. Possible ambiguity on this point should be removed.

"Mr. Taft goes on and gives the history of the Engineer Corps of the Army and shows how it drifted into the control of our waterways.

"Under the same long-standing arrangement—

"Mr. Taft says—

"It is the policy of the War Department to maintain a trained body of military engineers with a view to the national defense, and to keep these engineers in training in time of peace by detail to civil duty allied to their professional duty in time of war or military preparation; and it was carrying out this policy that the functions of the War Department pertaining to waterways have been more and more largely intrusted to the engineers of the Army during the 110 years since the Army and Navy were separated in distinct departments. This policy has long been sustained by the Congress, although the military engineers have been prohibited from initiating projects or originating plans for meeting the growing needs of commerce. It is desirable to continue the policy of keeping the military engineers in training and at the same time rendering their skilled service available in work on waterways, although it is not necessary to vest them with the power of initiative, which they have not exercised in the past and which is, perhaps, inconsistent with their primary duty in connection with the military establishment of which they form a part. A provision that the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall be a member of the commission proposed to be created, and a further provision specifically covering the detail of military engineers to the service of the commission whenever such detail shall be consistent with their military duties, would remove any possible ambiguity and would be in accord with the custom and policy of the War Department.

"THE WATERWAYS COMMISSION APPROVE.

"Here also is the letter of the Inland Waterways Commission, signed by Theodore E. Burton, chairman, which, referring to this bill, states as follows:

"1. Several of the leading provisions of the bill are in accord with the recommendations of the commission in a report submitted on Februrary 3 last and transmitted to the Congress by the President on February 26. Among these are (a) the provision for coordination of navigation with related uses of the waters; (b) the provision for cooperation between the Federal Government, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals; (c) the provision for correlating existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor in such manner as to secure effective administration; and (d) the provisions looking toward the control of running waters in such manner as to protect and promote navigation. In so far as these provisions are concerned, the bill has the unqualified approbation of the commission.

* * * * * * *

"3. The general purpose of the bill is in harmony with the comprehensive plan for improving and developing the waterways of the country framed by the commission and approved by the President in his message of February 26 last.

"It is fair to say that this expression was somewhat modified by Gen. Mackenzie, Chief of the Engineer Corps, whose views, however, as I recall, accord with the modified provisions of the pending amendment.

"I think the honored chairman of that committee, Mr. Burton, will bear witness with me as to the intelligent service rendered by the chiefs of the scientific services of the country who were on that commission. I am sure that ever since my experience with them I have had a higher idea of their efficiency, their capacity, and their high public spirit. I know of no organization in a business way in the country that surpasses the scientific services of the country in integrity and in efficiency."

THE INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

The Inland Waterways Commission was created by President Roosevelt on March 14, 1907, with the following membership: Hon. Theodore E. Burton, chairman; Senator Francis G. Newlands, vice chairman; Senator William Warner, Hon. John H. Bankhead, Gen. Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. W J McGee, Mr. F. H. Newell, Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Hon. Herbert Knox Smith.

The following brief summary of the activities of this commission is quoted from page 17 of its printed report:

"PROCEEDINGS.

"After conference and correspondence between the chairman and other commissioners, a meeting for organization was held in the United States Capitol, beginning April 20 and ending May 3 (1907). A second meeting and inspection trip on the Mississipi River from St. Louis to The Passes took place May 13 to May 23. A third meeting and inspection trip, first on the Great Lakes from Cleveland to Duluth, next on the Mississippi from St. Paul to Memphis, and then on the Missouri from Kansas City to St. Louis, took place September 21 to October 13. A fourth meeting was held in the United States Capitol, beginning on November 25, 1907, for the purpose of preparing a preliminary report; it ended February 3, 1908."

The report above referred to was adopted and transmitted to President Roosevelt on February 3, 1908, and by him transmitted to Congress on February 26, 1908.

The report was printed as Senate Document No. 325, Sixtieth Congress, first session, entitled "Preliminary Report of the Inland Waterways Commission."

The work of the Inland Waterways Commission ended with this report, on which no action was taken by Congress at that time.

Subsequently the United States National Waterways Commission, composed of 12 Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, was created by act of Congress of March 3, 1909.

The statute creating the National Waterways Commission provided that a preliminary report should be filed not later than January 1, 1910, containing conclusions reached by the commission upon the several subjects investigated. Such a report was made.

This United States National Waterways Commission, "having concluded its investigation of questions relating to water transportation and the improvement of waterways," ended its labors by the submission to Congress of its final report, which was ordered printed on March 25, 1912, and was thereafter printed as Senate Document No. 469, Sixty-second Congress, third session, entitled "Final Report of the National Waterways Commission."

The preliminary report of this commission was printed in full on pages 65 to 95 of that same volume.

No action based on these reports of the United States National Waterways Commission has ever been taken by Congress.

The action now taken by the adoption of the river-regulation policy embodied in section 18 of the pending river and harbor bill is in accordance with the recommendations not of the National Waterways Commission but of the Inland Waterways Commission, as set forth in the report of the Inland Waterways Commission made on February 3, 1916, the closing paragraph of the final recommendations of that report having been as follows:

"We recommend that the Congress be asked to authorize the coordination and proper development of existing public services connected with waterways, and we suggest that such enactment might provide that the President of the United States be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and organize a national waterways commission, to bring into coordination the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service in so far as their work relates to inland waterways, and that he be authorized to make such details and require such duties from these branches of the public service in connection with navigable and source streams as are not inconsistent with law; the said commission to continue the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the inland waterways of the country and the conservation of its natural resources related thereto, and to consider and coordinate therewith all matters of irrigation, swamp and overflow land reclamation, clarification and purification of streams, prevention of soil waste, utilization of water power, preservation and extension of forests, regulation of flow and control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and the relations between waterways and railways; and that the commission be empowered to frame and recommend plans for developing the waterways and utilizing the waters, and as authorized by Congress to carry out the same through established agencies, when such are available, in cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such manner as to secure equitable distribution of costs and benefits."

A comparison of the foregoing recommendation of the Inland Waterways Commission with the river-regulation amendment embodied in section 18 of the river and harbor bill of 1917, exemplifies the fact that after an interval of nine years and seven months, during which the report of the Inland Waterways Commission has lain dormant, and the commission has been out of existence, the tenacity of purpose of the advocates of river regulation has finally prevailed to the extent, at least, of securing the inauguration of so much of the national policy of river regulation as was recommended in the section quoted above from the report of the Inland Waterways Commission of February, 1908.

The complete statement of the conclusions of the Inland Waterways Commission, as embodied in this preliminary report of February 3, 1908, hereinbefore referred to, was as follows:

"The commission is fully aware that its creation was due to a demand of the people, and that there exists an expectation in certain localities that the report here presented will include plans extending in detail to the principal waterways of the country. To prepare and consider such plans would require extended study at large expense by engineers and other experts whose services were not available. Under the instructions from the President, and in the absence of funds and of the men and time required for such study, the commission was necessarily confined in preparing this preliminary report to the more general features of 'A comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country,' viz, a statement of principles and an outline of policy, coupled with recommendations which, if adopted, will insure the continuation of the work and the practical application of the principles and policy.

"FINDINGS.

"1. The possibilities of inland navigation are indicated by the fact that there are in mainland United States some 25,000 miles of navigated rivers and at least an equal amount which are navigable or might be made so by improvement; there are also some 2,500 miles of navigable canals and over 2,500 miles of sounds, bays, and bayous readily connectible by canals, aggregating less than 1,000 miles in length, to form inner passages paralleling the Atlantic and Gulf coasts—these being additional to some thousands of miles (reckoned between leading ports) of regularly navigated waters in lakes and land-locked bays. These waterways lie in or along the borders of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, i e., 42 States; while the development of rivers for irrigation, power, and other purposes will also render navigable certain waterways in Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming. Although it is not probable that any considerable share of this vast mileage of navigable waterways will be improved to a high standard of efficiency, at least at an early date, yet the assured growth of the country and the capacity of these waters, not only for navigation but for other uses, render imperative the necessity for their control and utilization as an asset of almost unlimited value. It is desirable that these waterways, of which portions have been surveyed or improved for purposes of navigation, should be further investigated with a view to the systematic development of interstate commerce in coordination with all other uses of the waters and benefits to be derived from them.

"2. While the railways of mainland United States have been notably efficient in extending and promoting the production and commerce of the country, it is clear that at seasons recurring with increasing frequency they are unable to keep pace with production or to meet the requirements of transportation.

"3. While navigation of the inland waterways declined with the increase in rail transportation during the later decades of the past century, it has become clear that the time is at hand for restoring and developing such inland navigation and water transportation as upon expert examination may appear to confer a benefit commensurate with the cost, to be utilized both independently and as a necessary adjunct to rail transportation.

"4. While the decline of navigation in the inland waterways was largely due to the natural growth and legitimate competition attending railway extension, it is also clear that railway interests have been successfully directed against the normal maintenance and development of water traffic by control of water fronts and terminals, by acquisition or control of competing canals and vessels, by discriminating tariffs, rebates, by adverse placement of tracks and structures, and by other means.

"5. Any complete or practically successful plan for the general improvement of waterways must eventually provide for satisfactory adjustment of the relation of rail lines to such waterways. Since present and prospective railways reach all parts of the country while navigable waterways are confined to certain natural lines, it is clear that railways can so control transportation as to leave the waterways insufficient traffic to support the requisite vessels and terminals. The railways have accordingly, save in certain exceptional cases, substantially absorbed the traffic of the country, and unless the present unrestricted and short-sighted competition between the two systems is intelligently adjusted they will continue to do so. So large a portion of railway traffic is free from water competition that railways can readily afford to so reduce rates on those portions affected by such competition as to destroy the profits of the water lines without appreciably affecting the profits of the rail systems which recoup these reductions by higher rates elsewhere. This has been the case with most of the great inland waterways, excepting the Great Lakes, where the conditions of water and traffic approach those of open seas. In spite of the great increase of traffic and the continued improvement of waterways, the total river traffic of the country has steadily decreased both proportionately and absolutely, with the result that few rivers are used to anything approaching their full capacity. It will not relieve traffic congestion to improve our waterways unless the improved waterways are used; hence it is obvious that relief from the existing congestion by waterway improvement can be made permanently effective through coordination of rail and water facilities as will insure harmonious cooperation rather than injurious opposition.

"6. Existing data as to the nature and amount of the internal commerce of the country are extremely meager and incomplete. Such information is essential to the intelligent treatment of the inland waterways, and it is desirable that means be employed to obtain it.

"7. Improvements of navigation in inland waterways in the main affect favorably the purity of the waters and the regularity of the supply, and these objects should be carefully kept in mind. The increasing pollution of streams by soil wash and other waste substances connected with a growing population reduces the value of the water for manufacturing purposes, and renders the water supply for communities injurious to and often destructive of human life. The prevention of these evils should be considered in any scheme of inland waterway improvement.

"8. Engineering works designed to improve navigation affect favorably the regimen of the streams, including floods and low waters. The annual floods of the United States occasion loss of property reaching many millions of dollars with considerable loss of life, while the low water of late summer involves large loss in diminished water supply, in reduced power, and in the fouling of streams with consequent disease and death. It has been claimed that in specific cases the cost of works required both to control floods and meet the needs of commerce would be less than the amount of this loss. It is desirable that more detailed information be collected concerning the effects of floods and low waters and their prevention by engineering works and other devices.

"9. The annual soil wash in mainland United States is estimated at about 1,000,000,000 tons, of which the greater part is the most valuable portion of the soil; it is carried into the rivers where it pollutes the waters, necessitates frequent and costly dredging, and reduces the efficiency of works designed to facilitate navigation and afford protection from floods. The direct and indirect losses from this source have not been measured, but are exceedingly large; and it is desirable that definite determinations be made with the view of devising means for reducing the loss to the land and preventing the impairment of the streams for purposes of commerce.

"10. Both the regimen of streams and the purity and clarity of waters are affected by forests and other natural growths and by farming, mining, and other industrial operations over the watersheds in which they gather. Millions of acres in mainland United States have been deforested unnecessarily, and the floods and low waters ascribed to this cause have in some localities occasioned losses commensurate with the value of the timber. Means should be devised and applied for coordinating forestry, farming, mining, and related industries with the uses of streams for commerce and for other purposes.

"11. The effect of wide variations in the level of navigable streams is to render difficult the establishment of necessary terminals for the handling of traffic, and thus to interfere seriously with the utilization of our inland waterways. The prevention or mitigation of such variations would be most helpful to the revival of river traffic, and means to this end should be adopted in plans for waterway improvement.

"12. The storage of flood waters combined with the diversion of streams to arid and semiarid lands for purposes of reclamation by irrigation creates canals and also tends to clarify the waters and increase the seepage or return waters during times of drought. There have already been put under irrigation over 10,000,000 acres of fertile land, adding a quarter of a million homes and several hundred million dollars of taxable wealth, and it is estimated that by fully conserving the waters and by utilizing the water power developed in connection with storage and other works fully three times as much land can be reclaimed in the western half of the United States. It is desirable to continue the collection of data with a view to so adjusting irrigation and power development with navigation and other uses of the streams as to secure the highest value of the water to the greatest number of people.

"13. Locks and certain other works designed to improve navigation commonly produce head and store water in such manner as to develop power available for industrial purposes, while works designed to develop power on navigable and source streams affect the navigation and other uses of river systems; and these uses must necessarily be considered together. Information concerning water power in the several States and sections is incomplete, yet it is known to be a vast and intrinsically permanent asset which should be utilized for the benefit of the people of the country, in whose interests it should be administered with careful regard for present and prospective conditions. The facts ascertained in certain specific cases furnish a basis for the claim that the value of the power would pay the cost of all engineering and other works required in such cases to control the streams for navigation and other uses. In the light of recent progress in electrical application, it is clear that over wide areas the appropriation of water power offers an unequaled opportunity for monopolistic control of industries. Whenever water is now or will hereafter become the chief source of power the monopolization of electricity produced from running streams involves monopoly of power for the transportation of freight and passengers, for manufacturing, and for supplying heat, light, and other domestic, agricultural, and municipal necessities to such an extent that unless regulated it will entail monopolistic control of the daily life of our people in an unprecedented degree. There is here presented an urgent need for prompt and vigorous action by State and Federal Governments.

"14. Any comprehensive system of improvement of inland waterways will necessarily affect the drainage or reclamation of swamp and overflow lands, which are mainly rich alluvial tracts largely along or near waterways. The construction of dikes and levees or bank-protective works and the deepening of channels are often closely connected with means of control both of overflow and of underflow by drainage. It is estimated that there are 77,000,000 acres of such land, now unproductive, but which, with drainage and protection from overflow, will have exceptionally high agricultural value; if divided into 40-acre farms, these lands will furnish homes for 10,000,000 people.

"15. The control of waterways on which successful navigation depends is so intimately connected with the prevention of floods and low waters and works designed for these purposes, with the protection and reclamation of overflow lands and works designed therefor; with the safeguarding of banks and maintenance of channels and works employed therein; with the purification and clarification of water supply and works designed therefor in conjunction with interstate commerce; with control and utilization of power developed in connection with works for the improvement of navigation; with the standardization of methods and facilities and the coordinating of waterway and railway instrumentalities; and throughout the larger areas of the country with reclamation by irrigation and drainage and works designed primarily for these purposes, that local and special questions concerning the control of waterways should be treated as a general question of national extent, while local or special projects should be considered as parts of a comprehensive policy of waterway control in the interests of all the people.

"16. Governmental agencies whose work is related to the use and control of streams are now in existence in the Federal Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor; and it is desirable, in order to prevent duplication of work and function and to avoid unnecessary delays in the development of the inland waterways, that means should be provided for coordinating all such agencies.

"17. While precise figures are not now obtainable, it is safe to say that the current value of our inland transportation facilities (of which railways form all but a small percentage) exceeds one-eighth of our national wealth; yet these facilities are so far inadequate that production is impaired and the growth of the country is retarded. While trustworthy estimates can not be made without further data, it is reasonable to anticipate that congestion of interstate commerce can be obviated in large measure by judicious improvement of waterways adapted to barge and boat traffic at a figure much less than that estimated by competent authorities for so increasing railway facilities as to meet present needs. It is desirable that additional data be obtained by requisite expert investigation.

"18. It is conservative to estimate that judicious improvement of the waterways of the country will confer direct benefits through increased transportation facilities which will exceed the cost, while the collateral benefits will be at least comparable with the gain to commerce. Under a coordinated plan, such collateral benefits as the enhanced value of lands reclaimed by irrigation and drainage, the value of water power developed, the increased values due to the prevention of floods and low waters, and the great benefits of purified and clarified water will more than balance the cost of the works.

"19. In a comprehensive system of water improvement and control designed to meet present and future needs, the practicability of any project will depend not alone on local and general demands of commerce, but measurably on attendant natural and industrial conditions, including nature of banks and bed, suitability of the ground as a foundation for works, volume of water, and liability to floods and low stages, configuration of the watershed and its susceptibility to control by judicious agriculture and forestry or by reservoirs and other means, local and general demand for pure-water supply, amount and value of available water power incident to the works, proximity and cost of structural material, relations to existing and prospective projects on the same and neighboring waterways, and all other physical and economic factors entering into or tending to counterbalance the cost; and the local surveys or plans for any project should take account of all such natural and industrial conditions and be adapted to the attainment of maximum benefits at the minimum cost.

"20. Existing data concerning the volume, regimen, and other physical features of most streams are meager and imperfect. Since plans for improving and controlling the waterways and utilizing the waters must rest on these facts it is desirable that means be employed to extend and perfect physical data relating to the navigable and source streams of the country.

"21. The benefits of a comprehensive system of waterway improvement will extend to all the people in the several sections and States of the country, and the means employed should be devised, so far as possible, to distribute the cost equitably through cooperation between Federal agencies, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals.

"22. In order to improve the inland waterways for navigation and at the same time coordinate the agencies and means of transportation, develop the collateral benefits of waterway improvement, adapt all natural and industrial conditions related with waterways to the attainment of maximum benefits at the minimum cost, and perfect means for distributing the cost equitably between Federal agencies, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in a prompt and efficient and economical manner, it is desirable to maintain an administrative agency with large powers for the investigation and elaboration of projects under suitable legislative regulation.

"23. The immediate use of natural resources in the rapid development of the country are often allowed to stand in the way of more beneficent and permanent utilization. This is especially true of all resources connected with running waters, the substantial value of which has not been adequately appreciated. It is clearly practicable, without undue expense or interference with current use, to carry out broad plans for the complete development of the resources of the country, and thus assure to the greatest number of people the greatest good for both the present and the future, while if this is not done the temporary or partial development of these resources will prevent their full utilization for the general benefit. Steps should be taken without delay to outline and initiate the more pressing projects of conservation and to apply practically the principle of conservation before it is too late.

"24. Our unsurpassed natural wealth and the eagerness of our people for immediate results regardless of future needs have led to a policy of extravagant consumption of natural resources and to an encouragement of monopoly, whereby an excessive share of such resources has been diverted to the enrichment of the few rather than preserved for the equitable benefit of the many. Monopolistic tendencies have appeared (a) in the extensive control of mineral fuels on public lands, whereby large values essential to the development of the country have passed beyond public regulation; (b) in the acquisition and needless destruction of forests, whose preservation is a public necessity for stream control, for timber supply, and for other purposes; (c) in the acquisition of controlling sites on waterways and the appropriation of valuable water powers with their segregation from public uses without adequate compensation, whereby indispensable utilities escape public regulation in the interests of the people; (d) in the segregation of lands, especially in the semi-arid regions, whereby development is retarded, so that the lands remain without benefit to commerce or advantage to the growth of the country; (e) in the control of products and of transportation to disturb the normal values and natural channels of trade, thereby imposing undue burdens on producers and consumers; and (f) in various interferences with the production and commerce of the country, whereby prosperity is curtailed and progress impeded. While such monopolistic tendencies have been conspicuous in connection with the agencies of transportation, they are now in many cases opposing the best utilization of streams by diverting their control from State and Federal jurisdiction in the public interests to personal and corporate means of excessive and burdensome profits. Since transportation is a primary factor in the existence and development of any people, and is increasingly important with the growth of population, it is essential that its means should be regulated in the public interests; and any plans for relieving congestion of transportation in the United States should be so framed as to employ all proper State, Federal, and municipal agencies in protecting from monopolistic control not only the agencies and avenues but also the materials of interstate commerce.

"RECOMMENDATIONS.

"A. We recommend that hereafter plans for the improvement of navigation in inland waterways, or for any use of these waterways in connection with interstate commerce, shall take account of the purification of the waters, the development of power, the control of floods, the reclamation of lands by irrigation and drainage, and all other uses of the waters or benefits to be derived from their control.

"B. We recommend that hereafter both local and general benefits to the people shall be fully considered in any such plans for the improvement of navigation in inland waterways or for any use of these waterways in connection with interstate commerce; and that wherever practicable Federal agencies shall cooperate with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals with a view to an equitable distribution of costs and benefits.

"C. We recommend that hereafter any plans for the navigation or other use of inland waterways in connection with interstate commerce shall take full account of transfer facilities and sites and of the location of tracks, grades, bridges, dams, depots, and other works on navigable and source streams with a view to equitable cooperation between waterway and railway facilities for the promotion of commerce and the benefit of the people.

"D. We recommend that any plans for improving the inland waterways shall take account of the present and prospective relation of rail lines to such waterways, and shall ascertain so far as may be whether such waterways when improved will be effectively used in the face of railway competition; and that the relations between railways and waterways be further examined with the purpose of devising means of rendering the two systems complementary and harmonious and making such fair division of traffic that rates and management may be coordinated economically and with benefit to the country.

"E. We recommend the adoption of means for ascertaining regularly all facts related to traffic on the inland waterways and for publishing the same in a form suitable for general use.

"F. We recommend the adoption of means for ascertaining and rendering available, at such rate as to meet public necessities, all requisite data related to the physical character and general utility of the navigable and source streams of the country.

"G. We recommend that hereafter any plans for the use of inland waterways in connection with interstate commerce shall regard the streams of the country as an asset to the people, shall take full account of the conservation of all resources connected with running waters, and shall look to the protection of these resources from monopoly and to their administration in the interests of the people.

"H. We recommend that the Congress be asked to make suitable provision for improving the inland waterways of the United States at a rate commensurate with the needs of the people as determined by competent authority; and we suggest that such provision meet these requisites, viz, expert framing of a definite policy; certainty of continuity and coordination of plan and work; expert initiative in the choice of projects and the succession of works; freedom in selection of projects in accordance with terms of cooperation; and the widest opportunity for applying modern business methods.

"I. We recommend that the Congress be asked to authorize the coordination and proper development of existing public services connected with waterways; and we suggest that such enactment might provide that the President of the United States be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and organize a National Waterways Commission, to bring into coordination the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service in so far as their work relates to inland waterways, and that he be authorized to make such details and require such duties from these branches of the public service in connection with navigable and source streams as are not inconsistent with law; the said commission to continue the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the inland waterways of the country and the conservation of its natural resources related thereto, and to consider and coordinate therewith all matters of irrigation, swamp, and overflow land reclamation, clarification and purification of streams, prevention of soil waste, utilization of water power, preservation and extension of forests, regulation of flow and control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and the relations between waterways and railways; and that the commission be empowered to frame and recommend plans for developing the waterways and utilizing the waters, and as authorized by Congress to carry out the same, through established agencies when such are available, in cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals, in such manner as to secure equitable distribution of costs and benefits.

"SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF COMMISSIONER SENATOR FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

"I concur in the report of the commission, but desire to emphasize my belief that it is of the highest importance that in dealing with subjects relating to the respective powers, rights, and interests of the Nation, States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals large powers and a comparatively free hand should be given to an administrative body of experts in the full development of projects, lest the complexity of the transactions, the time necessary to secure congressional approval, and difference of view as to purpose of method may result in indecision and delay, the worst enemies of effective development.

"An ample fund should be provided, to be reenforced from time to time either by legislative appropriation or by bond issue, and the administrative board or commission should be given the power not only to investigate projects but also, when determined to be feasible, to enter, with the approval of the President, upon their immediate execution; but the power should be limited so as to prevent such administrative body from entering into any contract unless there are sufficient unappropriated moneys in the fund to meet the cost thereof.

"Unless some method of construction and development insuring prompt decision and execution and continuous and consecutive work by a body of experts is adopted, I fear that the best of projects may be wrecked in the shoals and quicksands of legislation.

"FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS."

The statement above set forth of the findings and recommendations of the Inland Waterways Commission will be found on pages 18 to 27 and the supplementary report of Commissioner Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, on pages 30 and 31 of the Preliminary Report of the Inland Waterways Commission, Senate Document No. 325, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

It also appears, as above republished, in Senate Document No. 550, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "River Regulation, Flood Control, and Water Conservation and Utilization. Hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, on S. 5736, a bill to promote interstate commerce, agriculture, and the general welfare by providing for the development and control of waterways and water resources; for water conservation; for flood control, prevention, and protection; for the application of flood waters to beneficial uses; and for cooperation in such work with States and other agencies, and for other purposes," pages 147 to 153.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S RECOMMENDATION.

In the letter of transmittal by the President to Congress of the report of the Inland Waterways Commission on February 26, 1908, President Roosevelt closed the letter with the following urgent recommendation:

"The development of our waterways and the conservation of our forests are the two most pressing physical needs of the country. They are interdependent, and they should be met vigorously, together, and at once. The questions of organization, powers, and appropriations are now before Congress. There is urgent need for prompt and decisive action."

EVOLUTION OF NEWLANDS RIVER-REGULATION BILL.

From that time until the present the effort to secure action from Congress has never ceased. The campaign has been steadfastly and continuously conducted. In nearly every session of Congress measures have been urged by Senator NEWLANDS with a view to securing action that would inaugurate the broad and comprehensive river regulation, waterways, and water resources national policy embodied in the river-regulation amendment which Congress has now adopted. Until this session no such comprehensive legislation has been enacted. Congress has confined its action to such incomplete, inadequate, and piecemeal or local legislation as the White Mountain and Appalachian National Forest Reserve act, passed in February, 1911, and the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers flood-control act, passed at the last session.

The following references to bills introduced and to debates and remarks in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, and to public addresses and articles in newspapers, periodicals, and magazines by Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, from 1894 to 1917, furnishes a historical reference record, extending over a period of 23 years, of the development of the river-regulation movement from the reclamation movement originating in the West, and of the evolution of congressional action relating to that movement, from the earliest measures introduced down to the final inauguration of the comprehensive river regulation and waterways and water resources policy embodied in the river-regulation amendment, section 18, of the river and harbor bill of August, 1917.

January 31, 1914: Introduced an amendment in the nature of a substitute for S. 2739, this substitute bearing the same number, and being known as the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill. It is printed in full in the RECORD of this date. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 51, pt. 3, pp. 2635–2638. 2640.)

In his remarks on the introduction of this bill, Senator NEWLANDS said:

I wish to introduce the bill which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill (S. 2739) known throughout the country as the Newlands river-regulation bill, submitted by me on July 14, 1913. This substitute is intended to remove all doubt as to the purpose of the original bill regarding the Mississippi River. It proposes to make the Mississippi River, with its banks, its levees, its spillways, and its cut-offs, a national highway.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this same date, following the bill, articles were printed entitled, as follows:

1. Editorial from the Memphis News-Scimitar, January 15, 1914.

2. Editorial from the Mobile Item, January 22, 1914.

3. Resolutions of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, fourteenth annual session, Seattle, Wash., Augut 18–21, 1903.

4. Flood control—Impounding waters at their sources, by George H. Maxwell. From the Southern Lumberman, Nashville, Tenn., December, 1914. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 51, pt. 3, pp. 2634–2640.)

June 22, 1914: River-regulation amendment to rivers and harbors bill introduced, with explanatory remarks. Amendment printed in RECORD and referred to Senate Committee on Commerce. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 51, pt. 11, pp. 10833–10834.)

July 9, 1914: Debate; discussion of the river-regulation amendment, the Newlands-Broussard bill, and the river and harbor bill. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 51, pt. 12, pp. 11864–11866.)

December 23, 1914: Reintroduction river-regulation amendment, remarks on river-regulation bill, Democratic platforms, 1908–1912.

In the course of his remarks Senator NEWLANDS said:

"The President, without committing himself to this or any measure, is inclined to favor the general principles of the bill; but he does not think that there is time enough for its consideration at the short session.

"While I am reluctant to lessen the pressure for legislation on this important question, and believe that the force of public sentiment should be continuously exerted, and while I have reason to believe that the measure which I have been advocating has the support of thinking people in every section of the country, I can not take exception to the position of the President, burdened as he is with the advocacy of other measures of great importance. I have therefore concluded not to press the matter in any form at this session unless a decided change in the conditions takes place.

"I wish, however, to impress the friends of river regulation and water development with these facts:

"First. That public opinion is against the present system of river and harbor improvements.

"Second. That the committees of the Senate and House are favorable to the present system and will abandon it with great reluctance.

"Third. That it is necessary for that reason to maintain the pressure of a sound public opinion in order to force the consideration of the measure.

"To this end I think it important that the development of the rivers should be entirely separated from the development of the harbors. The harbors are a part of foreign commerce. The rivers are a part of interstate commerce. The harbors bill should go to the Commerce Committee in the Senate. The river-regulation bill should, in my judgment, in the Senate go to the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which I am chairman, and not to the Commerce Committee, as the chairman of the Commerce Committee contends.

"In the Senate this bill now lies on the table awaiting the determination of the Senate itself as to which committee the bill shall go. If it goes to the Interstate Commerce Committee, we can then formulate all the necessary legislation that will make river development dovetail with the development of railroad transportation. Provisions can be secured in that legislation that will prevent the destruction of river transportation by the unfair competition of the railroads. Interstate commerce is one subject, and it should not be divided between two committees.

"For the reasons above given I have concluded not to press the river-regulation bill at this session, but to press it with vigor at the next session of Congress, and I urge all who feel the importance of river regulation to bring the weight of their personal influence to its support. It has been indorsed throughout the entire country by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and waterway associations. It has been hospitably received by the press of the country. It has received the indorsement of several State legislatures. It is the only concrete measure upon which public opinion can be concentrated. It is no new thing.

"Pressure for the bill gives concrete expression to a favorable public sentiment regarding the principles of the bill and does away with the necessity for tedious elaboration in its advocacy. I invite the hearty support of all people who believe that water is a valuable asset; that it should be conserved and regulated as such, and that its highest uses should be developed and maintained with scientific accuracy. As the President so happily expressed it to the irrigation congress at Salt Lake, 'the floods should be turned from a menace into a blessing.'

"Now, Mr. President, I offer, but not with a view to pressing the matter, an amendment to the river and harbor bill similar to the one which I offered at the last session. That amendment refers simply to the organization of the commission, and not to the creation of a fund."

The river-regulation amendment above referred to is printed in the RECORD of this date. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 52, pt. 1, pp. 623–624.)

February 4, 1916: Remarks in protest against inadequate methods of dealing with flood problem. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 3, p. 2105.)

February 19, 1916: The Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill proposed as an amendment to the Shields water-power bill (S. 3331). (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 3, p. 2805.)

March 8, 1916: Debate. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 4, pp. 3732–3736.)

April 11, 1916: Senator NEWLANDS presented the following documents, which were printed in full in the RECORD:

1. Telegram from Walter Parker, general manager New Orleans Association of Commerce, to Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, dated February 15, 1916, and containing a copy of telegram from Woodrow Wilson to FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, president Irrigation Congress, Salt Lake, Utah, dated Seagirt, N. J., September 20, 1912.

2. Letter from President Woodrow Wilson to Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, United States Senate, dated the White House, April 3, 1916, transmitting report of the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee, dated Washington, February 26, 1916, and signed by the Secretaries of Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 6, p. 5871.)

April 11, 1916: Remarks by Senator NEWLANDS explaining the difference between the Ransdell-Humphreys flood-control bill and the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill, and the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee with relation to both bills. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 6, p. 5872.)

April 17, 1916: Senator NEWLANDS introduced river-regulation amendment to river and harbor bill (H. R. 12193) with the following remarks:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the river and harbor bill, embracing the recommendations of the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce to the President of the United States, regarding a full and broad system of river regulation and control. These recommendations were recently transmitted to me by the President of the United States in a letter, which, with the accompanying recommendations, were at my instance recently printed in the RECORD. They were recommendations made by an interdepartmental committee appointed by the President two years ago, consisting of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce. Owing to a vacancy in the War Secretaryship the recommendations were signed only by the three other Secretaries, but I am informed that the recently appointed Secretary of War is in harmony with them. The letter of the President and the recommendations of the Secretaries will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 11, 1916." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 7, p. 6269.)

The river-regulation amendment introduced as aforesaid on April 17, 1916, is printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, pages 6269–6270.

April 24, 1916: Introduced S. 5736. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 7, p. 6688.)

May 9, 1916: Remarks prompted by discussion of appropriation in rivers and harbors bill as to floods in Kansas; conference at office of governor of Kansas; inadequacy of flood-control bill. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 8, p. 7656.)

May 18, 1916: Remarks: Flood-control bill; correspondence with Hon. B. G. HUMPHREYS. The Humphreys bill and the Newlands bill printed in parallel columns. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 8, pp. 8232–8235.)

May 18, 1916: Remarks: Coordination of rail and water transportation. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 8, p. 8248.)

May 22, 1916: Remarks in protest against piecemeal character of river and harbor appropriations and urging necessity of comprehensive plan. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, pp. 8435–8437.)

May 24, 1916: Debate, same subject, and also flood-control bill; protest against organization of National Waterways Commission in March, 1909; investigation should now be followed by the actual work of construction. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, pp. 8568–8572.)

May 26, 1916: Remarks: Shafroth amendment requiring 20 per cent contribution from States on river and harbor improvements. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, pp. 8703–8705.)

May 26, 1917: Introduced river-regulation amendment to river and harbor bill, H. R. 12193, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, p. 8729.)

May 27, 1917: River-regulation amendment offered, the river and harbor bill being under consideration:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to offer the same amendment that was offered and put into the river and harbor bill some three years ago regarding the creation of a river regulation commission with powers of coordination and cooperation. * * *

"Mr. CLARKE (chairman of the Commerce Committee). I trust that the Senate will permit the amendment to be adopted without comment. * * *"

The amendment was read and appears in full in the RECORD of this date on page 8763. The point of order being made against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, the amendment was temporarily withdrawn. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, p. 8763.)

May 29, 1917: River-regulation amendment again offered, with the following remarks:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I renew the amendment I offered the other day, an amendment which was inserted in the river and harbor bill some two years ago by the Senate. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, p. 8832.)"

The amendment was subsequently stricken out on a reserved point of order. (See p. 8835.)

May 31, 1917: Debate as to reference of flood-control bill, H. R. 14777: An act to provide for the control of floods in the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers; relation of flood control to waterway transportation. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 9, pp. 8953–8957.)

August 1, 1916: Remarks prompted by floods in Alabama, North and South Carolina. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 53, pt. 12, p. 11908.)

December 21, 1916: Introduced a bill (S. 7510) providing for the control of waterways and water resources, for water conservation for flood control, prevention, and protection. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 54, pt. 1, p. 635.)

February 10, 1917: Remarks:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether there is reported in the river and harbor bill a provision for the organization of a waterways commission, composed of departmental chiefs and distinguished engineers who are to make a thorough study of all the questions that relate to the development of our waterways for navigation and other purposes?"

The chairman of the Commerce Committee replied that such provision had been embodied in the bill, and the amendment (the river-regulation amendment) is printed on page 2990 of the RECORD. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 54, pt. 3, pp. 2989–2990.)

February 26, 1917: Debate: Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers flood-control bill, on the passage of the bill. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 54, pt. 3, pp. 4282, 4290, 4292, 4294, 4298.)

THE NEWLANDS RIVER-REGULATION AMENDMENT.

The first Newlands river-regulation amendment was introduced in the Senate as an amendment to the river and harbor bill by Senator NEWLANDS, on February 16, 1910, and on February 18 was reintroduced by him, with a brief amendment, and is printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the latter date.

At that time Senator NEWLANDS addressed the Senate on the subject of this amendment, and from his remarks the following is quoted:

"THE WATERWAY CAMPAIGN.

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the question of the development of the waterways of the country has been receiving great attention within the past few years. Various organizations have been formed throughout the country relating to the development of our waterways, associations appropriately named for the promotion of such development in the Mississippi Valley, on the various tributaries of the Mississippi, on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf coasts. This movement reached such headway through conventions and river and harbor congresses that Mr. Roosevelt, then President, took the matter in hand and appointed a commission in aid of his power of recommendation to Congress, called 'the Inland Waterways Commission,' which made a preliminary report to him, which report was subsequently submitted to Congress.

"It was my privilege to serve on that commission, and whilst a member of it I introduced a bill, Senate bill No. 500, in the Sixtieth Congress, first session, for the organization of an inland waterway commission, for the coordination of the various scientific services of the Government that related in any way to the development of our waterways and water resources, and for cooperation between the Nation and the States, municipalities, and private interests in the development of these waterways. That bill, with certain modifications, was approved by the then Secretary of War and by the Inland Waterways Commission, of which Mr. Burton, of Ohio, was the chairman. It was referred to the Commerce Committee and there considered. But it did not come up for passage.

"Since then Congress itself took the matter in hand and appointed a National Waterways Commission, composed entirely of Senators and Representatives, the previous Inland Waterways Commission appointed by the President under his executive power of recommendation being a mixed commission, consisting of two Senators, two Members of the House of Representatives, and five others—the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army, the Chief of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Forestry Service, the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, and the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations.

"Both these commissions have agreed substantially upon the lines of their recommendation as to legislation. They have declared for coordination of the scientific and constructive services of the Government in this great work and for the cooperation of the Nation with States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals that have any jurisdiction over or any right or interest in the development of our waterways, the purpose being to unite the information, the experience of the scientific services of the Government, and to unite the energies of all the various sovereignties and of all the corporations and individuals having jurisdiction over or interest in the water resources of the country in developing our waterways, not only for navigation, but for every other useful purpose.

"THE RELATED USES OF WATER.

"Mr. President, I imagine that there will be little difference of opinion that these related questions of forestry, of the reclamation of arid lands, of the drainage of swamp lands, of the development of water power, and the clarification of streams, all have a relation to the development of waterways for the purpose of navigation. The development of a waterway for navigation may be entirely impracticable because of its cost; but if we can unite with the development of that waterway the reclamation of the arid lands above, the drainage of swamp lands below, and the intermediate development of valuable water power, we then add to the natural resources of the country and create values which in themselves will be compensatory of the entire work, whereas the work would not be in any measure self-compensatory if confined to navigation alone.

"We have in this Government various scientific services, services of a very high standard, services of great esprí de corps, services that have won the admiration and respect not only of Congress, but of the entire country. These services are now acting entirely separate and apart from each other, and yet they are all practically acting upon parts of the same subject matter.

"We have the Engineer Corps of the Army operating simply upon the question of navigation. Their efforts thus far have been largely confined simply to the maintenance of a stable channel through the operations of dredging and bank protection. We have the Reclamation Service engaged in the diversion of the flood waters of the upper reaches of streams, carrying those flood waters over the arid lands, and thus aiding in the prevention of the extraordinary floods which impair the efficiency of the channel of the river below. We have in them an agency for flood prevention and for the storage of the flood waters which will aid and promote navigation. Then, we have below vast areas of swamp land, rich with alluvial soil, the deposits of ages, almost useless because of the annual overflow, and the channel of the river itself so scattered and diverse as not to permit navigation anywhere.

"The problem there is to make one navigable channel by bank protection and by bank levees, and by one process thus clear the channel for navigation and at the same time promote the reclamation of vast areas of rich and fertile land. So, also, in the development of our works for navigation we are compelled in places to provide for dams and locks in the rapids of the river where there is a rapid fall, and those dams and locks are useful for the development of water power, which in itself is partly compensatory of the project.

"We have, then, the Reclamation Service; we have the Forestry Service; we have the Weather Service; we have the Soils Service; we have the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and we have the Geological Survey, all of them engaged in the study of questions relating to water, its development, and its regulation and control. Is it not the businesslike thing to provide some method by which those services can be brought together for consultation and joint action?

"The purpose of this amendment is to permit the President of the United States to bring into coordination, through a board or boards, these related services; to bring them into coordination with the Corps of Engineers of the Army, leaving that as the central organization in connection with the development of our waterways, as it has been for so many years, but giving it the benefit of the advice and the accumulated experience and information of these great services which have been making a study of similar subjects.

"WATER AND RAIL COOPERATION.

"Then there is the question of transportation. The National Waterways Commission in its very elaborate and able report presents the question of the development of our waterways in connection with railways, insisting that the decline of waterway transportation thus far has been due to the fact that the railways have discouraged water transportation and have sought by unfair competition to destroy it. So, in connection with this great work, we should be allowed the opportunity of calling upon the great transportation experts of the country, and also the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission themselves, for the purpose of advising this board, or these boards, regarding methods that will bring water and rail into cooperation and make each the friend and ally instead of the enemy of the other.

"TRANSPORTATION A CHARGE ON OUR NATURAL RESOURCES.

"The railroad managers have declared that it is essential, in order to meet the transportation requirements of the country in the near future, that at least $5,000,000,000 shall be expended upon the railways of the country. That $5,000,000,000 is a charge upon the natural resources of the country, as is so well stated in the report of the national commission. The interest upon it, amounting to at least $250,000,000 annually, will be paid by the shippers of the country, and is it not a wise thing for us to consider whether we can not reduce in part the necessity for such enormous expenditure by spending within the next 10 years $500,000,000, and even perhaps a billion dollars in the aggregate? It is reasonable to suppose that the expenditure of a billion dollars in waterway transportation at the rate of $100,000,000 a year during the next 10 years will save more than half of the necessary expenditure of $5,000,000,000 upon the railways.

"Why is it that the railways have been unequal to the transportation requirements of the country? Why was it that two or three years ago they broke down just before the panic? It was simply because the railroads were made the agencies of transporting the bulky and cheap products of the country, products which could be better and more cheaply carried by water, and in reference to the transportation of which time was not an essential. Inquire of any railroad man, and you will find that the breaking down of the transportation system of the country was not due to the transportation of the high-priced products, which pay high freight, but to the coarser products, the products of the mine, the products of the field and the farm, such products as in Germany are carried mainly by waterway transportation, and which in this country, if we perfect our waterway transportation, can be carried largely upon the rivers of the country; so that it is important for us to act now and to establish the system under which we are to proceed.

"The amendment which I have offered, whilst not going so far as I would desire to do, as indicated in my appendix to the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, goes as far as the judgment of Congress will at present sanction; but I believe that, so far as providing for coordination of the scientific services of the country, providing for comprehensive plans, and for cooperation between the Nation and the States is concerned, Congress will readily see the propriety of this amendment. Then we will have enlisted not only the information and experience of the Engineer Corps of the Army, but the information and experience of every scientific service of the Government and the services of the best engineers, constructors, and transportation experts of the country in the solution of these important problems; and we can enter upon this great work with comprehensive plans, assigning to each sovereign its duty, to each interest its duty, properly apportioning costs and benefits, instead of entering upon an accidental and disjointed development, which may result, I fear, in the shipwreck of the waterway movement of the country."

* * * * * * *

"THE GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE.

"If you will read the report of the conference of the governors, unanimously acquiesced in by the governors of the great States, you will find the principles of coordination and of cooperation, such as are outlined in this amendment clearly sustained and vindicated.

"I quote from the declaration of the governors, as follows:

"We declare our firm conviction that this conservation of our natural resources is a subject of transcendent importance which should engage unremittingly the attention of the Nation, the States, and the people in earnest cooperation. These natural resources include the land on which we live and which yields our food; the living waters which fertilize the soil, supply power, and form great avenues of commerce; the forests which yield the materials for our homes, prevent erosion of the soil, and conserve the navigation and other uses of the streams; and the minerals which form the basis of our industrial life, and supply us with heat, light, and power.

"We agree that the land should be so used that erosion and soil wash shall cease; and that there should be reclamation of arid and semiarid regions by means of irrigation, and of swamp and overflowed regions by means of drainage; that the waters should be so conserved and used as to promote navigation, to enable the arid regions to be reclaimed by irrigation, and to develop power in the interests of the people; that the forests, which regulate our rivers, support our industries, and promote the fertility and productiveness of the soil should be preserved and perpetuated; that the minerals found so abundantly beneath the surface should be so used as to prolong their utility; that the beauty, healthfulness, and habitability of our country should be preserved and increased; that the sources of national wealth exist for the benefit of the people, and that monopoly thereof should not be tolerated.

"We commend the wise forethought of the President in sounding the note of warning as to the waste and exhaustion of the natural resources of the country, and signify our high appreciation of his action in calling this conference to consider the same and to seek remedies therefor through cooperation of the Nation and the States.

"We agree that this cooperation should find expression in suitable action by the Congress within the limits of and coextensive with the national jurisdiction of the subject, and, complementary thereto, by the legislatures of the several States within the limits of and coextensive with their jurisdiction.

"We declare the conviction that in the use of the national resources our independent States are interdependent and bound together by ties of mutual benefits, responsibilities, and duties.

* * * * * * *

"We recognize in our waters a most valuable asset of the people of United States, and we recommend the enactment of laws looking to the conservation of water resources for irrigation, water supply, power, and navigation, to the end that navigable and source streams may be brought under complete control and fully utilized for every purpose. We especially urge on the Federal Congress the immediate adoption of a wise, active, and thorough waterway policy, providing for the prompt improvement of our streams and the conservation of their watersheds required for the uses of commerce and the protection of the interests of our people."

The Newlands river-regulation amendment was agreed to by the Senate as an amendment to the river and harbor bill on February 23, 1913, but was stricken out in conference, as will be seen by reference to the debates in the Senate on the river and harbor bill on March 1, 1913. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 49, pt. 5, pp. 4365–4376, 4388, 4427–4428.)

On June 22, 1914, Senator NEWLANDS again introduced the river-regulation amendment, and from his remarks in the Senate at that time the following is quoted:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill, and I desire to make a brief statement in connection therewith.

"Ever since 1907 I have been urging the adoption of a river-regulation bill, providing a commission with a fund of $60,000,000 annually for 10 years, for the purpose of promoting the development and control of our rivers in the interest of irrigation, and also with a view to the solution of the related questions of irrigation, forestry, fisheries, swamp-land reclamation, flood control, water-power development, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites. Two years ago I succeeded in placing an amendment upon the river and harbor bill in the Senate providing for the skeleton organization covered by this bill, but the amendment was lost in conference because of the opposition of the House conferees. Since then, as the result of conferences with Senator RANSDELL and Senator elect Broussard, of Louisiana, the bill has been amended by fully recognizing the Mississippi River as a national problem, and the bill now has the active cooperation of these gentlemen, Mr. Broussard having recently introduced it in the House. The bill is now known as the Newlands-Broussard bill.

"Early in the present administration the President's attention was called to the bill as a substantial compliance with the Democratic platforms of the past two campaigns, calling in the most specific terms for comprehensive plans, an ample fund, the coordination of the scientific services, and the cooperation of the Nation with the States in the full development and control of our rivers for every useful purpose. The President was much interested, and referred the bill to a Cabinet committee consisting of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce for their study and report. This Cabinet committee is very favorably inclined toward the general lines of the bill, but recommends as a step in the ultimate solution of the problem the adoption of an amendment to the river and harbor bill practically on the lines of the amendment offered by me two years ago and adopted in the Senate. The matter has been the subject of discussion at a Cabinet meeting, and the President approves of this action.

"The most important difference between this amendment and the full bill is that it does not carry the large and continuing appropriation for which the advocates of a comprehensive plan of waterway development have been working. It does, however, provide complete machinery for the coordination of the scientific services of the Government, for the study of the problems involved, and for the formulation of plans. The amendment has the approval of the Secretaries of the departments named, as well as of the President, and is acceptable to me as a step in the right direction, although it does not go as far as I had hoped it might be carried. It is my belief that upon such a substantial foundation, with the cordial cooperation of the administration, it will be a question of only a comparatively short time until the problem of how to conserve our water resources will be solved in the best possible way.

"I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce."

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"SEC. —. That a commission, to be known as the river-regulation commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, two Members of the Senate to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to investigate questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, forestry, fisheries, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and to formulate, if practicable, and to report to the Congress comprehensive plans for the development of the waterways and water resources of the country for every useful purpose through cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control, if any, as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion, if any, as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States. Such river-regulation commission is authorized, for the purpose of said investigation and report, to bring into coordination and cooperation with the Corps of Engineers of the Army, as a board or boards, the other scientific or constructive services of the United States that relate to the study, development, and control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, and to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, and to consider as a part of its study of a comprehensive plan the continuance of such a board or of such boards with a view to keeping such services in coordination and cooperation; and such river-regulation commission is authorized to appoint as members of such board or boards such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development, constructors, and other employees as it may deem advisable to appoint and employ in connection with the investigation and the formulation of plans herein authorized, and to lease offices. And for the expenses of such investigation, organization, and formulation of plans the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated."

The river-regulation amendment finally passed by Congress on August 3, 1917, and which became a law by the signature of the President on August 8, 1917, is section 18 of H. R. 4285, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," Public, No. 37, Sixty-fifth Congress, is as follows:

"SEC. 18. That a commission, to be known as the Waterways Commission, consisting of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, at least one of whom shall be chosen from the active or retired list of the Engineer Corps of the Army, at least one of whom shall be an expert hydraulic engineer from civil life, and the remaining five of whom may each be selected either from civil life or the public service, is hereby created and authorized, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress that relate to study, development, or control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, or to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services in investigating, with respect to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, drainage, forestry, arid and swamp land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, storage, and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, to secure the necessary data, and to formulate and report to Congress as early as practicable a comprehensive plan or plans for the development of waterways and the water resources of the United States for the purposes of navigation and for every useful purpose, and recommendations for the modification or discontinuance of any project herein or heretofore adopted. Any member appointed from the retired list shall receive the same pay and allowances as he would if on the active list, and no member selected from the public service shall receive additional compensation for services on said commission, and members selected from civil life shall receive compensation of $7,500 per annum.

"In all matters done, or to be done, under this section relating to any of the subjects, investigations, or questions to be considered hereunder, and in formulating plans, and in the preparation of a report or reports, as herein provided, consideration shall be given to all matters which are to be undertaken, either independently by the United States or by cooperation between the United States and the several States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portions as belong to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests.

"The commission is authorized to employ or retain and fix the compensation for the services of such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development and utilization, and constructors of eminence as it may deem necessary to make such investigations and to carry out the purposes of this section. And in order to defray the expenses made necessary by the provisions of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as Congress may hereafter determine, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, available until expended, to be paid out upon warrants drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury by the chairman of said commission.

"The commission shall have power to make every expenditure requisite for and incident to its authorized work, and to employ in the District of Columbia and in the field such clerical, legal, engineering, artistic, and expert services as it may deem advisable, including the payment of per diem in lieu of subsistence for employees engaged in field work or traveling on official business, rent of offices in the District of Columbia and in the field, and the purchase of books, maps, and office equipment.

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed to delay, prevent, or interfere with the completion of any survey, investigation, project, or work herein or heretofore or hereafter adopted or authorized upon or for the improvement of any of the rivers or harbors of the United States or with legislative action upon reports heretofore or hereafter presented."

The following is a copy of S. 5736, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, introduced April 24, 1916, by Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS with a view to embodying in the Newlands river-regulattion bill the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee and the Interdepartmental Committee of Service Chiefs, appointed by President Wilson:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $60,000,000, to be apportioned as hereinafter provided, is hereby reserved, set aside, appropriated, and made available until expended, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the 'river-regulation fund,' to be used to promote interstate commerce by the development and improvement of the rivers and waterways of the United States and their connections with the Great Lakes and with each other, and by the coordination of and cooperation between rail and water routes and transportation, and the establishment and maintenance of adequate terminal and transfer facilities and systems, and their maintenance, improvement, and protection, and by the making of examinations and surveys and by the construction of engineering and other works and projects for the regulation and control of the flow of rivers and their tributaries and source streams, and the standardization of such flow, and by the maintenance of navigable stages of water at all seasons of the year in the waterways of the United States, and by preventing silt and sedimentary material from being carried into and deposited in waterways, channels, and harbors, and by the conservation, development, and utilization of the water resources of the United States, and by flood prevention and protection, through the establishment, construction, and maintenance of natural and artifical reservoirs and detention basins for water storage and control, and levees, revetments, and other bank-protective works, spillways, wasteweirs, wasteways, bypasses, controlled outlets, and flood-control works of every nature and kind, and the protection of watersheds from denudation, erosion, and surface wash, and from forest fires, and the maintenance and extension of woodland and other protective cover thereon, and the reclamation of swamp and overflow lands and arid lands, and the building of drainage and irrigation works in order that the flow of rivers shall be regulated and controlled not only through the use of flood waters for irrigation on the upper tributaries, but also through controlling them in fixed and established channels in the lower valleys and plains, and by doing all things necessary to provide for any and all beneficial uses of water that will contribute to its conservation or storage in the ground or in surface reservoirs as an aid to the regulation or control of the flow of rivers, and by acquiring by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, holding, using, leasing, hiring, and transferring by appropriate deed lands and any other property that may be needed for the aforesaid purposes, or which it may be deemed advisable to dispose of, and by doing such other things as may be specified in this act or necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes thereof, and by securing the cooperation therein of States, municipalities, and other local agencies, as hereinafter set forth, and for the payment of all expenditures provided for in this act.

"The aforesaid sum of $60,000,000, appropriated as hereinbefore provided, shall be apportioned for expenditure under this act as follows:

"(a) Twenty-five million dollars to the Illinois River and its watershed and to the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois to the Head of the Passes, including the Atchafalaya River as one of the mouths of the Mississippi River, to be expended for the improvement of the Illinois River and for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Illinois River, for the control of floods thereon, and the establishment of a waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf; (b) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of the Ohio River and its tributaries, for the control of floods thereon, and the consequent improvement of navigation; (c) $5,000,000 to the watershed of the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Illinois River; (d) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of the Missouri River and all other tributaries of the Mississippi River, except the Ohio, from the mouth of the Illinois River to the Gulf, and all rivers draining into the Gulf of Mexico west of the Mississippi River; (e) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of the rivers draining into Canada, the Great Lakes, and the Atlantic Ocean and rivers draining into the Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River; (f) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of all the rivers draining into the Pacific Ocean in Oregon and Washington, including the Columbia River watershed; (g) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of the rivers draining into the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys and into the Pacific Ocean north of Santa Barbara, in California; (h) $5,000,000 to the watersheds of all other rivers in California and the Great Inland Basin and the Colorado River.

"NATIONAL WATERWAYS COUNCIL.

"SEC. 2. That a national waterways council, hereinafter called the council, is hereby created, consisting of the President of the United States as chairman, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the water-control board, to be appointed as hereinafter provided.

"The council shall have authority to direct and control all proceedings and operations and all things done or to be done under this act, and to establish all rules and regulations which may, in their judgment, be necessary to carry into effect such direction and control consistent with the provisions of this act and with existing law and with any provisions which Congress may from time to time enact.

"All plans and estimates prepared by the water-control board, as hereinafter provided, which contemplate or provide for expenditures from the river-regulation fund shall be submitted to the council for final approval before any of the expenditures therein provided for or contemplated are authorized or made or any construction work undertaken or contracts let under or in pursuance of such plans: Provided, That in case of an emergency the chairman of the water-control board shall have full power to act, and shall report in detail his action in every case to the council at its next meeting after his action.

"WATER-CONTROL BOARD.

"SEC. 3. That to assist in carrying out the purposes aforesaid the council may utilize the various agencies of the Government, and there is hereby created a water-control board, hereinafter called the board, which shall consist of a chairman, to be appointed by the council, and four assistant secretaries, to be appointed as hereinafter provided, and such additional members as the council may from time to time appoint. The chairman of the board shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum, each assistant secretary aforesaid shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum, and said additional members of the board such salaries as the council may from time to time fix. Subject to the direction and control of the council as to general policy and procedure, it shall be the duty of the board to ascertain in detail the work in progress and obtain plans, recommendations, and estimates of the work contemplated in the general field of water conservation, control, and utilization by the various agencies of the Government, States, counties, municipalities, districts, communities, corporations, associations, and individuals, and on the basis of such information and the results obtained by its own surveys and investigations to prepare for the consideration of the council a general and comprehensive program of water and waterways conservation, regulation, development, and utilization, extending through a number of years, with comprehensive general plans for each watershed, treating the entire watershed of each river as a unit, and with specific projects, plans, estimates, and recommendations, involving independent work by the United States and the combining of resources and energies of the various public and private agencies aforesaid; to coordinate and bring into conference the various agencies of the Government; and to examine, compare, adjust, allot, assign, and supervise their work, to the end that duplication may be avoided and the highest efficiency obtained; by agreement to assign to the various cooperating agencies the work to be done by them within their respective spheres; to accept, on behalf of the United States, from such agencies contributions of money and property of any kind to be used for carrying out the purposes authorized by this act; to make field inspection of all work done or contemplated under this act by the Government and its cooperating agencies; and to employ such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development, constructors, and other employees, and to construct such buildings and work as may be necessary for those purposes. The board is hereby authorized to expend from the sums herein provided such amounts as may be necessary for services of employees in the city of Washington, D. C., and elsewhere; to pay therefrom such sums as may be necessary for office accommodations in the city of Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and to purchase such law books, books of reference, periodicals, engineering, statistical, and professional publications as may be needed. Contributions received under this section shall be used by the board, under the direction of the council, for carrying out the purposes of this act, and money so received shall be paid into the river-regulation fund herein created. Subject to the approval of the council, the board is authorized to enter into such contracts or carry on by hired labor or otherwise such work as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act, within the limits of appropriations made or authorized by this act or appropriations or contributions which shall be hereafter made or authorized from time to time, or as may be necessary for executing projects under this act within the respective limits of cost thereof approved by the Congress, the funds for which shall have been provided by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the authority conferred by this act. Subject to the approval of the council, the board may also employ the various agencies of the Government in carrying out such purposes or executing such projects.

"COOPERATION WITH STATES AND OTHER AGENCIES.

"SEC. 4. That the board shall, in all cases where possible and practicable, encourage, promote, and endeavor to secure the cooperation of States, municipalities, public and quasi public corporations, towns, counties, districts, communites, persons, and assocations in the carrying out of the purposes and objects of this act, and in making the investigations and doing all coordinative and constructive work provided for herein; and it shall in each case endeavor to secure the financial cooperation of States and of such local authorities, agencies, and organizations to such extent and in such amounts as the council shall determine to be a just and equitable apportionment of work, costs, and benefits under all the circumstances in each case; and it shall negotiate and perfect arrangements and plans for the apportionment of work, cost, and benefits, according to the jurisdiction, powers, rights, and benefits of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and promote the general welfare, and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, and with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States.

"APPOINTMENT OF WATER-CONTROL BOARD.

"SEC. 5. That each head of a department named in this act is authorized to appoint, with the approval of the council, for service as a member of the board, a highly qualified representative, who shall be an assistant secretary in the department in which he is appointed; shall devote his time primarily to the work authorized by this act; shall have, subject to the direction of the head of the department, such general supervision and control as may be necessary for the purposes of this act of the agencies within the department engaged upon such work; shall serve during good service and behavior; and shall be removable by the head of the department only for good cause.

"RIVER-REGULATION FUND.

"SEC. 6. That no sums shall be paid out of the river-regulation fund except on vouchers signed by the chairman of the board or by an official designated by him in writing, drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury. To provide for carrying out the projects formulated under this act, which involve expenditures in excess of the $60,000,000 herein appropriated to the river-regulation fund, the appropriation hereafter to the credit of said fund of such sums as may be necessary is hereby authorized. At any time that the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine it to be necessary or advisable, in order to provide all or any part of the appropriation made or authorized by this act or which may be hereafter made or authorized or to provide revenues to execute a project under this act, which shall have been approved by the Congress, he may issue and sell, or use as a means of borrowing money, bonds in the necessary amount, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 5, 1909 (36th Stats. L., pp. 11, 117), the act of February 4, 1910 (36th Stats. L., p. 192), and the act of March 2, 1911 (36th Stats. L., p. 1013). The sums appropriated or provided by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to this section shall be paid into the river-regulation fund and shall be available until expended and paid out as provided for in this act. All moneys received in connection with any operations under this act as well as from the sales of materials utilized and any condemned property shall be covered into the 'river-regulation fund' and be available for expenditure therefrom. It is the intent and purpose of this act to authorize and empower the council and the board and their officers, agents, and employees to do all necessary acts and things in addition to those specially authorized in this act to accomplish the purposes and objects hereof."

The following is a reference to the leading measures which have been introduced by Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS at different times, from which the present river-regulation measure, section 18 of the river and harbor act of 1917, has been developed:

The Newlands national irrigation bill, officially designated after its enactment as the United States reclamation act: H. R. 9674, introduced January 21, 1902.

The inland waterways commission bills: S. 500, introduced December 6, 1907, and S. 3717, introduced December 10, 1909.

Amended to S. 4501, the White Mountain and Appalachian National Forest bill: Introduced June 23, 1910.

The Newlands river-regulation bill: S. 10900, introduced March 1, 1911; S. 122, introduced April 6, 1911; S. 2739, introduced July 14, 1913.

The Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill, introduced as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for S. 2739, introduced January 31, 1914.

The Newlands river-regulation bill, providing for a national waterways council and a water-control board, to conform to recommendations of the interdepartmental committee: S. 5736, introduced April 24, 1916.

The reclamation act, known before its passage as the Newlands national irrigation act, was passed by Congress on June 13, 1902, and was signed by President Roosevelt and became a law on June 17, 1902.

The river-regulation act, section 18 of the river and harbor act of 1917, known before its passage as the Newlands river-regulation amendment, was passed by Congress on August 3, 1917, and was signed by President Wilson and became a law on August 8, 1917.

The original Newlands river-regulation bill, S. 10900, was printed in full in the report of the flood commission of Pittsburgh, pages 391 to 396, and in a public document containing the remarks of Senator NEWLANDS in the Senate on Wednesday, February 15, 1911, on the passage on that day of the Appalachian and White Mountain Forest Reserve bill.

The Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill, amendment to S. 2739, was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 51, part 3, pages 2635–2638, and also in Senate Document No. 418, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The last Newlands river-regulation bill, embodying the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee, and providing for a national waterways council and water-control board, as recommended in that report, was printed in full in Senate Document No. 550, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, and has been hereinbefore reprinted in full in this historical statement.

At every stage of its progress this great national movement for the conservation, development, and complete utilization of the water resources of the United States has been opposed on the ground that it was an unconstitutional and unwarranted enlargement of the functions of the National Government, and the measures which Congress has finally adopted have each settled some one particular phase of this advancement of the sphere of governmental action.

The United States reclamation act settled forever the right and obligation of the Government of the United States to construct works for the conservation and utilization of the surplus waters in the western half of the United States.

The White Mountain and Appalachian National Forest Reserve act went further and settled the question as to the range and scope of the activities of the Federal Government on the watersheds of the navigable rivers. It established the principle that the constitutional power and obligation of the National Government extends to the source of every tributary stream feeding a navigable river, and to the doing of any and all things that may be essential to control and regulate the flow of that river and all its source streams, so as to standardize their flow, so far as practicable, throughout the year. The act provides only for forest methods of accomplishing this object but if forestry is within its powers and obligations, there is no reason why all practicable methods of accomplishing the same result are not equally within the powers and obligations of the National Government, such as the building of artificial surface reservoirs, as advocated by the flood commission of Pittsburgh, or the conservation by storage in the ground of waters used for agricultural purposes.

The Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers flood-control act again extended the recognized powers and obligations of the National Government to the protection of lands from overflow and flood devastation by engineering works built for that purpose, without any necessary justification for their construction, on the ground that such construction was warranted by their benefit to navigation, as had previously been contended.

And now the river-regulation amendment, section 18 of the river and harbor bill of 1917, has practically and substantially declared that the powers authorized in the three bills above mentioned shall be extended to and cover the whole field of the conservation, development, and utilization of all the water resources of the United States, for every useful and beneficial purpose for which those waters can be used, and upon every watershed in the United States.

The United States reclamation act of June 17, 1902, was only a single stepping stone to this complete and comprehensive policy; the White Mountain and Appalachian Forest Reserve act was another stepping stone; the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers flood-control act was another; and now Congress has, after a campaign always having that ultimate object in view, and extending over more than a quarter of a century, unequivocally placed the authority and powers and obligations of the National Government in this broad field upon a Nation-wide, enduring, and comprehensive foundation that will in its eventual working out save from waste "the Nation's greatest asset," the surplus and now unused waters of the United States.

The educational campaign that has steadfastly pushed forward this broad and beneficial national policy has been conducted through several different organizations, the oldest being the National Irrigation Congress and the American Forestry Association.

The National Irrigation Congress declared for the national irrigation policy at some of its earliest sessions and squarely put its demands before the people at the seventh national irrigation congress held at Phoenix, Ariz., in 1897, and was unfaltering in its support of that policy until it was adopted by Congress in June, 1902, by the enactment of the reclamation act.

The American Forestry Association championed the White Mountain and Appalachian National Forest Reserve bill, organized a national campaign in its behalf, and marshaled the forces that fought for that bill through a period of fully 10 years, until it was finally enacted by Congress in February, 1911.

The National Reclamation Association was organized as the National Irrigation Association on June 3, 1899, for the purpose of conducting a Nation-wide campaign for the entire broad national policy advocated in the statement of the objects of the association, as set forth in its constitution, as follows:

[The National Irrigation Association, organized June 2, 1899.]

"OBJECTS.

"1. The adoption by the Federal Government of a permanent policy for the reclamation and settlement of the public domain under which all the remaining public lands shall be held and administered as a trust for the benefit of the whole people of the United States, and no grants of title to any of the public lands shall ever hereafter be made to any but actual settlers and home builders on the land.

"2. The preservation and development of our national resources by the construction of storage reservoirs by the Federal Government for floor protection, and to have for use in aid of navigation and irrigation the flood waters which now run to waste and cause overflow and destruction.

"3. The construction by the Federal Government of storage reservoirs and irrigation works wherever necessary to furnish water for the reclamation and settlement of the arid public lands.

"4. The preservation of the forests and reforestation of denuded forest areas as sources of water supply, the conservation of existing supplies by approved methods of irrigation and distribution, and the increase of the water resources of the arid region by the investigation and development of underground supplies.

"5. The adoption of a harmonious system of irrigation laws in all the arid and semiarid States and Territories under which the right to the use of water for irrigation shall vest in the user, and become appurtenant to the land irrigated, and beneficial use be the basis and the measure and limit of the right.

"6. The dissemination by public meetings and through the press of information regarding irrigation, and the reclamation and settlement of the arid public domain, and the possibilities of better agriculture through irrigation and intensive farming, and the need for agricultural education and training, and the creation of rural homes as national safeguards, and the encouragement of rural settlement as a remedy for the social and political evils threatened by the congestion of popualtion in large cities."

The National Reclamation Association of Louisiana was organized in January, 1912, with a view to subsequently merging it with the National Irrigation Association, which was done in January, 1913, and after the great flood of 1913 a statement was issued to the business men of the United States setting forth the reasons why the Newlands river-regulation bill should have the support of the business interests of the country.

That statement was as follows:

"To the merchants and manufacturers of the United States:

"The National Reclamation Association extends to you its greetings and urges your consideration of the following facts:

"There is not a merchant or manufacturer in the United States whose market is the country at large who did not suffer from loss of trade, delayed collections, or uncollectible accounts, with consequent loss of profits, as the result of the disastrous floods that devastated the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys in 1912 and 1913. These national catastrophes will continue to recur at frequent intervals in different parts of the country unless preventive measures are adopted by the National Government. Is it not better that this be done without delay by prompt congressional action? Every year's delay means a continuation of this risk of enormous losses, which will be removed whenever the inertia of Congress has been overcome by an insistent demand from the business men of the country.

"You insure against fire loss by the payment of a premium to an insurance company or by cooperation with some plan for mutual insurance. Is it not good business policy for every merchant and manufacturer in the United States to cooperate with others, and by their mutual activity and insistent demand for immediate action by Congress secure the passage of the Newlands river-regulation bill at the next session? That bill provides flood insurance for all parts of the United States by providing for doing the things in this country that have been so successfully done in several European countries to prevent and protect against damage by floods. What other countries have done we can do. Not to do it is to court the eventual destruction that has finally been the fate of the countries of Asia and northern Africa that have neglected these national protective measures against the destructive forces of nature.

"The Newlands river-regulation bill creates a waterways commission and board of river regulation composed of the heads of the departments and bureaus of the National Government that are now at work on the problem of river regulation and control. It coordinates their work, provides for cooperation with States and local districts or municipalities, and then appropriates enough money for the work to actually get it done. The policy that built the Panama Canal and the national irrigation works in the West is applied by the Newlands bill to building works to harness and control the floods in all parts of the United States. The bill appropriates $60,000,000 a year for 10 years to do this work. That total appropriation of $600,000,000, covering 10 years of construction work, is less than the actual direct losses from floods within two years in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys alone.

"The only way to deal with the flood problem is to treat every river from source to mouth, with all its tributaries, as a unit, and so far as possible slow up the run-off, harness the floods at their sources by all practicable means, and restore nature's safeguards by providing controlled outlets and excess flood-water channels as well as levees, revetments, and local protective works. Levees alone can never be made an adequate protection against the extraordinary floods of the unusually heavy flood years, and any plan that contemplates 'levees only' as a remedy will in the end prove a delusion and a snare and worse than a waste of money.

"The Newlands river-regulation bill provides not only for levees but also for all other means for flood prevention and protection that are practicable and applicable to the particular section where they should be adopted. It covers the whole problem and it covers the entire country. It recognizes the necessity for flood protection and prevention and the equal right to such relief in all flood-menaced sections of the United States. The solution of this great problem demands that sectional selfishness be laid aside and the question dealt with nationally, under the constitutional power of Congress to aid navigation. The water that now goes to waste in floods must be conserved for beneficial use and turned into the river channels in the low-water season to float water-borne commerce.

"On the Mississippi River, which presents the largest problem, because this great river drains 41 per cent of the entire United States, the annual appropriations in the river and harbor bill should be enlarged from year to year as the value of this great national inland waterway becomes better appreciated and commerce thereon increases. The work done under the river and harbor bill, which is largely channel-improvement work, must be supplemented by source-stream control, bank-protective works, and a system of controlled outlets and excess flood-water channels, so as to regulate the flow of the river, lower the flood stages, and raise the low-water stages, as provided in the Newlands river-regulation bill. The floods that come from the West should be held back and used for irrigation and power development. The floods from the Ohio River should be controlled on the tributaries whence they come, and the water beneficially used, instead of sweeping down the valleys as a mighty agency of devastation and destruction.

"The Newlands river-regulation bill has been before the country for more than two years and is strongly supported by such organizations as the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, Philadelphia Board of Trade, St. Louis Merchants' Exchange, National Irrigation Congress, National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles Clearing House, Arizona and California River Regulation Commission, River Regulation Committee of Stockton, Cal., Texas Bankers' Association, Louisiana Bankers' Association, Southern Cypress Manufacturers' Association, National Slack Cooperage Association, Flood Commission of Pittsburgh, and many other similar organizations, and has Nation-wide support from the press.

"The active campaign for the passage of the bill by Congress is being conducted by the National Reclamation Association and the cooperation of every commercial and manufacturing concern and industrial institution in the United States is earnestly desired in order that the relief which this great constructive national legislative measure will bring to the entire business interests of the country and particularly to the flood-menaced sections may be expedited and the danger of a recurrence of past disasters safeguarded against without delay.

"NATIONAL RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION,
"R. H. DOWNMAN,
"Chairman of the Board.
"GEORGE H. MAXWELL,
"Executive Director.
"WALTER PARKER,
"Secretary."

The National Irrigation Association, now known as the National Reclamation Association, from the date of its organization in June, 1899, 18 years ago, up to the enactment of the United States reclamation act, in June, 1902, conducted one of the most far-reaching and vigorous campaigns of education ever conducted in the United States for the policy set forth in its constitution above set forth, and its efforts contributed largely to the success of the movement that brought about the final passage of the reclamation act on June 13, 1902.

The National Irrigation Association, in 1903, turned its attention again to the broader aspects of the national movement to which it was devoted, and the broad and comprehensive national policy embodied in the Newlands river-regulation bill was declared and indorsed in the following resolutions drawn by George H. Maxwell, and adopted as an expression of the broad western vision of what should be done to prevent the waste and destruction of our national resources and safeguard against the annually recurring menace of the floods:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT THE FOURTEENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE TRANS-MISSISSIPPI COMMERCIAL CONGRESS HELD AT SEATTLE, WASH., AUGUST 18–21, 1903.

"We are drawing from nature's treasure vaults the wealth that has been accumulating through the ages. That wealth is in our forests, our mines, and our farms. Their products are the basis of both our internal and our foreign trade and commerce, and the original source of all employment for labor.

"CONSERVE NATIONAL RESOURCES.

"The unparalleled era of prosperity through which we are now passing results from the rapid development of the material resources of our country, and we must preserve those resources if we are to maintain that prosperity. We are drawing from nature's treasure vaults the wealth that has been accumulating through the ages. That wealth is in our forests, our mines, and our farms. Their products are the basis of both our internal and our foreign trade and commerce, and the original source of all employment for labor.

"This mighty resource of natural wealth must not be wasted or destroyed. Not only should the natural resources of the trans-Mississippi region be systematically preserved but the home market for its products should be protected.

"We have a higher destiny as a Nation than the mere creation or accumulation of capital. We must preserve and bequeath to future generations the natural resources which will be necessary to their material welfare, and without which in the years to come, the masses of our people will inevitably be reduced to poverty, and suffer privation and distress.

"WHAT MUST BE DONE.

"We may use and enjoy these vast natural resources without destroying them, and by a wise governmental policy they may be enormously developed and enlarged. But if this is to be done:

"1. The appalling ravages from forest fires must be stopped.

"2. The reckless destruction of our timber resources by careless and wasteful methods of lumbering must cease.

"3. The forests must be preserved by right use, not only as a permanent source of supply for wood and timber but as sources of water supply and great natural reservoirs to hold back the flood waters and lessen the destructive volume of floods.

"4. The waters that now run to waste must be stored both for flood protection and for use in irrigation and to create electric power and for the improvement of navigation.

"5. Reservoirs should be built throughout the mountain regions, and wherever practicable in the natural depressions and basins of the great plains in the valleys of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries.

"6. The building of a multitude of small reservoirs and ponds by damming the draws and coulees should be brought about.

"7. The river channels should be, wherever necessary, deepened, straightened, and improved, and the banks protected by revetments.

"8. Levees should be built along the rivers for flood protection and to improve the channels for navigation.

"9. The public lands should be held as a sacred trust for those who will build homes upon them, and their rapid absorption into private ownership by speculators and to create great ranges for live stock should be immediately stopped.

"10. The National Government should build the great irrigation systems necessary for the reclamation and settlement of the arid region by actual settlers and homemakers, and the lands reclaimed should repay to the Government the cost of the construction of the works.

"GREAT ENGINEERING WORKS.

"The great engineering works necessary for the utilization of the waters of such large rivers as the Columbia, the Missouri, the Colorado, the Snake, the Milk, the Salt and Gila, and the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers in California, should proceed as rapidly as the lands reclaimed will be utilized, and will repay to the Government the cost of the works; and in the great interior central valley of California the problem of the control of the floods of the Sacramento River, which would furnish water enough to irrigate 10,000,000 acres of land, if conserved and utilized, should be treated as a single problem involving arid-land reclamation, flood control, navigation, and drainage, and while the improvements of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers should be continued and extended by the National Government to fully develop the navigability of those rivers, the necessity of coping with the problem in its broadest aspects should be recognized and a complete and comprehensive plan for its entire solution should be prepared without delay by the engineers of the Reclamation Service and of the War Department of the United States."

The urgent needs of different sections of the country for relief along the comprehensive lines embodied in the Newlands river-regulation bill and in the river-regulation amendment, section 18 of the river and harbor act of 1917, have found expression in the formation of strong local organizations in widely separated hydrographic basins. These local organizations have strengthened and supplemented the Nation-wide educational campaign which the National Reclamation Association has during the last 18 years conducted in behalf of this national policy for the conservation, development, and utilization of all the water resources of the Nation for every beneficial purpose for which these now wasted water resources can be utilized, in every practicable way and by every practicable method which can be adopted.

The Pittsburgh Flood Commission was organized by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce January 30, 1908. It raised a fund of over $125,000, made a complete survey of the watershed of the upper tributaries of the Ohio River above Pittsburgh, and published a report, which covered every phase of the problem of flood control, prevention, and protection with reference to that territory.

This report established indisputably Pittsburgh's need for the broad national river-regulation policy contemplated by the present measure. Out of this need grew the larger and more comprehensive measure designated and known as the Newlands river-regulation bill, which was drawn with the special view of covering the Nation's needs for flood protection as well as waterways. The Newlands river-regulation bill was an extension and enlargement of the original Waterways Commission bills, S. 500 and S. 3717, heretofore referred to in this statement, and was, first introduced in the Senate by Senator NEWLANDS on March 1, 1911. It is printed in full on pages 391–396 of the Report of the Pittsburgh Flood Commission, being S. 10900, Sixty-first Congress, third session, and S. 122, Sixty-second Congress, first session.

The Newlands river-regulation bill was indorsed by the National Irrigation Congress at its Chicago session in December, 1911, an indorsement which has been repeatedly reiterated at later sessions of that congress, by the California Inland Waterways Association, by the Legislatures of California, Louisiana, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, and by an almost unanimous public sentiment expressed through the press of practically every State in the Union. A late favorable editorial expression is from the Detroit News, from which is quoted the following excerpt:

"The river and harbor bill contains one provision that may help to solve the 'pork barrel' problem. It provides for a waterways commission of seven members. Congressional rules cut that provision out of the bill in the House, but the Senate restored it. A similar provision was inserted in the bill last year by the Senate, but the bill failed to pass."

After specifying the powers conferred on the commission, this editorial continues:

"These are sweeping powers, but they are needed if system is to be introduced in place of chaos. The country is tired of the annual rivers and harbors bill fight and will be glad to see the entire control of waterways placed in competent hands. The danger is that Members of Congress eager for appropriations for pet projects ignored by the new board will try to override its reports, as they have sometimes overridden those of the Government's engineers to secure picayune improvements for their districts. But if the country gets behind the commission and insists that its recommendations be adopted, it may be that the annual 'pork barrel' scandal may be avoided hereafter."

The most active of the local organizations above referred to was the National Reclamation Association, of Louisiana, organized at New Orleans in January, 1912, and merged with the National Irrigation Association in January, 1913, as the National Reclamation Association. Those associations brought the necessity for source stream control before the Mississippi Valley as a lesson taught by the devastating floods that swept through that valley in 1912 and 1913. The campaign of the National Reclamation Association culminated in resolutions adopted at a great public mass meeting at the Tulane Theater in New Orleans on May 15, 1913. Those resolutions were formally presented to President Wilson by Mr. R. H. Downman, chairman of the National Reclamation Association, acting as the personal representative of Gov. Hall, of Louisiana, on May 18, 1913.

The following is a copy of those resolutions:

FLOOD PROTECTION AND PREVENTION AND RIVER REGULATION.

Resolutions adopted at the second mass meeting of the citizens of New Orleans and Louisiana held at the Tulane Theater on May 15, 1913, reaffirming and reiterating and again approving and indorsing the joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana adopted June 6, 1912, which was specifically and in extenso approved, adopted, and indorsed at the first citizens' mass meeting held at the Progressive Union Assembly Hall in New Orleans on June 20, 1912, and indorsing and urging the immediate enactment by Congress of the Newlands river-regulation bill as amended when reported from the Senate Commerce Committee to the Senate on March 3, 1913, and embodied in full in Senate report No. 1339, Sixty-second Congress, third session, the said bill being S. 122, calendar No. 1187, of said session.

[R. H. Downman (chairman), J. H. Fulton, John J. Gannon, Frank B. Hayne, Chas. Janvier, general committee.]

"Whereas the people of the State of Louisiana, through their representatives in legislature assembled, did on June 6, 1912, by joint resolution, concurred in by the senate and house of representatives, declare as follows:

"'Whereas the great flood of 1912 has demonstrated that the National Government only can obviate a recurrence of such overflow disasters in the future by a national policy under which an adequate levee system will be built and maintained as national fortifications against invasion and destruction by the forces of nature; and

"'Whereas the steadily increasing volume of the floods in the lower Mississippi Valley has been largely caused by the changed condition of the watershed in the States comprising the drainage basin of the Ohio, upper Mississippi and Missouri Rivers; and

"'Whereas these causes and conditions are beyond the control of the States bordering the Mississippi from Cairo to the Gulf, and can only be controlled by the National Government: Now, therefore, be it

"'Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana (the Senate concurring therein), That the National Government should immediately extend such temporary relief as may be necessary to repair the broken levees and to maintain them in future, and to control the river in its channel by revetments and bank protective works which will safeguard against the destruction of levees by caving banks and shifting channels.

"'Resolved further, That in working out plans for flood prevention and the protection of the lowlands of the Mississippi Valley from overflow, the Mississippi River and all its tributaries and source streams should be treated as a unit, and a comprehensive and adequate levee system, to be permanently maintained by the National Government, should be supplemented by a system of reservoirs on the headwaters of the Ohio and its tributaries, and also on the upper Mississippi, and by a system of flood-water canals and storage reservoirs in the Missouri River Valley, by means of which the flood plane at Cairo would at all times be so reduced that no combination of high water in the three upper rivers would ever create a great flood in the lower Mississippi Valley, and at the same time prevent overflow and damage by floods in the valleys of the Ohio, the upper Mississippi, and Missouri Rivers.

"'Resolved further, That the Nation can not longer afford to permit its resources of soil, of power, of water, and of navigation to be carried as a wasteful and destructive flood to the sea, and that since the States themselves can not, in the general interest, prevent this waste, the Federal Government should conserve such floods at their sources, and subject the now-wasted waters to beneficial use.'

"And whereas subsequently, on June 20, 1912, at a public mass meeting of the citizens of New Orleans, held in the Progressive Union Assembly Hall, the foregoing joint resolution was approved and ratified and embodied in its entirety in the resolutions adopted at said meeting; and

"Whereas a flood prevention and river regulation conference, attended by representative citizens from many different sections of the State of Louisiana, was held in New Orleans on January 7, 1913, at which resolutions were unanimously adopted urging that the Newlands river regulation bill should be so amended as to specifically appropriate and set apart $100,000,000 for work on the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the Gulf; and

"Whereas the said bill as originally drawn contained the following provision:

"'SEC. 18. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the works and projects contemplated under this act among the several waterways systems of the United States'; and

"Whereas when said bill was reported from the Senate Commerce Committee on March 3, 1913, it was amended in accordance with the resolutions of said flood prevention and river regulation conference and the following provision added to said section 18:

"'Not less than $10,000,000 annually shall be apportioned to the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the Gulf, $5,000,000 to the Missouri River, $5,000,000 to the Ohio River, $5,000,000 to the upper Mississippi River above St. Louis, and $5,000,000 to the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers in California'; and

"Whereas said bill also contains the following specification as to the appropriation and apportionment of the $50,000,000 a year for 10 years appropriated thereby:

"'For the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for building bank-protective works to prevent erosion and cutting of the banks and consequent caving, and to control the river and hold it in a permanently fixed and established channel, and for building and maintaining revetments, dikes, walls, levees, embankments, gates, wasteways, by-passes, flood-water canals, restraining dams, impounding basins, and bank-protective works for river regulation, and as a means to that end the building of works for reclamation, drainage, and flood protection, and for building reservoirs and artificial lakes and basins for the storage of flood waters to prevent and protect against floods and overflows, erosion of river banks, and breaks in levees, and to regulate the flow of source streams and navigable rivers, and reinforce such flow during drought and low-water periods, and for the operation and maintenance of the same, $30,000,000'; and

"Whereas the said Newlands river-regulation bill, when so amended, specifically and by its terms fully and completely provides for New Orleans, La., and the whole Mississippi Valley all the relief and benefits and all the measures for flood protection and prevention, and embodies the entire national policy advocated in the aforesaid joint resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana; and

"Whereas the said bill rejects and condemns no plan, and provides not for 'levees only' or for any one plan to the exclusion of others, but covers and provides for the adoption of all safeguards and all plans and methods for flood protection and prevention that may, after proper survey and examination, be found practicable; and

"Whereas the said bill further provides similar relief and benefits for other sections of the country that are demanding national aid for flood protection, and without whose cooperation and support the Mississippi Valley can not expect to secure such national aid; and

"Whereas the said bill has been before the people of the United States for more than two years, and now has Nation-wide support extending from Pennsylvania to California and from Montana to Texas, and will combine sufficient territorial political strength to insure its passage by Congress;

"Now, therefore, we the citizens of New Orleans and Louisiana, in mass meeting assembled, do most heartily again indorse the wise and patriotic joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana on June 6, 1912, and do hereby renew and reiterate the demands embodied in the said joint resolution, and do hereby indorse the Newlands river regulation bill, and do hereby most earnestly urge the enactment of said bill by Congress at the present session, in order that the development of the Mississippi Valley shall be no longer retarded by the flood menace;

"And we hereby call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to extend their hearty and unqualified support to the principles so positively and unequivocally declared, as aforesaid, by the Legislature of Louisiana, and to the aforesaid bill in which those principles have been embodied for congressional enactment."

After the presentation of the foregoing resolutions to the President at Washington by Mr. Dowman on May 18, 1913, the following striking article, setting forth a forecast of what the adoption of the national policy urged in those resolutions would bring to the great territory embraced in the valleys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, was published editorially in the New Orleans Item of May 23, 1913:

"WHEN THE VALLEY IS REDEEMED AND THE MOSSBACKS ARE ALL FORGOTTEN.

"Let us draw breath a moment in the strike, stop to tighten belts and lean upon our weapons, scan with placid and contented eye the moiling fragments of the scattered, frothing enemy—and then glance beyond the battle lines to the certain victory.

"The space of peace is pardonable. We stand intrenched in truth. The cause is just—God knows none other touches nearer our hearts and homes. The foe is really ignorance, and for the fighters under that banner we can feel pity while we smite them hip and thigh.

"Picture the valley, 10 years hence, with the flood menace long since lifted, with the resource, the purse, and mind and conscience of the great Republic busy completing the task of redeeming and conserving against the waste of future ages the uncounted boundless wealth that fate and nature have given to us here between the Rockies and the Alleghenies:

"In the Appalachians the new forests on the watersheds will have begun to grow anew. On the mountain slopes of upland America the agents of a beneficent Government will have shown the natives how to terrace their hillside farms. In the gorges and valleys of the Allegheny and Monongahela, the Kentucky, the Cumberland, the reservoirs will be finished. On the watersheds of the Ohio to the northward science will have worked out plans to prevent the recurrence of the disaster to come from such floods as 1913. Along the Ohio the locks and dams whose construction has dragged for years will be finished. From out the harbors of Pittsburgh, Louisville, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, will be moving vast fleets of barges and modern river craft, bearing to the markets of the South the product of the greatest freight-producing region on this earth—bearing it at the cheapest freight rate the world knows—by the easiest, surest route to the greatest market in the history of mankind.

"Far up the upper Mississippi the canals through to the Great Lakes will be built. Boats will be loading in Minneapolis, in Chicago, in Duluth, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Rock Island, with all the myriad articles their factories and their fields and mines produce that folk to the southward need. Reservoirs above Minneapolis will have lifted danger of flood from a vast area there. From great water-power plants established on the dams, hydroelectric power will keep the busy factories humming through the nights and days—the charge therefor maintaining the works for flood prevention and stream control.

"Away in the far Northwest, on millions of acres of land now lying barren to the suns of summer and the winter winds, the quiet farms will guard their fertile acres—where the water is kept on the 'land that wants it' and off the land that doesn't. From out of the prairies the tide of corn and wheat will move toward the river towns on the Missouri, there by barge to seek the route that nature marked thousands of years ago, down to the southern sea. The Missouri, no longer the sullen, vengeful, reckless stream of disorder and disaster, will carry again the argosies of commerce. On the distant mountain sides the new sapling forests will begin anew to catch and hold the humus and the moisture. Cared for, handled, guarded, controlled, the 'blessed rain,' no longer an agent of destruction everywhere, will be man's best instrument of plenty and prosperity.

"So to the southward may we picture the change—Memphis no longer a promontory in a springtime inland sea, with busied Army officers sending out relief expeditions into the flooded area, but instead a great 'port of call' on the river route to the markets beyond the Gulf and beyond the canal; with warehouses, wharves, elevators lining its river front; the new-style river steamers replacing the ancient boats of the 'Lee Line' and the old Kate Adams; the harbor busy as that of Hamburg or any city on the Rhine or Elbe; and the whole mind of the people turned away from the dread of disaster to busy thinking of how best to turn to use the tremendous instrument which nature gave and man retained for a Nation's use.

"Imagine the significance of that altered frame of mind on down the valley! Vision the dwellers on the rich lands of the Mississippi Delta, of the Arkansas lowlands, no longer dreading floods! Think of their initiative freed from the numbing weight of the 'flood menace'! Picture the stream flow regulated, levees strong enough to stand the height beyond which the people know the waters can not go and banks assured against all caving! Picture Helena, Arkansas City, Greenville absolutely safe for themselves and for the region round about them!

"Vision that security in upper Louisiana, in the country facing Vicksburg and Natchez; imagine it in the lowlands along the Red, the Ouachita, the Black! Picture the change in the waste land about the junction of the Red, the Mississippi, and the Atchafayala, with the swamps reclaimed, with a great controlled sluice way across Old River, with adequate levees on both sides the Atchafalaya to the Gulf, with locks that will continue navigation while the gated dam controls the stream flow to Red and Mississippi alike!

"In Pointe Coupee and West Baton Rouge, in Iberville and Ascension the current would have ceased to gnaw, the herald of alarm would no longer call the countryside to battle against the water as against a living, vengeful enemy. The banks would be fixed, the levees would be strong and broad and built for the ages.

"At Bayou Plaquemine, at Manchac, at Lafourche, perhaps at other places, there would be regulated, guarded, absolutely controlled spill ways, themselves leveed and guarded out to the lakes, to take off the surplus water, insurance against any greater height than the levees would be built to sustain.

"In all the region men would go about their business absolutely sure!

"No longer would the winds of March bring fear and the April rains disaster.

"And in all the valley the new measure of activity, of commerce, of business, would converge toward the valley's outlet to the southward!

"To the empty acres of Louisiana and Mississippi the flocking land-hungry emigrants from the Middle West would have rushed the moment the 'flood menace' had been made sure of extinction. Already the millions of acres of reclaimed and reclaimable land about the mouth of the Mississippi would have been taken up. The swamps would have been cleared and drained, the great estates cut up into busy farms. Good roads, good schools, quickened life and trade already would have remade the life of all. In the towns and villages a new era would have come, a new point of view been opened, a new hope and a new confidence creating a new activity.

"And sitting at the valley's gate, New Orleans, redeemed and safe and whole, would sit the beneficiary of all the change from far-off watersheds in the mountains of the East and West down to the very Gulf. To her merchants would come the trade of the new dwellers on the safe lands of the South. To her banks would center the surplus capital of the region relieved from danger. To her docks and wharves would come the river craft from the Ohio, the Missouri, the Great Lakes, the upper Mississippi, the Red, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Tennessee; and to her harbor would assemble the ships of all the seven seas to barter cargoes with the craft from the inland waters.

"A 'dream'?

"'Too good to be true?' in the poetic language of the facile 'Pic.'

"So men sneered at the suggestion that the Great American Desert would ever be smiling farm land. So elder statesmen as wise and weird as RANSDELL laughed to scorn the suggestion that Oregon and Washington were worth fighting for. So the reclamation act was laughed at, and the Appalachian bill said to be a 'joke.' So men scoffed at Edison when he explained his incandescent lamp. So railroad-owned newspapers and their blind followers prodded old John T. Morgan, when through the harassed years he took the part of modern Cato and ever thundered that 'The canal must be dug!' So learned engineers told Goethals and Roosevelt that the Panama Canal never could be completed in the exact way, shape, and form in which it is being completed!

"So our own fossils of many years ago told Eads the jetties wouldn't work; so our own Supreme Court wisely asserted that no human power could ever filter enough Mississippi River water for New Orleans to drink and bathe in. Yet the jetties are built and working, and the filtered water is at hand for anyone who will turn the faucet!

"A dream?

"No! A plain picture in the large of the exact changes that have been wrought on smaller scale by these exact means in other regions, a picture of what we can get for the Mississippi Valley!

"It is this which the Newlands bill has in view. Mr. RANSDELL has said that the Newlands bill furnishes 'ample means to build levees on the Mississippi and protect us from floods.' His bill proposes no more than that. Isn't the bare possibility that this 'dream' might be made true in its other particulars enough to make it worth working for?"

The needs of the San Joaquin Valley and central California for waterway, flood prevention, and water conservation legislation of this character have been urgently pressed by the Stockton River Regulation Commission, through its chairman, Mr. J. L. Craig, and vice chairman, Mr. G. McM. Ross, and indorsed by the Water Problems Association of California, the Fresno Chamber of Commerce, the San Joaquin Valley Commercial Association, and numerous other similar organizations on the Pacific coast.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce for more than 15 years has been a constant and earnest advocate of this legislation, supported by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce and many other similar organizations in every great hydrographic basin in the United States, most active among whom has been the New Orleans Association of Commerce, working in cooperation with the National Reclamation Association, and as the result of their activity the special requirements and needs of the great Mississippi Valley drainage basin were more fully and specifically provided for in the bill known as the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill (S. 2739 and H. R. 12754) printed as Senate Document 418, Sixty-third Congress, second session, which in other respects was substantially the same as the original Newlands river-regulation bill.

On February 24, 1913, the Senate adopted an amendment to the river and harbor bill which was known as the Newlands river-regulation amendment, and which was very similar in its provisions to the amendment embodied in the bill by the Senate Commerce Committee at this session and now under consideration. After extended discussion, however, which will be found in Senate Report 1339, Sixty-second Congress, third session, that amendment was lost in conference.

Again, substantially the same river-regulation amendment was adopted by a vote of the Senate as an amendment to the river and harbor bill, but it was afterwards stricken out on a reserved point of order.

When the water-power bill was before the Senate on February 21, 1916, an amendment to that bill was moved by Senator NEWLANDS which embodied the provisions of the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill.

The discussion in the Senate at that time on this subject extended over several days and has been brought together and published as a public document under the title "Water a national asset." That document includes the platforms of the political parties in different campaigns approving the general policy with reference to our rivers which has now taken form in the pending measure. The Democratic platforms of 1908 and 1912 were particularly clear and specific in their pledges for legislation such as that which the Congress is now enacting.

The direct appeal to President Wilson through the resolutions of the mass meeting at New Orleans which were presented to the President by Mr. R. H. Downman on May 18, 1913, resulted later in the appointment by the President of the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee, composed of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, who, with the aid of the chiefs of the different Government services and bureaus having to do with waters and waterways, made a most exhaustive investigation of the subject, particularly with relation to the working out of some plan for the better coordination and cooperation of these Government departments and agencies. As the result of that investigation and study of the subject, the hearty cooperation of the Secretaries named and of President Wilson has been enlisted and exerted in bringing this great public movement to a successful conclusion.

The country is to be congratulated that the support of President Wilson, first expressed in his telegram to Senator NEWLANDS as president of the National Irrigation Congress at its Salt Lake session on September 29, 1912, has resulted in the enactment of the present measure creating the Waterways Commission, which opens up such stupendous possibilities of benefit to the people of the United States.

The broad and comprehensive purposes which have actuated the Congress in its enactment were strongly stated in the report of the Secretaries composing the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee to the President on February 26, 1916, set forth in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 11, 1916, from which the following is quoted:

[Remarks of Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada, in the Senate of the United States, Apr. 11, 1916.]

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, some time ago, at the height of the flood at New Orleans, a telegram was addressed by the New Orleans Association of Commerce to the Secretary of Commerce, which I will insert in the RECORD, calling attention to these floods and to the party assurances given regarding flood mitigation and river development, and suggesting immediate legislative action upon the subject. Following the receipt of that telegram the President reconstituted the interdepartmental committee, which some time ago was instructed by him to inquire into the differing phases of river regulation and control presented by various bodies and to report to him. That committee consisted of the Secretaries of War, of the Interior, of Agriculture, and of Commerce.

"The office of Secretary of War being vacant, the three other Secretaries met and communicated with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard], the Representative from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], and myself. Mr. HUMPHREYS was unable to be present, owing to illness; but after several discussions of the question the Interdepartmental Cabinet Committee drew up a report to the President presenting their views regarding needed legislation. That report has been recently transmitted to me by the President of the United States. I ask to have read the letter of the President and the report of the interdepartmental committee, and I will ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the telegram to which I have referred.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"The telegram referred to is as follows:

"[Telegram.]

"NEW ORLEANS, February 15, 1916.

"Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
"Secretary Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: One of the main-line levees of the Mississippi River in northern Louisiana has just given way in a district which suffered in 1912 and in 1913. A vast area of fertile farm land is being inundated. The people are fleeing from their homes. We are sending them help, as we always do. You are one of the members of the interdepartmental committee appointed many months ago to study the various submitted plans of stream and flood control. Your committee, we have been informed, reached an agreement upon the principle of the measures which were to be supported before Congress by the executive department. This organization, voicing the settled judgment of the business community of New Orleans, is on record as favoring the principle and the form of one great measure submitted to you for your approval, and by you in principle indorsed.

"Through three sessions of Congress we have waited patiently for the action to which the Democratic Party is pledged and to which you gentlemen yourselves have submitted your belief and your approval. We have waited, conscious that each year of delay in approaching the problem of flood and stream control in a broad and comprehensive manner adds another year to the many years of our continual and recurring peril. Still no action has come. We do not presume to sit in judgment upon those of you who occupy posts in close relationship to the processes of legislation and of execution in the Federal Government, but we do know that our peril continues, that we lose in money and in lives in each returning year of flood. We suffer an invasion as real as though it were directed by the head of an alien government. We lose lives as certainly as though they had been lost in Mexico or on the high seas. We suffer the imposition of indemnities which we must meet with taxes and bond issues that are just as much indemnities as though levied by a conquering army, and through the years and in proportion to the wealth of the region afflicted, what we have lost and what we have paid surpasses the indemnities inflicted upon France after the Franco-Prussian War—the greatest indemnity ever paid by any one nation.

"Here in New Orleans we feel that we as individuals and our investments are physically safe because we have massed resources of human power and of material which enable us to keep our levee breastworks so far ahead of the long lines reaching up the two sides of the Mississippi River from here to Cape Girardeau that levees elsewhere give way before the flood level reaches us, and thus we are saved by the misfortune of our fellow citizens of the Mississippi Valley. We appeal to you now in behalf of those unfortunates in Kentucky, southern Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana who have lost their homes, their fortunes, or their lives through the onslaught of the forces of nature operating over the territory of thirty-odd States, and concentrating their evil effect upon those who live in the smaller regions on the lower reaches of the Mississippi Valley.

"It is now too late for Congress to do more for those who are suffering than to give them food, if they need it, to furnish them with Government tents, and to put at their call the officers of the United States Army; but it is not too late for the interdepartmental committee to make known its conclusion and its findings with reference to suggested legislation having to do with the inland rivers of the United States. It is not too late for the executive department of the Government to put its recommendations before Congress, to lend the strength of its influence in support of the measures already drafted and pending therein, which will bring to bear upon the whole vast interrelated problem of stream-flow control, flood-disaster prevention, and use of the rivers in navigation the coordinated power and capacity of the whole Federal Government. It is not too late for this administration and this Congress to undertake 'after Panama' the task of 'the inland rivers'; carrying out the policy so well phrased and indorsed by President Wilson in his telegraphic message to Senator NEWLANDS, dispatched in the autumn of 1912:

"'SEAGIRT, N. J., September 29, 1912.

"'Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
"'President Irrigation Congress, Salt Lake, Utah:

"'Please express to the National Irrigation Congress my hearty approval of the policy it is met to promote, and especially of the policy of supplementing bank and levee protection by storage of flood waters above for irrigation and water power, turning floods from a menace into a blessing and at the same time abundantly feeding navigable waters.

"'WOODROW WILSON.'

"Is it asking too much to request you to read this telegram at the next Cabinet meeting as a respectful and an urgent message from the Association of Commerce, as representing the afflicted and jeopardized people, to the responsible heads of a Government from which we had expected adequate measures of safety?

"WALTER PARKER,
"General Manager New Orleans Association of Commerce."

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Now I ask that the Secretary read the letter of the President and the report of the interdepartmental committee.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"THE WHITE HOUSE,
"Washington, April 3, 1916.

"Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
"United States Senate.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I take the liberty of sending you inclosed a copy of a memorandum concerning flood control which the Secretaries of the Interior, of Agriculture, and of Commerce were kind enough to prepare for me. I hope that it will prove of interest to you. I know that you were consulted at the time the memorandum was contemplated.

"Sincerely, yours, WOODROW WILSON.

"THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, February 26, 1916.

"DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In accordance with your suggestion we beg to present a résumé of our views as to the practicable way of dealing with the problem of so regulating and handling our rivers that they will be made to be of greater use and of less injury to the Nation.

"We do not feel the necessity for emphasizing the need for such legislation. Each recurring year makes plain the greatness of the work that must be undertaken if we are to keep our rivers within their banks. The floods of each year take their toll in property and lives. Our streams are filling with silt and their channels becoming less certain and reliable as nature's primal highways. Vast bodies of lands of the richest alluvial character are submerged so large a portion of the time as to be of no value to the Nation and of no service to the world. Therefore, to make more navigable our streams, to protect the cities and farms already established and to make a place for others, to save life and increase our crops, to conserve the waters on the higher reaches of the streams where they may be used for needed irrigation, and to convert their fall into electric power—these are the chief ends to be reached by river improvement.

"It is now time, we believe, to urge a comprehensive and constructive plan of river development upon Congress, a plan which recognizes the magnitude of the problem, the impossibility of dealing with it by temporary expedients, and that looks definitely to the time when the flood evils of to-day will be remedied and the waters put to their highest use. This means nothing less than a study under one responsible authority of the problems and possibilities of each river, and after such study a determination upon a definite policy with regard to it and the commitment of the Government to the pursuit of such policy. It has been suggested that an adequate lump-sum and continuing fund for carrying on such national work shall be placed in the hands of a commission composed of the President and four of his Cabinet, which fund shall be expended upon such projects as it sees fit. We do not think this plan in its logical entirety necessary to the end in view.

"We do believe, however, that the Congress should commit itself to a comprehensive policy of river development, involving the expenditure over a long period of a large sum of money, with sufficient appropriations immediately available for continuing the work on the lower Mississippi substantially in accordance with the plans of the Mississippi River Commission, and for taking the necessary preliminary steps for the study of problems and the projection of work on other parts of the Mississippi and of other rivers. It should study each river system, and as projects are developed reports with recommendations for expenditure should be made to Congress, with the understanding that Congress, on the basis of the data furnished, would provide sufficient sums for the continuous prosecution of the work. There are precedents for this course, such as the Panama Canal and the Alaskan railroad projects. In these cases Congress determined that such enterprise should be undertaken, the general lines of development, and in a sense pledged itself to award the money necessary for the completion of the enterprise within a limited time, leaving the details of the plans and their execution to executive bodies.

"We believe that for the execution of such a policy the Congress should authorize a national waterways council, composed of the President and the four heads of departments most concerned—War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce—and a subordinate water-control board, composed of a highly qualified representative from each of the four departments and of such engineers or other officials as the Congress may authorize. The four department representatives of the latter board should have such standing in the departments and such functions as would enable them to secure such data and services in connection with the work from the various bureaus in the departments as may be serviceable and necessary. The national waterways council should be authorized to direct and control the general policy and procedure of the water-control board and other agencies charged with the execution of the work, to establish the necessary rules and regulations, to consider and approve plans, the distribution of funds under authorization from the Congress, to decide questions of conflict, and to report to Congress. The latter board should be authorized to coordinate and invoke the services of the necessary bureaus and agencies of the Government, to make preliminary surveys and detailed plans for work in various areas, to prepare estimates, to study the activities of the States, municipalities, organization, and individuals in water regulation, to prepare a general program of water and waterways regulation and development involving the combined resources and cooperation of all the agencies, to recommend to the council for approval the assignments for the different bureaus or services of the departments, to complete statements of the work already accomplished, and immediately to supervise the prosecution of the work under the plans approved. It would be understood that in the meantime there should be no interference with the execution of the existing plans of the Mississippi River Commission for the work on the lower Mississippi, and that these plans should proceed as outlined unless it should become clear that improvements could be made.

"The most pressing call for help has come and continues to come from the lower Mississippi. As to this river, what may be determined defensive plans have been elaborated by the eminent body of national officials who are now prepared to proceed with their work to its completion. Their embarrassment arose out of the fact that they can not plan for the execution of their work continuously and for a sufficiently long period, owing to the fact that each year the work must wait on the appropriations for that year. There would seem to be every reason for prosecuting these plans vigorously, and later as investigations proceed for supplementing these works with others of a constructive nature higher up the river, and for undertaking as soon as possible projects on other rivers.

"To summarize, we recommend:

"1. That Congress declare its purpose to deal with our river problems in a comprehensive way, involving a large ultimate expenditure of funds and the immediate expenditure of considerable amounts, and the creation of machinery intimately related to the executive branch of the Government.

"2. That the boards and the other parts of the machinery provided for shall be directed to continue the work on the lower Mississippi substantially under existing plans and to proceed with the investigations and the elaboration of plans on other parts of the Mississippi River and other rivers of the Nation.

"3. That all the available agencies of the Government shall be coordinated in this endeavor to improve and protect our rivers, to control floods, to utilize waters, and to reclaim valuable lands and make the necessary reports to Congress as bases for additional appropriations.

"4. That the expenditures for this work should, in the main, be met by the sale of national bonds, and that the lands benefited should be made to bear a proportion of such expenses, agreements in this regard to be submitted to the Congress as part of the plan for development.

"Cordially, yours,

"FRANKLIN K. LANE.
"D. F. HOUSTON.
"WILLIAM C. REDFIELD.

"The PRESIDENT,
"The White House."

The necessity for such legislation as that embodied in the river-regulation amendment, section 18 of the river and harbor bill of 1917, was explained in brief and its relation to the provisions of the Democratic platforms of 1908 and 1912 shown in the remarks of Senator NEWLANDS in the Senate on February 21, 1916, on the subject, as set forth in the following quotation from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date:

"RIVER DEVELOPMENT FOR INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

"Mr. KENYON. May I suggest that in the debate on the river and harbor bill it was disclosed that over $140,000,000 had been spent on the Mississippi River?

"Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Can the Senator give us any good reason, any substantial reason, that would tend to clarify our minds and vision, when we come to the consideration of this subject, as to how it is that after having spent $140,000,000 on the Mississippi River there is not any commerce on that river?

"Mr. NEWLANDS. I tried to explain that in my remarks when the Senator from New Hampshire was not present.

"Mr. GALLINGER. I am sorry I was not present.

"Mr. NEWLANDS. But I shall be glad to give the Senator an epitome of what I said on that subject.

"THE MISSISSIPPI AS A PERFECETD INSTRUMENTALITY OF COMMERCE.

"The Senator's inquiry is as to how, logically, we can consider the expenditure of more money on the Mississippi River when the expenditure of $140,000,000 has done very little toward the promotion of navigation on that river. My answer is that that expenditure has been scattered most ineffectively over a great number of years; that the expenditure did not involve the comprehensive treatment of the entire river with a view to making it an instrumentality of commerce; that the work was done largely in detached places here and there, in the removal of sand bars and other obstructions or in the construction of levees, and so forth; but that there never has been an effort really to artificialize and perfect the Mississippi River as an instrumentality of commerce. That involves the establishment of transfer facilities and sites, the dovetailing of the river with the rails by a system of legislation and administration, the construction of the proper wharves, the erection of the proper stations and warehouses, and so forth. The river has thus far been developed practically as a railroad would be developed across the continent, with spaces, every mile or two, of rails left out, or without stations or sidetracks. The Senator can understand how effective a railroad would be upon which a very considerable amount of money had been expended that was in that condition; and that has been practically the condition of the Mississippi River.

* * * * * * *

"What does the development of our rivers for purposes of commerce mean? It means the construction of wharves, warehouses, and transfer facilities, the acquisition of transfer sites, and a complete coordination with our railways. We have allowed our railways to sandbag our water carriers without protecting our water carriers by the law, and then we have failed to give our water carriers a perfected instrumentality, which means not only a steady channel, a steady flow of water, but wharves, warehouses, and transfer facilities and a coordination of rail and water carriage.

"You might as well say that you could perfect railway transportation by building a railway across the continent, leaving out the rails every 10 miles and leaving out sidetracks, warehouses, and stations, as to contend that you can make a river an instrumentality of commerce under the conditions which have prevailed with reference to their development.

"How have the water carriers been enabled to sustain themselves in this unequal conflict? Sandbagged by the railways during the period of navigability that put down their rates to the point of loss, without terminal facilities, without transfer facilites, wthout stations or warehouses, unprotected by the law, the individual carrier, the owner of a steamboat, has been compelled to struggle against these tremendous odds, and because he has not succeeded the former Senator from Ohio, after years of investigation, practically declares that the improvement of our rivers for purposes of commerce is a failure.

"Would the Germans have succeeded under such a system? Did they allow the railroads to sandbag the water carriers? Did they say, 'We will perfect railways in every way with single and double tracks and sidetracks and stations and warehouses and the most perfect facilities for transportation, and all we will do on our rivers is to dredge a sand bar here and there, or here and there put up some levees for the protection of some swamp-land proprietor?' Did they content themselves with that, perfecting the railway system and allowing the river system to take care of itself?

"No; they practically artificialized every river throughout its entire course and the tributaries, and not only that but they connected them by canals entirely artificial in their creation, and to-day waterway transportation is just as important as railway transportation, and it is important because it is the cheapest known method of transportation, for you can carry enormous bulk in barges and steamers. In a single barge itself you can carry as much as can be carried in an entire train. The cheapness of carriage to-day from Pittsburgh down to New Orleans of coal and iron indicates how cheap that transportation is.

"DEMOCRATIC PLEDGES.

"Now, Mr. President, the Democratic Party is under a peculiar obligation to do something upon this great subject, for whilst the Republican Party for years has been contenting itself with general phrases the Democratic Party in two conventions has declared in the most specific terms, first, for the coordination of all the scientific services of the Government that relate to water so that their plans shall dovetail with each other; second, for the cooperation of the Nation with the State so that each can cooperate with the other in the formation of plans and the construction of works belonging to their respective jurisdictions; and, third, the creation of an ample fund for continuous work covering every watershed in the country.

"I will ask to insert these various planks of the platform of 1908 and the platform of 1912 in the RECORD.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

"The matter referred to is as follows:

"DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, 1908.

"WATERWAYS.

"Water furnishes the cheaper means of transportation, and the National Government, having the control of navigable waters, should improve them to their fullest capacity. We earnestly favor the immediate adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for improving every watercourse in the Union which is justified by the needs of commerce; and to secure that end we favor, when practicable, the connection of the Great Lakes with the navigable rivers and with the Gulf through the Mississippi River and the navigable rivers with each other by artificial canals, with a view of perfecting a system of inland waterways to be navigated by vessels of standard draft.

"We favor the coordination of the various services of the Government connected with waterways in one service for the purpose of aiding in the completion of such a system of inland waterways, and we favor the creation of a fund ample for continuous work, which shall be conducted under the direction of a commission of experts to be authorized by law.

"DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, 1912.

"WATERWAYS.

"We renew the declaration in our last platform relating to the conservation of our natural resources and the development of our waterways. The present devastation of the lower Mississippi Valley accentuates the movement for the regulation of river flow by additional bank and levee protection below and the diversion, storage, and control of the flood waters above, and the utilization for the beneficial purposes in the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and the development of water power instead of permitting the floods to continue, as heretofore, agents of destruction.

"We hold that the control of the Mississippi River is a national problem. The preservation of the depth of its water for the purposes of navigation, the building of levees to maintain the integrity of its channel, and the prevention of the overflow of the land and its consequent devastation, resulting in the interruption of interstate commerce, the disorganization of the mail service, and the enormous loss of life and property, impose an obligation which alone can be discharged by the General Government.

"To maintain an adequate depth of water the entire year, and thereby encourage water transportation, is a consummation worthy of legislative attention and presents an issue national in its character. It calls for prompt action on the part of Congress, and the Democratic Party pledges itself to the enactment of legislation leading to that end.

"We favor the cooperation of the United States and the respective States in plans for the comprehensive treatment of all waterways with a cooperative plan for channel improvement, with plans for drainage of swamp and overflowed lands, and to this end we favor the appropriation by the Federal Government of sufficient funds to make surveys of such lands, to develop plans for drainage of the same, and to supervise the work of construction.

"We favor the adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for the development and improvement of our inland waterways with economy and efficiency, so as to permit their navigation by vessels of standard draft."

The broad and comprehensive plan for dealing with the problems of river improvement for navigation and the conservation, development, and utilization of all the water resources of the United States embodied in the river-regulation amendment has been widely discussed in the press of the country from one end of it to the other, and has received the practically unanimous approval of the best thought of the Nation, as expressed through resolutions of organizations of every character and the leading newspapers.

The following quotations are merely a brief indication of the trend of sentiment shown by and expressed in thousands of similar indorsements:

"Senator NEWLANDS certainly deserves well of his country for pushing his waterways proposition as he has done." (Salt Lake Tribune.)

"Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada, has been talking sound sense about the futility of the present method of making appropriations for rivers and harbors." (New York Tribune.)

"The Mississippi Valley's prosperity is essential to the prosperity of the whole country; the only way to secure its prosperity is by flood prevention; the only effective flood prevention is by the passage of the Newlands bill or similar legislation." (Houston (Tex.) Chronicle.)

"In the face of the awful lessons of 1911, 1912, and 1913 those Congressmen who opposed the Newlands bill in the last session assumed a grave responsibility." (Los Angeles Tribune.)

"The appalling flood catastrophe which has just befallen the people of the Ohio River Valley emphasizes with striking and irresistible force the urgent and imperative necessity of the national legislation embodied in the Newlands river-regulation bill." (Cincinnati (Ohio) Commercial Tribune.)

"Probably no man in public life is better fitted to discuss questions relating to conservation, particularly as regards dealing with water, than United States Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada." (Troy (N. Y.) Times.)

"Senator NEWLANDS's bill seems to be broadly national rather than selfishly sectional, and in that is to be found no small part of its wisdom and the promise of its deserved success before Congress." (Los Angeles Examiner.)

"We join heartily with Senator NEWLANDS in his idea that the time has come when the issue should be made between annual expenditure of millions on fighting the Mississippi River and a sensible attempt to control it to the advantage of unirrigated territory. The issue is simply one between loss and gain." (Minneapolis News.)

"Senator NEWLANDS is not only a broad-minded statesman and an able speaker, he is an adroit manager and he combines the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re. When Congress emerges from the tariff-currency-Mexican web in which all other legislation is now enmeshed it may, and probably will, take up the Newlands reclamation bill. Once it shall be seriously considered its passage will be a foregone conclusion." (Los Angeles Times.)

"The Newlands bill for the regulation of water flow in the Mississippi Valley and for the reclamation of waste lands is in every feature thoroughly practicable." (F. H. Newell, Director of the Reclamation Service, quoted in the New Orleans Item.)

"The remedy for a pork-barrel system lies in a comprehensive national plan for river improvement and flood prevention, which shall treat each stream in the country as a unit, which shall utilize all the departments of the Federal Government in cooperation, and which shall have regard for all the uses of water, instead of regarding only the local interest. Such a plan is before Congress now in the form of the Newlands river-regulation bill. * * * The adoption of this plan for river control and use would result in the absorption and retention of the water on the upper source streams and tributaries, and this would so standardize the flow and lower the ordinary flood levels and raise the low-water levels that navigation would be enormously improved.

"But the occupation of levee boards, contractors, Army engineser, local politicians, and others who profit from the piecemeal, mud-pie system of sinking money in useless river projects would be gone. Therefore the Newlands bill sleeps in committee, while the pork barrel rolls merrily forward." (Gilson Gardner in Harper's Weekly.)

"The measure proposed is not the result of any slight consideration of the big work in hand, but its terms embody the best thought in the Nation on the subject of river regulation and control, and it behooves everybody in the two great valleys of the State to get behind the bill and leave nothing undone to impress Congress with the crying necessity for such a measure." (Stockton (Cal.) Independent.)

"The Newlands bill, now before Congress, proposes a new policy of flood prevention and river regulation, a policy that clearly recognizes the vital necessity of conserving the food supply of the Nation, which supply is absolutely dependent upon water." (St. Paul Pioneer Press.)

"It is with extreme satisfaction that we note the fast-growing popularity and progress of the Newlands river-regulation bill." (Stockton (Cal.) Mail.)

"This is the greatest constructive measure ever inaugurated by the United States Government for the protection of those affected by the wet and dry seasons of our rivers." (Escalon (Cal.) Tribune.)

"According to Judson C. Wall, of New York, a conservation specialist who advocates the Newlands bill, a comprehensive measure for conserving soil fertility, this country is losing under the present river-regulating policy an average of over $100,000,000 a year." (Wall Street (N. Y.) Journal.)

"A comprehensive, practical, and efficient measure is the Newlands bill for the control of floods of this great valley, and it is growing more and more in public favor as it is better understood." (Memphis News-Scimitar.)

"It is interesting to note that the Newlands bill is gaining friends and that there seems to be good grounds for expecting its passage." (Dayton (Ohio) News.)

"All California, without regard for political considerations or affiliations, will get behind Senator NEWLANDS's comprehensive plan for the development of the inland waterways of the State. Senator NEWLANDS proposes to meet in a statesmanlike way, by a single operation, three of the most pressing problems that confront the people of California." (San Francisco News Letter.)

"The Newlands plan offers opportunities for realization of the ambitions which the people of this region have long cherished and deserves the support of all progressive citizens." (Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian.)

"There can be little doubt that one of the greatest physical tasks awaiting the people of the United States is the proper development of the national water supply. Nor can there be any doubt that this development will best be achieved by a nationally directed policy rather than by the haphazard methods of the different States and of irresponsible private enterprise." (San Francisco Bulletin.)

"Senator NEWLANDS will deserve the thanks of the Nation if he can devise a method of removing the taint of 'pork barrel' from the rivers and barbors bills."

The following is a reproduction of an editorial from the San Francisco Call-Post of August 28, 1917, which points out the great benefits that may result from the inauguration of the policy embodied in the river-regulation amendment, with reference to the industrial conditions that will prevail after the close of the war with Germany:

WORK FOR CALIFORNIA AFTER WAR—TO SAVE WASTED WATER—RESOURCES WORTH $15,000,000,000 WAIT UTILIZATION WHILE VAST AREA OF LAND REMAINS UNPRODUCTIVE.

"After the war, what?

"When the world has been made safe for democracy; when 20,000,000 men have stacked their guns; when the colossal war machine has been brought to a dead halt and the engines and industries of destruction are at last standing still, where shall this inconceivable energy which is now devastating the world be diverted?

"For California this question was raised and answered a few days ago in the United States Senate by Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

"No Californian knows better than Senator NEWLANDS what are California's greatest resources and needs.

"On August 2 Congress adopted his amendment to the rivers and harbors bill. It is a measure whereby the United States Government will undertake the solution of the Nation's water problems. Senator NEWLANDS had won a victory for which he has been fighting for 10 years. He said:

"Peace will bring far-reaching stagnation unless some great constructive policy for building internal improvements is substituted for the stimulus to industry created by the war that will be withdrawn when peace returns.

"The instant peace has been achieved this Nation can turn the same indomitable energy that it is now devoting to winning the war against a foreign foe to winning a greater war against the destroying forces of nature.

"The greatest waste that takes place in the country to-day is the waste of its surplus waters, which are the Nation's greatest asset, but which now run to waste in the sea, carrying destruction in their path in the form of devastating floods. We must learn to conserve that waste and fight that devastation with exactly the same vast and all-conquering energy that we are now devoting to war.

"What is that waste in California? What is the value of our undeveloped water resources?

"When HIRAM W. JOHNSON, now with NEWLANDS in the Senate, was governor of California he appointed Dr. George C. Pardee, former governor, head of a conservation commission to study this question and make investigations.

"Pardee devoted several years to the work.

"He computes the value of California's water resources at $15,000,000,000.

"Fifteen billions of dollars!

"Fifteen thousand times one million!

"Such a sum is inconceivable, as Senator JOHNSON said only the other day in Washington. The human mind can not grasp it. Like infinitude, it is incomprehensible.

"Were this wealth in minted money or in some form that we could measure and divide, it would mean, if distributed, $5,000 to every man, woman, and child in California to-day.

"Enough that every family, counting five to a family, could have a $25,000 farm.

"And since this wealth consists entirely of the unused water and the unused land in the State—though Dr. Pardee did not include the value of the land in his estimate—the farm, of course, makes the most appropriate unit of measurement.

"Dr. Pardee estimates that the water of the State for power purposes is worth $10,000,000,000 and for irrigation $5,000,000,000.

"Less than one-tenth of the available water power is now harnessed and less than one-fifth of the irrigable lands are being watered.

"To make the $15,000,000,000 available for man's enjoyment is the work that Senator NEWLANDS refers to.

"To harness these waste waters, to irrigate another 12,000,000 acres of arid lands, is the work that confronts California.

"To reach this treasure will require the building of great dams, of reservoirs, power plants, and irrigation works.

"There is the fight for California when the war is done."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I also send to the desk a memorial to FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS by the National Reclamation Association, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

NATIONAL RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION.

MEMORIAL TO FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

"Where there is no vision, the people perish."

"The country owes a debt of gratitude to FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS that can be paid only by completing the great work to which his life was devoted. His vision of nature's devastating forces conquered and controlled, of deserts reclaimed by irrigation and swamps by drainage, of valleys defended against onrushing floods, of forests safeguarded against fires, of grass and trees made to grow over millions of acres where none grew before, of winter floods harnessed to float water-borne commerce in summer and furnish power to industry, of waterways aiding railways to meet growing transportation needs, of the Nation's greatest asset, its unused and now wasted waters, fully conserved and utilized for food production, power, and navigation, was a vision of benefactions to future generations that will guide and inspire all who may hereafter labor for its fulfillment.

"Peace will bring obligations to serve humanity no less potent than the demands of war. The devastating forces of nature, forest fires, floods, and the deadly encroachments of the deserts, must in future be fought with the same invincible determination and adequate expenditure with which we have fought the devastating forces of war. Wherever the tendrils of a new life are creeping upward beside the hearthstone of a home founded on the reclaimed desert, the child at its mother's knee should be taught its obligations to those who made that home possible, and its duty to enlist in the great army of peace that will fight to achieve the full realization of the vision of the pioneers of deserts conquested, swamps subjugated, and floods chained and held back until needed to feed gently flowing rivers.

"For a full quarter of a century FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS was a guiding spirit among those pioneers and their leader in the national halls of legislation. He attended the first session of the National Irrigation Congress at Salt Lake City in 1891, and bore a prominent part in its deliberations. Elected to the House of Representatives in the following year (1892), he deliberately dedicated himself to the one great task on which he had determined to found his public career—the reclamation of the arid lands by means of a bold and far-reaching policy of statesmanship. His capacious intellect, informed by wide experience of affairs and tempered by a fine instinct of benevolence, supplied the ideal equipment for this special undertaking.

"He realized that the men of the great West, as trustees for the Nation, and forefathers of an unimaginable future, stood in the presence of a vast problem of which there then appeared no possible solution, yet upon the solution of which the existence and happiness of millions of people would ultimately depend.

"At the beginning of his work in Congress he encountered three apparently insuperable obstacles.

"First, there was a well-nigh universal hostile public opinion, for the science of irrigation was unknown or unappreciated, the half continent of arid or semiarid land was considered practically worthless.

"Next, there was deep-seated opposition from eastern people, particularly farmers, to the appropriation of public moneys for the creation of new agricultural districts in the far West.

"Finally there were local jealousies in arid America itself, each State and valley preferring its own claims to attention before all others.

"With unconquerable optimism this man of vision set himself to overcome the stupendous odds.

"His ceaseless campaign of education, conducted both in and out of Congress, with voice and pen, and extended even to his Washington home, where he converted his colleagues through a series of entertainments and illustrated lectures, eventually brought a powerful following to his support.

"But he had yet to forge the weapon—the actual legislation—on the anvil of debate. He brought forth at length a shining lance, a miracle of statesmanship, which enabled him to strike a fatal blow to the heart of all opposition, both eastern and western.

"This weapon was the original Newlands national-irrigation bill, introduced January 26, 1901, nearly 10 years subsequent to the first national irrigation congress, but prior to the appointment of the famous committee of western statesmen who finally approved it, and before the accession of the President who later urged and signed the measure.

"The Newlands bill overcame all eastern opposition by proposing to take the receipts arising from the sale of the public domain—money contributed by western settlers in exchange for western lands—instead of asking appropriations from the National Treasury.

"It harmonized all western differences by providing for the equitable apportionment of the fund among the public-land States.

"It was a great piece of automatic legislation, placing a revolving fund at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior and thus providing for the construction of project after project without further action of Congress.

"If the fame of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS rested on nothing more it would be secure in the hearts of the western people, but his promotion to the Senate of the United States was followed by something infinitely greater—the Newlands river-regulation bill—certainly the most comprehensive and perhaps the most beneficent single measure of legislation ever devised in any age or country.

"Under the terms of this bill man would assert his promised dominion over the earth and come into his rightful heritage.

"Every stream would be harnessed—for power, for irrigation, for drainage, for navigation—erosion and floods would be prevented and their menace lifted from the flood-stricken valleys.

"Every forest area would be conserved, every deforested area replanted, and new forest plantations created.

"There would be no idle men in the length and breadth of the land; for the work of broadening the country's economic foundation and mobilizing its entire fund of natural resources for human uses would absorb and reward all energies.

"And this was and is only the beginning.

"The great ultimate objective is to open the way for millions of men and women to get homes on the land, to achieve individual independence, and thus effectually to secure the true liberty of the American people throughout all generations.

"The adoption of this policy of continental conquest is as certain as the rising of to-morrow's sun.

"On no other terms can the Republic meet the mighty strain that will be put upon it with the cessation of war activities and the return home of the battling hosts.

"No man lives beyond his allotted span save the few who give the world a new and creative thought that influences for good the fortunes of the many throughout all time.

"To this small company of immortals FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS assuredly belongs.

"A great man who led his country to the threshold of a great epoch and pointed the way!

"He fell at the supreme height of his usefulness.

"He had steadily grown through the years until at last he had attained an unquestioned eminence in the rare quality of constructive statesmanship.

"His fame will broaden and deepen with the passing generations living in the shelter of his thought and work.

"J. H. Braly, president; Francis Cuttle, vice president; W. A. Reeder, chairman of the board; George L. Ralston, treasurer; Fred E. Peterson, secretary; William E. Smythe, T. P. Lukens, George Wharton James, memorial committee; A. K. Brauer, M. V. Hartrauft, Louis C. Hill, George H. Maxwell, Frank H. Olmsted, executive council."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ceremonies having been concluded, the Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof, and in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 2, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, for our great Republic, the foundations of which were laid by the invisible hand of God, out of the eternals, upon which its superstructure has been reared in liberty, truth, justice, and equal rights for all its citizens; for its wide domains, fertile fields, hills, and valleys, mountains and plains filled with treasures, all of which wait on brain and brawn to convert them into the necessities of life.

We thank Thee that a day has been set apart, known as Labor Day, to dignify and celebrate the toiling millions.

Nature has united inseparably capital and labor, each depending upon the other for the highest and best results; and we pray for the day when they shall be joined together in reason and justice, each for all and all for each; that the principles of brotherly love may prevail and harmony reign supreme. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an extract, 20 lines in length, from an act of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana memorializing Congress to reject the Susan B. Anthony amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, why does the gentleman desire to have that in the proceedings of the House, when we have acted upon the matter here?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It has not been disposed of in Congress, and the House is a concurrent branch of that body. I have not the right to offer it in the other branch, and I deem it proper to submit it here.

The SPEAKER. Is it an excerpt from a legislative act?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Extracts from act No. 10 of the general-session acts of the extra session of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the year 1918. Approved Aug. 5, 1918.]

* * * * * * *

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the people of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to reject the so-called Miss Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Federal Constitution, requiring each State to grant suffrage to the female sex without choice or limitation, and authorizing Federal power to enforce the amendment; the said Congress of the United States to declare by this action that the democracy of each separate American State is safe against the force and power of a combination of other American States; and

Be it further resolved, That we call upon our sister States of the Union to likewise declare for State integrity and the safety of American democracy, and vigorously oppose Federal interference with or control of State franchises.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each House of Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on August 31, 1918, they presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolution:

H. R. 11692. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 324. A joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of September, 1918, and for other purposes.

DROUTH IN TEXAS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a resolution passed by the Texas Bank Association touching the drouth conditions in west Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject stated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does the resolution recommend legislation?

Mr. GARNER. It does.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman expect to introduce that legislation?

Mr. GARNER. I would not want to say that; I would not want to say that I advocated the policy that the resolution requests, but I do say that it has information that Congress ought to have and it comes from one of the most responsible bodies of the people that ever congregated in Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The following are the resolutions:

[Resolutions regarding drought-stricken area of west Texas passed by the Central West Texas Bankers' Association at a meeting held in Sweetwater, Tex., Aug. 23, 1918.]

We, your committee appointed on resolutions, beg to report as follows: We find represented at this meeting the banking and business interests of the counties within a radius of 60 miles of Nolan County, in which for the past three years an unprecedented drought has existed, the severity and extent of which is greater than ever known. Yet the people are not asking charity or contribution to enable them to live, but are unable to stay on and live, producing many crops and live stock for their own benefit as well as that of the Government, unless extended further financial assistance. The people have held on and worked diligently until they have exhausted their resources and have sacrificed all their available property which could be used as collateral, but are willing to stay on and work if they can get financial assistance for their farming and stock-raising operations.

We find that the banks and business men have carried faithfully and efficiently the financial burden of the people for the past three years to an extent that they find themselves unable to extend further credit to carry this burden for another year, but it is the sense of the interest represented here that they will continue to carry the burden already imposed upon them for another year if outside assistance can be obtained to finance the farming and stock-raising interests for the coming year.

We commend Secretary W. G. McAdoo, the Federal Reserve Board, and the War Finance Corporation in their present efforts to assist the stock raisers, but direct their attention to a fact which is very evident in this country—that the small farmers are also badly in need of the same character of assistance heretofore rendered others: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Government owes to the farmers every assistance that can properly be given, and to that end we recommend that the loans be made by the War Finance Corporation direct to the farmers in an amount of not less than $5 per acre for each acre which is planted not later than May 15, 1919, with such crops as are essential to the best interests of the Government; said loans to be made upon the following conditions: Loans to be made to all landowners and also to tenants whose paper is supported by the landowner's signature, and said loans to be payable on or before December 1, 1919, secured by a first lien on all crops planted, the proceeds of the loan to be used only in farming operations. The banking interest represented here obligate themselves to administer said relief without expense to the borrower or to the Government.

We recommend that a committee of two be appointed to present these resolutions to the proper authorities and to urge upon them prompt action in procuring the necessary relief called for to the end that funds may be available not later than October 1, 1918.

We further recommend that copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Federal Land Bank of Houston, the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, Gov. W. P. Hobby, of Texas, the War Finance Corporation, Senators and Congressmen from Texas, and the press.

Respectfully submitted.

YOUR COMMITTEE.

LABOR.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and they are my own remarks, on labor, this being Labor Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD on the labor question, this being Labor Day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INCREASING THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday we passed House joint resolution 325, amending section 8 of an act entitled "An act to increase the Military Establishment of the United States." Neither the Clerk of the House nor his assistant is present in the city to sign the resolution. I ask unanimous consent that D. K. Hempstead, present enrolling clerk, be authorized to sign the joint resolution as Clerk pro tempore.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that Mr. D. K. Hempstead, the enrolling clerk, be authorized to sign the resolution as Clerk pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], by special order of the House, is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House:

America entered the war 17 months ago. Five million men are now being called to service. A million and a half men are in France fighting the battles of the Republic—troops are being transported at the rate of 300,000 a month. The Republic is making every sacrifice that goes with war. This is no time for forensic oratory, high-sounding platitudes or phrases. It is no time to think of trifling things. The seriousness of the war should be foremost in every citizen's mind. It should beget from every citizen a citizen's part.

In the few moments I shall engage your attention I shall content myself to deal with that short stretch of time between April 6, 1917, the date of our entrance into the war, and the present.

STATUS OF ARMY ON ENTRANCE INTO THE WAR—A COMPARISON OF THE ARMY DURING THE THREE PRECEDING ADMINISTRATIONS.

At the close of President Roosevelt's administration in 1909, there were all told but 207,067 officers and men in the Army of the United States.

At the close of President Taft's administration in 1913 there were in all branches of the Army service but 211,964 officers and men.

At the close of President Wilson's administration in 1917 there were in all branches of the Army service 323,000 officers and men.

On August 24, 1918, after 17 months of war, we have an army of 2,587,393 officers and men, one million and a half of whom are now in France upholding the honor of the Nation, giving a good account of themselves and making a grateful Nation proud of their hourly and daily achievements. [Applause.]

The last 8 or 10 months have been weird months to me, and must have been to the American people. Each day we have read how, with renewed fury and renewed vigor, the German Army was driving the allies back a little closer to Paris. How proud we have been to read in the papers of the last few weeks that, instead of constantly bending the line back toward Paris, by the aid of our brave boys the allies have been bending the Hindenburg line back toward Berlin. [Applause.]

A COMPARISON OF ARMY APPROPRIATIONS UNDER THE ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON ADMINISTRATIONS.

During the last four years of the Roosevelt administration the total appropriations for the Army of the United States were $425,801,575.25.

During the four years of President Taft's administration, covering the years from 1909 to 1913, the total amount appropriated for the Army of the United States was $442,066,469.35.

During the first four years of President Wilson's administration, covering the years from 1913 to 1917, the total amount appropriated for the Army was $989,413,588.69.

Thus it will be observed that during the first Wilson administration, while the Nation was at peace and prior to our entrance into the war with Germany, the total appropriations for war preparedness exceeded, by more than a hundred million dollars, the total amount appropriated by both the Taft and Roosevelt administrations next preceding.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. That, I suppose, included the contest with Mexico?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; we had the Mexican trouble. That came in during Wilson's first administration. I will repeat the statement again. Wilson's first administration during those four years appropriated more than $100,000,000 more for preparedness than the two preceding Taft and Roosevelt administrations combined. I do not mention these figures in any invidious sense, but they do quite well, I think, disclose that our opponents do not have a complete monopoly on vision and military preparedness.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman able to tell just how much of that was expended in connection with the so-called Mexican border war?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not have those figures segregated. I suppose it would be difficult to determine exactly.

On April 6, 1917, the total number of officers in all branches of the Army service was 8,684. To-day there are 173,077.

On April 6, 1917, the total number of forts, cantonments, training camps, and arsenals in the United States was 257. To-day we have 419.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical science has in all things kept abreast of the times. Eighty-one per cent of the men wounded in action are, by the aid of the Medical Department, the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., and the other patriotic institutions, mended up, restored to health, and returned to action for combatant service. [Applause.]

Only 14 per cent of the men wounded in action are discharged as unfit for further military service. They, by the aid of modern science, are made whole again and returned to the civil pursuits of life. [Applause.]

Only 5 per cent of the men wounded in action die of the wounds received.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will my colleague yield right there?

Mr. FERRIS. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. If my colleague will allow me, I will say that I have just returned from across the sea, and Maj. Perkins, who is commissioner of the Red Cross in Europe, told our party that they had now reduced the figures until only 3 per cent of the injured died. About 85 per cent recovered entirely and were able to go back into the trenches, and only about 12 per cent were permanently and seriously injured in such a manner as to become what is commonly called salvage. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. I thank my colleague very much. I am only too glad to be prompted by my colleague from Oklahoma.

To me this stands out boldly as a true compliment to the medical profession and to the brave and faithful women of the Red Cross who are each day undergoing the hardships at the front ready to do and to die for the soldiers of democracy. To me this stands as a monument to modern science, as a comfort and solace to the mothers and fathers of the land who have given these boys to this patriotic service.

COMPARISON OF THE DEATH RATES IN ARMY CAMPS DURING THIS WAR AND THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

During the Spanish-American War in 1898 the death rate in the training camps reached the enormous percentage of 20.14 men out of every 1,000. The death rate at the present time in camps has been reduced by proper medical attention, proper sanitation, proper nursing, and the application of modern methods to 7.5 men out of every 1,000. [Applause.]

ARMY HOSPITALS.

At the date of our entrance into the war we had but seven Army hospitals with a bed capacity of 5,000 men. To-day we have 63 Army hospitals with a bed capacity of 60,000, with sufficient hospitals under construction to take care of 100,000 men.

PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN HOSPITAL WORK.

On the date of our entrance into the war the total personnel engaged in hospital work was 8,900. To-day we have 171,000 engaged in this most important work. On the date of our entrance into the war we had but 375 nurses. To-day we have 14,527, and the total number is being augmented each day.

COMPARISON OF STRENGTH OF ARMS OF THE SEVERAL COUNTRIES ENGAGED IN THE WAR.

It will be interesting, I know, to the fathers and mothers of the land who are sending 5,000,000 boys across the sea to fight the battles of the Republic to know the armed strength of the leading countries engaged in this war. The following figures are presented. They are taken from newspapers and do not purport to be entirely authentic:

Great Britain	5,000,000
France	3,500,000
Italy	2,000,000
Belgium, Serbia, and Portugal	750,000
United States	2,500,000

NOTE.—Under the new draft law 24,000,000 American men will be registered and an army of 5,000,000 will be raised.

Germany	7,500,000
Austria	4,500,000
Turkey	1,250,000
Bulgaria	350,000

COMPARATIVE AGES INCLUDED IN DRAFT OF THE SEVERAL COUNTRIES.

Much has been said and more written about what ages should be included in the draft. I feel sure it will be of interest to observe what the leading countries engaged in the war have done on this subject. The following figures are taken from the Statesman's Yearbook of 1918:

England	18 to 50
France	18 to 48
Italy	18 to 44
Belgium	18 to 40
Japan	17 to 40
Germany	17 to 55
Austria (peace army)	19 to 42
Turkey (peace army)	20 to 50
Bulgaria (peace army)	20 to 46

INSURANCE FOR THE AMERICAN SOLDIERS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS.

The Wilson administration has created a War Risk Insurance Bureau through which 5,227,434 checks have been issued to dependents of soldiers, aggregating a total sum of $160,568,598.53.

The total number of beneficiaries who are receiving these checks is 1,012,537.

The total amount of insurance written for the soldiers now in the service aggregates the stupendous sum of $30,497,394,000. [Applause.]

It is an admitted fact to-day that nowhere in all the world is there an army of soldiers so well fed, so well clothed, so well paid, so well insured as are the brave boys who are fighting the Republic's battles this day. [Applause.]

AIRPLANE ACHIEVEMENTS.

Much has been written and more spoken regarding the airplane service and the efforts of your Government in airplane production and the mastery of the air. When we entered the war we had 65 officers and 1,120 men in the air service. To-day we have 6,600 officers and 150,000 men in that service. [Applause.]

When we entered the war we had three small aviation fields. To-day we have 28.

When we entered the war we had less than 200 second-class planes. To-day we have 5,554 American-built planes and more than 2,000 planes in France. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman remembers the efforts of the late distinguished Augustus P. Gardner to have this House vote in an appropriation bill enough money to build 600 aeroplanes?

Mr. FERRIS. I do, and may the God of the universe, keeper and ruler of us all, honor and revere his memory. We are proud of him and of the patriotism which led him into the war in which he lost his life, and I yield to no man in my admiration for him. [Applause.]

We have 7,000 trained aviators in the United States; 2,000 men trained abroad; 4,000 awaiting assignment to ground school. Our cadets are flying 3,000 hours a day, a total of 195,000 miles, or eight times around the entire world.

In one field in the United States 135 planes can be seen in the air at one time. These planes are flying 882 hours a day.

I do not say in a great undertaking like this one—a mastery of the air—there will not be mistakes. There doubtless have been and will be both mistakes and money lost; but I do say that this long line of achievements, and this long line of development, and this long line of training, I have recited as to airplanes, need make no American ashamed either of his President, his country or his flag. [Applause.]

Some months ago critics and enemies of the Republic were heard to say, "The Wilson administration and Secretary Baker have not come up to the standard in quickly and efficiently raising an army." I pause and ask where and when in the history of all civilization has republic or empire within any 17 months' period of recorded time made such a record in raising, equipping, transporting, and making in all things ready such an army? Can there be anything about this achievement that will make Americans ashamed? Can there be anything about this achievement that will make Democrats ashamed of their democracy or make Republicans ashamed of their country? Can there be anything about this long line of achievement that will be otherwise than pleasing to the patriotic citizens of the land and otherwise than displeasing and disheartening to the enemies without? Will the carping critics go on criticizing and obstructing the Government that protects them, feeds them, and serves them? Will the enemies of the Republic within, either through disloyalty or blind partisanship, go on destroying more than constructing, hindering more than helping? No! I prefer to believe that this will be the verdict of but the few. I prefer to believe that Republicans and Democrats everywhere will prefer to stand behind and encourage the public officers and the private citizens who stand squarely behind the President, the Congress, the country, the Government, and the brave boys at the front during this trying hour. [Applause.]

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE NAVY.

When we entered the war 17 months ago we had in the Navy of the United States, all told, 304 ships; to-day, struggling against the heaviest odds, combating submarines, a world war, and the demands that go with it, instead of 304 we have 1,720 ships in the Navy of the United States. [Applause.]

When we entered the war we had 83,323 officers and men, all told, in the Navy of the United States; to-day we have in the Navy of the United States 561,735. [Applause.]

COMPARISON OF THE NAVY UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

The total number of men in the Navy of the United States at the close of Roosevelt's last administration, including the Navy, Naval Reserves, and all, was 55,548.

The total number of men in the Navy of the United States at the close of Taft's administration, including the Navy, Naval Reserves, and all, was 65,056.

The total number of men in the Navy of the United States at the close of Wilson's first administration, including Navy, Naval Reserves, and all, was 83,323.

At the present time, after 17 months of preparation and war, we have a Navy made up of 561,735 officers and men, who are giving a good account of themselves both at home and abroad. [Applause.]

A comparison of these figures and the modest growth of the Navy under the three administrations just referred to discloses the fact that during the four years of President Taft's administration we increased the Navy but 10,000 men; during the four years of Wilson's administration we increased it 18,000. Thus it will be observed that prior to our entrance into the war no political party held a complete monopoly on preparedness or the increase of the personnel of the Navy of the United States.

COMPARISON OF FIGHTING SHIPS UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

At the close of the last Roosevelt administration the Republic was protected by 173 Navy ships only. At the close of the Taft administration our Republic was protected by 176 Navy ships only. At the close of Wilson's first administration our Republic was protected by 304 Navy ships.

Thus it will be observed that the Wilson administration had been gradually forging to the front in naval construction and in naval preparedness.

COMPARISON OF NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

During the last four years of the Roosevelt administration the actual amount appropriated, all told, for the Navy of the United States was $470,811,372.11.

During the four years of the Taft administration the actual amount appropriated, all told, for the Navy of the United States was $526,350,935.24.

During Wilson's first administration the actual amount appropriated, all told, for the Navy of the United States was $1,141,856,694.25.

Thus it will be observed that the Wilson administration, during the four years prior to our entrance into the War appropriated $140,000,000 more than both the Taft and Roosevelt administrations combined. [Applause.] Thus it will be observed that it can scarcely be charged that the Wilson administration had been without vision, without preparedness, and without patriotism. [Applause.]

When we entered the war our Navy ranked but a slow third, even a fourth, among the navies of the world; to-day she ranks second, and from a standpoint of efficiency we may well assert that she is without a parallel and without a peer. [Applause.]

This Navy has escorted, in a single six-month period, by one detachment of American destroyers, 717 single vessels, as well as 86 separate convoys averaging from 10 to 40 ships each. It has engaged in 81 submarine combats; it has sailed over 1,000,000 miles; it has conducted our boys across in safety; it is the wonder and marvel of the age! [Applause.]

Eight months ago critics and enemies of the Republic were calling the brilliant Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, a backwoodsman, a country newspaper editor, an inefficient cabinet officer of the United States. To-day both critic and hypercritic are silent and unobserved. To-day friends of the Republic point to the achievements of Josephus Daniels and the Navy of the United States as in all things efficient and in all things making good.

To-day Josephus Daniels stands out as the popular hero of the hour, the efficient Secretary of the Navy. If such a Secretary of the Navy be a backwoodsman and a country editor, and if such a Secretary of the Navy be a fit subject for the critic and hypercritic, may the God of the Universe increase and multiply his tribe. [Applause.]

UNPARALLELED DEVELOPMENT OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE DURING THE WILSON ADMINISTRATION.

America has always needed an adequate merchant marine. In war times she needs it worse than in any other time. At the outbreak of the war our merchant marine was composed of 385 vessels, with a total tonnage of 1,225,784 gross tons. We now have 1,400 ships, with a total tonnage of 7,000,000.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. Does that include the German shipping that was taken over?

Mr. FERRIS. It does, yes. I was just going to give that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that many of these vessels have been assigned to the Navy.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me proceed and I think the gentleman will be satisfied with what I shall say. I get these figures from the Shipping Board. They have found them to be correct. We now have 1,000 American-built vessels; we have 400 vessels that have been requisitioned, making a total of 1,400 vessels, and of the 1,000 which we built and the 400 which we requisitioned, 1,400 in the aggregate, it makes a total gross tonnage of 7,000,000 tons. [Applause.] Thus it will be observed that our shipping has been changed from 1,000,000 plus tons to 7,000,000 tons in the period of 17 months. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for information?

Mr. FERRIS. I really would like to go on.

Mr. MADDEN. Right at that point. I do not do it to embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman does not. I will tell the gentleman if I am able to answer.

Mr. MADDEN. I would just like to ask if the gentleman knows how much of that tonnage has been built by the Shipping Board and how much was requisitioned?

Mr. FERRIS. One thousand of them are American-built ships and 400 are requisitioned.

Mr. MADDEN. And how much tonnage?

Mr. FERRIS. I will give the tonnage. The 1,000 American-built ships have a tonnage of 4,584,000 gross tons. The 400 requisitioned have 2,500,000 gross tons, making an aggregate of 7,000,000 gross tons of shipping as distinguished from a million and a quarter gross tons of shipping at the beginning of this war. [Applause.]

We have to-day under construction 819 shipbuilding ways, including those for wooden, steel, and concrete vessels, which is twice as many ways as there are in the rest of the shipyards of the world. Our present program calls for 2,101 vessels, exclusive of tugs and barges, which will be built and put on the sea by the Emergency Fleet Corporation in the course of carrying out the present program. The total aggregate dead-weight tonnage of this enormous program will be 14,715,000 gross tons.

Five billion dollars will be required to finish our program for the years of 1918, 1919, and 1920.

Can there be in all history such a marvelous achievement? Can a grateful Republic fail to appreciate and recognize an achievement so marked and outstanding? Can a faithful constituency, solicitous for the well-being of their Republic, be unmindful of this achievement in merchant-marine building, and can the critic of yesterday still be the critic of to-day. Can the patriotic man who loves and reveres his country fail to take full cognizance of the adverse conditions under which the Emergency Fleet Corporation has labored?

No! I prefer to believe that a grateful Republic will give full credit where credit belongs, and will stand behind the President and the Congress that have faithfully stood by them. [Applause.]

AMERICA GENEROUS—AMERICA WILLING—AMERICA ACTUALLY DOING HER FULL PART.

How proud it must make every American feel to know that he lives in a country so strong, so able, so willing, and so generous, as to help the struggling nations of the earth preserve the liberties of mankind. The United States have, up to September 2, 1918, executed loans to our allies engaged in this great conflict to the amount of $7,092,040,000. Thus it will be observed that in shipbuilding, in railroad building, transportation of troops and supplies, in carrying every burden incident to this great conflict, in each time America has stood erect to duty the day that duty called—she has performed her full part. History's pages can not fail to record and give full credit to her great achievements and her great ability to do and to achieve.

AMERICA THE MELTING POT.

As we run down the roster of names that are serving in this great conflict, we find every nationality represented, we find every nationality doing its part. How proud I am that this is true. How proud I am that the great majority of those that come to us from foreign shores so soon have taken on the spirit of freedom, liberty, and justice; how soon they take on the spirit that means hope for humanity, how soon the heartbeat quickens for the flag of their adopted land!

This was brought to my attention most forcibly in an article appearing in Everybody's magazine for July, 1916, by Elias Liebermann, "I am an American."

At a meeting of school children in Madison Square Garden, New York City, to celebrate the Fourth of July, one boy, a descendent of native Americans, spoke as follows: "I am an American. My father belongs to the Sons of the Revolution; my mother belongs to the Colonial Dames. One of my ancestors pitched tea overboard in Boston Harbor; another stood his ground with Warren; another hungered with Washington at Valley Forge. My forefathers were American in the making; they spoke in her council halls; they died on her battle fields; they commanded her ships; they cleared her forests. Dawns reddened and paled. Staunch hearts of mine beat fast at each new star in the Nation's flag. Keen eyes of mine foresaw her greater glory; the sweep of her seas, the plenty of her plains, the man-hives in her billion-wired cities. Every drop of blood in me holds a heritage of patriotism. I am proud of my past. I am an American."

[Applause.]

Then a foreign-born boy arose and said:

"I am an American. My father was an atom of dust; my mother was a straw in the wind to His Serene Majesty. One of my ancestors died in the mines of Siberia; another was crippled for life by 20 blows of the knout; another was killed defending his home during the massacres. The history of my ancestors is a trail of blood to the palace gate of the Great White Czar. But then the dream came—the dream of America. In the light of Liberty's torch the atom of dust became a man and the straw in the wind became a woman for the first time. 'See,' said my father, pointing to the flag that fluttered near. 'That flag of stars and stripes is yours; it is the emblem of the promised land. It means, my son, the hope of humanity. Live for it, die for it!' Under the open sky of my new country I swore to do so; and every drop of blood in me will keep that vow. I am proud of my future. I am an American."

[Applause.]

SPECIOUS PLEAS OF THE UNPATRIOTIC.

Most of the hundred and ten million people of this Republic are good people—few of them are bad. Most of the people are patriotic, love their flag and their country—few of them are unfaithful and untrue and would hinder and destroy more than they would help and support. The names of the latter class will not adorn the pages of history. Their names will be forgotten with the close of the day. Their individuality forgotten with the onrushing tide of a mighty nation engaged in honest effort and honest achievement.

During the early days of the war men were heard to say, "This is a rich man's war and a poor man's fight;" but this accusation, both then and now, was false and malicious, for under the income-tax laws and the excess-profit tax law the rich in so far as it is possible for dollars to pay for the war, are largely bearing the burden. Under the selective draft law and regulations the rich man's son is standing side by side with the poor man's son, fighting the battles of his country. [Applause.] While I hold no brief for the rich—I neither belong to that class nor do I know much about them—yet I would hate and despise the name that I bear, I would hate and despise myself, if I found myself going up and down the country teaching the doctrine that one class of citizens should hate and despise another. [Applause.] No; in a land where freedom, justice, and liberty is to have and to hold by every citizen of the Republic, in a land where the humblest citizen can rise from the lowest walks of life to the highest pinnacle of political preferment and success—in a land where officials are elected by the popular vote, and where every citizen is clothed with the right to vote—no, in a land where the rich and poor, the savage, and the civilized are all allowed to participate in the blessings of their Government, these agitators carrying the doctrine of unrest should not go unchallenged and untouched. [Applause.]

ENEMIES OF THE REPUBLIC ASSERT WILSON A DICTATOR.

Enemies of the Republic have been heard to say, some through blind partisanship, and some through disloyalty, that our President and our Commander in Chief is a dictator, clothed with more authority than any President should have. My answer to this charge is that it is a slander and an untruth; my answer to this is that one who makes such a charge in war times is a man who hates his country more than he loves it, who retards it more than he helps it, and who worries more about politics and partisan advantage than he does about the success of the boys at the front.

This charge shall not be answered alone by denial. It shall be answered on substantial grounds, which will be both satisfying and sufficient, to the satisfaction of historians and to the man who loves and reveres the country in which he lives.

The Constitution, formulated by the fathers almost a century and a half ago, laid down the doctrine that the President of the United States shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. That Commander in Chief during war times should be, and of right is, the Commander in Chief in all that the term implies. His power must, and of necessity should be, unusual, far-reaching, and complete. To have it otherwise is to subject the Republic to the only criticism that has ever been successfully waged against a republican form of government, which is that a republic governed by the consent of the governed during the hour of great stress can not quickly assemble itself for purposes of defense. I repeat, the only way to successfully combat this charge is in time of war to quickly, completely, and without stint give the Chief Executive full power to act, and to act without conducting a debating society while the enemy of the country is at the gates.

No; for me and mine, I prefer to have it said of us as a Nation, as a people, and written in history, that in time of great stress we first dared to give our Chief Executive full power to act and, second, that he, with the valor and courage of a true American, dared to use sufficiently and well the power so conferred upon him.

The Congress of the United States have given this power. How proud I am this day that the present President of the United States has both the courage and the ability to execute, use, and exert the powers thus conferred efficiently, honestly, intelligently, and courageously.

OPPONENTS CHARGE INFIDELITY BECAUSE OF THE FACT THAT IN THE LAST CAMPAIGN WE USED THE SLOGAN "HE KEPT US OUT OF WAR."

If it be a crime for a great peace-loving President, backed up by a peace-loving Congress and Nation, to strive two and a half years to keep us out of war, we are guilty of bad faith. During that two and a half years of war, amidst President Wilson's appeals for peace, Germany sank 1,276 merchant ships that were carrying on the commerce of the United States. Four hundred and twenty-five of those merchant vessels belonged to neutral countries, in no wise engaged in the war—21 were vessels of the United States, carrying the starry banner of the Republic; all of these vessels were going where they had the right to go, doing what they had the right to do, molesting no one, only asking to be let alone.

Of the countless thousands of citizens who were sent to the bottom with these ill-fated ships, 225 were American-born citizens, men, women, and children, who, too, were doing what they had the right to do, molesting no one, only modestly asking to be let alone and protected in their undoubted rights.

Was it the wish of these critics that their President should not make the struggle for peace, and hope and pray that the bitter cup of war might pass? Was it the wish of these critics that after we had suffered these attacks for two and a half years, and Germany had served formal notice on us that the attacks would continue, and that the sea was closed, and that our commerce would be fired upon, submarined, sunk without warning, that then the President should not go to war? What is the exact position of these critics?

Some say we went to war too quickly, others say not quickly enough, but the great bulk of the people of this country did not want the President to go to war any sooner than he did, and they were anxious and ready to support him in his efforts when he did enter; and the Republic to-day, irrespective of partisan politics, irrespective of selfishness, and irrespective of slight disloyalty here and there, are standing behind the President, are upholding the President, are approving of his course, and are helping him win the war.

No, to me this attack that our opponents are making is both false and unavailing. It can but mislead the unwary, it can not but tickle the palate of the disloyal; it can not disrupt, disintegrate, or interrupt the mind, the hopes, the fears, the ambitions of the patriotic, good citizen who first wanted his country to remain at peace, if peace was possible, and second, wanted his country to go to war if lasting and honorable peace were impossible.

WASHINGTON, LINCOLN, AND WILSON—ALL OBSTRUCTED BY AGITATORS.

Agitators, like the poor, will always be with us. Washington had many Tories, Lincoln had many copperheads, Wilson has a few pacifists and agitators. Wilson has less than the rest.

During the Civil War, the immortal Lincoln, whose homely words grow in grace as the years speed by, spoke of agitators in the following words:

Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wily agitator who induces him to desert? This is none the less injurious when effected by getting a father or brother or friend into a public meeting and there working upon his feelings till he is persuaded to write the soldier boy that he is fighting in a bad cause for a wicked administration of a contemptible Government, too weak to arrest and punish him if he shall desert. I think that in such a case to silence the agitator and save the boy is not only constitutional but withal a great mercy. [Applause]

To-day the one plea of our President is, and has been, to silence the agitator and save the boy.

In war times desertion is a capital offense for which the military court may administer the highest penalty. Still, your President, like Lincoln of the sixties, like Washington of Revolutionary times, is worrying less about the homesick boy who deserts his command to return to his sorrowing mother than about the wily agitator who induces him to desert. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma may proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I amend that request by asking that the gentleman be permitted to go on until he concludes.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman. I am much indebted to him, but I thing I can conclude in the time asked for. I thank both the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Minnesota.

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT, STAND BY THE COUNTRY, STAND BY THE FLAG, STAND BY THE BOYS AT THE FRONT.

There can be but one issue at the approaching election. No one would have it otherwise if they could, no one could change it if they would. It is the all-absorbing question of standing together as a unit for an early and successful closing of this war. [Applause]. We want our brave boys to come marching home in victory—not in defeat. We want them to feel and know that they are fighting for a united and undivided country. We want them to feel and know that when they return, they will return to an undivided and united country. The issue was plain during the Spanish-American War, when the late President McKinley was Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The issues were made plain by ex-President Roosevelt, while he was a candidate for governor of New York, speaking for the election of a Republican Congress and appealing to the citizenship to stand behind President McKinley, while he conducted the Spanish-American War. His exact words were as follows:

Remember that whether you will or not, your votes this year will be viewed by the nations of Europe from one standpoint only. They will draw no fine distinctions. A refusal to sustain the President this year, will, in their eyes, be read as a refusal to sustain the war and to sustain the efforts of our peace commission to secure the fruit of war. Such a refusal may not inconceivably bring about a rupture of the peace negotiations. It will give heart to our defeated antagonists; it will make possible the interference of those doubtful neutral nations, who in this struggle have wished us ill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to go a little further. I know the gentleman will be glad to hear it. It is always refreshing to the gentleman to quote prominent Republicans.

Mr. MADDEN. I will be glad to hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. FERRIS. This is not what I say. Ex-President Benjamin Harrison, speaking at a biennial election while the Spanish-American War was yet unsettled and in progress, had this to say, and I want the gentleman from Illinois to get it:

If the word goes forth that the people of the United States are standing solidly behind the President, the task of the peace commissioners will be easy, but if there is a break in the ranks—if the Democrats score a telling victory, if Democratic Senators, Congressmen, and governors are elected—Spain will see in it a gleam of hope, she will take fresh hope, and a renewal of hostilities, more war, may be necessary to secure to us what we have already won.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to go a little further.

Mr. MADDEN. It is right on that point.

Mr. FERRIS. The American people answered the summons of their Commander in Chief, they gave him a Republican Congress to show to Spain and to the world that we were solidly behind the Commander in Chief. So, I am to-day happy in the thought that we may with full propriety issue a similar summons to the American people to stand behind the President, show complete solidarity and let the world know that we are unflinching and unfaltering in our efforts to win the war quickly. My speech is their speech, my appeal is their appeal. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will not deny, I hope, that no more loyal support has been given to the President by anybody than that which has been given by the Republican Members of this House, and I hope the gentleman will not make the assertion that if Republican Members of the House are elected who are known to be loyal it will be considered as adverse to the President.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, there are so many recipes and so many acid tests going around, governing men's votes and conduct here, I know the gentleman would not be satisfied with any acid test that I might lay down, and I will tell the gentleman a story which I think will fit his case pretty well.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to have the gentleman answer my question.

Mr. FERRIS. The purported ardent support of some of our Republican friends in standing by the President reminds me of a boy who was hoeing potatoes in the blazing sun. A traveling man came along and said to the boy: "Sonny, how much do you get for hoeing potatoes?" The boy said: "I don't get nuthin' if I do hoe 'em, but I get hell if I don't." And that is about the way with you brethren over there. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know that I will be able to answer it.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish to have the people understand from the story he has just told that Republican Members of Congress of the United States have supported the Government of the United States because they were afraid that if they did not do it they would get hell, or have they supported it because they are for America? [Applause].

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman must not make a speech in my time. The gentleman is swerving a pleasantry into a serious matter. I am proud of most of you, as you know, and I appreciate the good work you have done. Some of you have stubbed your toes a little over there, as occasionally we do on our side.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman be good enough to admit that the potato-digging story which he has just told is one of the famous stories of the late lamented Francis W. Cushman, whose district I now have the honor to represent on this floor?

Mr. FERRIS. Sure! We were always delighted and convulsed with the humor and stories of the beloved Cushman.

REPUBLICANS' CHIEF SLOGAN—THEY, TOO, ARE STANDING BEHIND THE PRESIDENT.

This virtue of standing behind the President, which we all hear so much about on the part of our brethren on the other side, makes one pause and reflect—if the chief virtue of the Republicans to-day is that they are standing behind the Democratic President, surely there must be some virtue in the Democratic President they are so clamorous to stand behind.

THE WILSON ADMINISTRATION HAS BEEN FREE FROM PARTISANSHIP.

One word about some of the more or less specious pleas that are flying through the air. There are men here who are better able to present that than I. We hear it in the press, we hear it on the floor, and we heard it the other day, that the President was steeped in partisanship, and that partisanship was about the only business he was carrying on. Well, I have served in the minority in this House a long time, and I know how easy it is for men of the minority to think the majority is bad. I sometimes in a moment of anger have thought that myself, and you probably think that we are. But let us examine and see just how partisan the President has been in some of his appointments. The first prominent mission that has been sent abroad to render any marked service was headed by Elihu Root, one of the most prominent Republicans of the country to-day, who has seen service in almost all walks of public life.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman be kind enough to yield there?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to go further.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. My inquiry is pertinent right here. Does the gentleman say that the numerous and much repeated trips to Europe of Col. House have been of no avail?

Mr. FERRIS. I merely mention, and the gentleman with his good nature and good idea of governmental affairs will not deny it, that the man sent on one of the most delicate missions was headed by Elihu Root, a Republican.

A second appointment, as chairman of the War Labor Board, is none other than the distinguished and beloved ex-President of the United States, William Howard Taft.

And the next one—and it was to a delicate task—and if there were any errors made in the war at all—and I assume there have been many, and they probably have been in connection with the aircraft service—let us see how partisan the President was: He appointed ex-Justice Hughes, the last Republican nominee for the Presidency; so that if there is anything wrong, he can bring it out and show it to the American people.

Let us see who is Director General of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. It is Charles M. Schwab, a Republican.

Charles Piez, vice president of the Fleet Corporation, is a Republican. William Phillips is an Assistant Secretary of State, and he appoints all the consular officers of the United States to go everywhere on earth. He is a Republican. Mr. L. W. Woolsey, a solicitor of the State Department, is a Republican. Mr. L. S. Rowe is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, a Republican. Mr. R. C. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is a Republican. He approves of the Liberty loan quotas, and so forth. Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman War Savings Stamps Committee, is a Republican. Benedict Crowell, first Assistant Secretary of War, is a Republican. Mr. Frederick P. Keppel, Assistant Secretary of War, is a Republican. Mr. E. R. Stettinius, Assistant Secretary of War, is a Republican. Mr. A. B. Bielaski, who investigates everything from a hencoop to the President of the United States, is a Republican. Mr. William R. Willcox, former chairman of the Republican Committee and who conducted the last Republican campaign, is also a Republican, and he is connected with the Federal Railway Wage Commission. H. A. Garfield, who tells you whether you shall shiver or be warm, is a Republican.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a former resident of my State, I must protest against the gentleman's attack on Dr. Garfield. He is not a Republican, and never has been. He has been a strong supporter of President Wilson both times. He is the son of a Republican ex-President, of course.

Mr. FERRIS. If I am wrong about it, and he has seen the light at this late hour, we welcome him. We will leave the latchstring out for the rest of the sons of Republican ex-Presidents.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He has gone from the light into the darkness, but that happened many years ago.

Mr. FERRIS. We shall welcome them in.

Mr. Herbert Hoover is a Republican. He tells whether we can or can not have jelly on our bread. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Who knows that?

Mr. FERRIS. The facts are that the President in a moment of generosity and perhaps of doubtful propriety gives a Republican an office, and you gentlemen ought to applaud the fact rather than to turn them out of the party the minute they get an appointment from us. There are so many Republicans in office now if you depose them all you will be destitute of the personnel of the Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Herbert Hoover is a man of great merit, of course, whether he is a Republican or Democrat.

Mr. KNUTSON. He has not voted for 20 years.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know whether he has or not, but he is a good man.

WE MUST WIN THE WAR.

Mr. FERRIS. The Republic must play a vigorous and prominent part in the winning of this war. To do otherwise is to admit that free governments can not survive, that free governments will not stand together against the mailed fist. The Republic can not successfully follow the dim and flickering light of pacifism. The "peace at any price" citizen will but lead us in the pathway of dishonor, disaster, disintegration, and shame.

If Germany should succeed, it would be written in history that democracies are too weak to grapple with monarchies. The patriotic blood that flows through our veins, handed down to us by the fathers who conceived this Republic, will allow no such page in history to be written.

We must win the war, for to lose it is not alone to lose our country, but our liberty. To lose the war would be to let freedom and liberty welter in the blood of the fathers. To lose the war is to say that the soldier and not the citizen shall make the state. To lose the war would mean that liberty would go cringingly out the back door while militarism comes in at the front.

No one knows when the war will be concluded or won. But I believe every one of the 110,000,000 patriotic citizens of the land knows it will be won, and that our brave boys at the front will do their full share in winning it. [Applause.]

PEACE.

Peace has always been a passion with the Nation in which we live. But it has been an honorable peace we have sought, as distinguished from a dishonorable one.

It has been a lasting peace that this Nation has sought and not a temporary one. There are rights and liberties among men that are dearer than peace.

Peace can not be among honorable men or nations when war is constantly made upon them. Peace can not be when the flag of the Republic is being fired upon and disdained. Peace can not be when innocent men, women, and children, going where they had the right to go, attending to their daily routine affairs, are torpedoed, submarined, mutilated, murdered, and sunk. Peace can not be amidst the gurgling sounds of the drowning. Peace can not be when Kaiserism, Prussianism, and the mailed fist reigns, and liberty, justice, and even the Deity is proselyted and disdained.

Democracy to-day is making her last stand in a death grapple with autocracy. The right of democracy to succeed against autocracy is dearer than peace. There can be no peace but an honorable peace. There can be no peace worth having but a lasting peace.

Patriotism! The Republic and its destiny rests with you. Let every citizen in every corner of the land kindle it anew. Kindle the smouldering embers that patriotism may stalk among us as it did in '76. Kindle it anew that liberty, democracy, free Government, free institutions, and the Republic in which we live may not be disintegrated, perished, and gone. For in the name of freedom, justice, and the liberties of men, we are right and they are wrong. [Applause.]

SUPPLEMENTAL SLATE EMBODYING AMERICA'S ACHIEVEMENTS IN WAR MAKING COVERING A PERIOD OF SEVENTEEN MONTHS.

CAUSES OF THE WAR.

First, 1,276 merchant ships, 425 neutral ships, 21 American ships sunk prior to April 6, 1917. Among thousands that went down, 225 were full American citizens.

Second, through Germany's war zone so closed, two-thirds of our export wheat, five-sixths of our hog products, six-sevenths of our cotton products, seven-eighths of our beef products passed last year.

Third, 26 countries have either severed diplomatic relations or declared war against Germany—four-fifths of the earth's surface to-day are sworn enemies of Germany.

Fourth, President Wilson, Congress, 100,000,000 people pleaded for peace two and half years. There was no peace.

WAR RESOLUTION.

Passed House April 6, 1917—373 to 50; 196 Democrats "yes"; 16 Democrats "no"; 177 Republicans "yes"; 32 Republicans "no".

Passed Senate April 4, 1917—82 to 6; 45 Democrats "yes"; 3 Democrats "no"; 37 Republicans "yes"; 3 Republicans "no".

Signed by President Wilson April 6, 1917.

CONSCRIPTION.

Passed House—397 "yes"; 24 "no".

Passed Senate—81 "yes"; 8 "no".

Most democratic way to raise an army.

YOUTHFUL VOLUNTEERS DURING CIVIL WAR.

For example, under the volunteer system during the Civil War youths of tender years neglected their education, neglected their all, to enlist in the war. The War Department has compiled a list of men who served in the Civil War, by groups, and they are as follows:

10 years and under	25
11 years	13
12 years	187
13 years	75
14 years	1,223
15 years	104,464
16 years	125,064
17 years	613,840
18 years	306,547
19 years to 21 years	1,008,360
22 years to 24 years	571,855
25 years to 43 years	30,555
44 years and over	16,071

I shall not by word or thought cast one aspersion upon the volunteer soldier. The volunteer soldier is the salt of the earth—God bless him and increase his tribe. But what I will say is that the volunteer system is not without its impedimenta, objections, and hardships. For example, the War Department has compiled a list of bounties paid by the several States that became necessary to secure soldiers to fight the cause of the Union. The list by States is no less than astounding. It is as follows:

Maine	$7,837,000
New Hampshire	9,600,000
Vermont	4,500,000
Massachusetts	22,900,000
Rhode Island	820,000
Connecticut	6,800,000
New York	89,600,000
New Jersey	23,868,000
Pennsylvania	43,000,000
Delaware	1,000,000
Maryland	6,000,000
District of Columbia	134,000
West Virginia	864,000
Kentucky	692,000
Ohio	23,500,000
Indiana	9,000,000
Illinois	17,000,000
Michigan	9,600,000
Wisconsin	5,800,000
Iowa	1,600,000
Minnesota	2,000,000
Missouri	1,200,000
Kansas	57,000

LINCOLN'S LETTER TO MRS. BIXBY.

During the progress of the Civil War that great man in the White House, the lamented Lincoln, wrote this letter to a mother up in New England. It is dated Executive Mansion, Washington, November 21, 1864, and is written to Mrs. Bixby, Boston, Mass.:

DEAR MADAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

Who is there by word or thought that believes that this widowed mother should furnish five boys to give up their lives in defense of their country while the next-door neighbor keeps their boys at home, refuses to let them serve, thereby enabling them to profit by the going of the widow's sons?

COMPARISON OF ARMY UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

At close of Roosevelt's administration, all branches of service	207,067
At close of Taft's administration, all branches of service	211,964
At close of Wilson's first administration, all branches of service	323,000

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT, RED CROSS, Y. M. C. A., ETC.

1. Report August 24, 1918. Eighty-one per cent men wounded in action return to action; 14 per cent of men wounded are discharged unfit for military service. Five per cent of men wounded die of wounds.

2. During Spanish-American War, 1898, death rate in camps was 20.14 men out of every 1,000. Present death rate 7.5 per 1,000, August 24, 1918.

3. Army hospitals, 7 then, 63 now (Aug. 24, 1918). Others under construction. Bed capacity then 5,000, now 60,000. Soon to be increased to 100,000.

4. Personnel engaged in hospital work—then 8,900, now 171,000. Then 375 nurses, now 14,527 nurses (Aug. 24, 1918). Ambulance service—then, nothing; now (Aug. 24, 1918), 6,000.

5. Gas masks that protect the wearer from 12 to 24 hours without discomfort. An adequate supply has been produced and furnished the soldiers at the front.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE WAR RISK INSURANCE BUREAU.

American soldiers better fed, better clothed, better paid, better insured than any other soldiers in the world.

The Wilson Administration has created the War Risk Insurance Bureau, through which 5,227,434 checks have been issued to dependents of soldiers, representing an aggregate sum of $160,568,598.53.

Total number of beneficiaries who are receiving checks (August 24, 1918), 1,012,537.

Total amount of insurance written for the soldiers now in the service aggregates the stupendous sum of $30,497,394,000.

April 6, 1917, 304 ships afloat; August 24, 1918, 1,720 ships afloat.

April 6, 1917, men and officers, 83,323; August 24, 1918, men and officers, 561,735.

April 6, 1917, third or fourth navy of the world; August 24, 1918, second navy of the world—from standpoint of efficiency, first.

COMPARISON OF NAVIES UNDER ROOSEVELT, TAFT, AND WILSON.

Total number of men in Navy at close of Roosevelt administration, including naval enlisted and naval reserves	55,548
Total number at close of Taft administration	65,056
Total number at close of Wilson's first four years	83,323
Total number Aug. 24, 1918	561,735
Navy ships of all kinds.
Close of Roosevelt administration	173
Close of Taft administration	176
Close of Wilson's first administration	304
Navy appropriations.
Roosevelt	$470,811,372.11
Taft	526,350,935.24
Wilson's first	1,141,856,694.25

NAVY CONSTRUCTION.

April 6, 1917, 35,000 mechanics and men.
August 24, 1918, 90,000 mechanics and men.

SHIP SINKINGS.

April 6, 1917 to August 24, 1918, 124 merchant vessels, gross tonnage 314,303; 13 vessels of the Navy—mostly small craft and converted yachts.

April 6, 1917 to August 24, 1918, neutral merchant vessels sunk, 1,431; gross tonnage 2,205,054.

The Navy has escorted thousands of ships in safety. In a six months' period one detachment of American destroyers escorted 717 single vessels as well as 86 convoys, numbering from 10 to 40 ships. It engaged in 81 submarine combats and sailed over 1,000,000 miles.

RELATIVE RANK OF NAVY FOR CERTAIN PERIODS.

No. 3 at close of Roosevelt administration.
No. 3 at close of Taft administration.
No. 2 at close of Wilson's first term.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

At the beginning of the war we had about 385 vessels, with a tonnage of 1,225,784. We now have about 1,000 American-built vessels, with a tonnage of 4,584,000. Adding to that 400 vessels, requisitioned or commandeered from other countries, with a tonnage of 2,500,000 tons, gives us to-day a total of 1,400 vessels in the service of the United States, with a tonnage of 7,000,000 tons.

On August 24, 1918, we had under construction 819 shipbuilding ways, including wood, steel, and concrete, which is twice as many shipbuilding ways as there are in the rest of the shipyards of the world combined.

Our program calls for a total of 2,101 vessels, exclusive of tugs and barges, which will be built and put on the seas by the Emergency Fleet Corporation in the course of carrying out the present program, with an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 14,715,000 tons.

Five billion dollars will be required to finish our program for 1918–19 and 1920.

At the beginning of the war there were only about 45,000 men employed in shipbuilding yards of the country. To-day, in the four Government yards and 398 privately owned yards working on Government contracts, there are employed 320,000 men, and in allied industries about 200,000.

At present (Aug. 24, 1918) our merchant marine is second of the world power, as far as we know. We have reason to expect that when our program is completed our merchant marine will be first.

AIRPLANE SERVICE.

April 6, 1917, 1,185 officers and men.
July 15, 1918, 156,000 officers and men.
April 6, 1917, 3 aviation fields.
July 15, 1918, 28 aviation fields.
April 6, 1917, less than 200 second-class airplanes.
July 15, 1918, 5,554 American built planes in United States, and more than 2,000 in France.

August 24, 1918. 7,000 trained aviators in United States; 2,000 trained aviators in France; 4,000 awaiting assignment to ground schools.

Cadets flying 3,000 hours a day—flying 195,000 miles a day, or 8 times around the world.—(August 24, 1918.)

In one American field 135 planes are in the air at once, flying a total of 882 hours a day.—(August 24, 1918.)

AMERICA GENEROUS.

September 2, 1918.—Loans to allies $7,002,040,000

WAR PRISON BARRACKS.

War prison barracks have been established at Fort McPherson, Ga., Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and Fort Douglas, Utah, and 2,590 alien enemy prisoners have been confined in these barracks. Another at Hot Springs, N. C., with 2,300 prisoners.

WILSON HAS BEEN CHARGED WITH PARTISANSHIP.

A few of the prominent Republicans serving under Wilson: Wm. H. Taft, Chairman War Labor Board; Chas. E. Hughes, Investigate Aircraft; C. M. Schwab, Chairman Emergency Fleet Corporation; Chas. Piez, Vice President Fleet Corporation; Wm. Phillips, Assistant Secretary of State; L. W. Woolsey, Solicitor, State Department; L. S. Rowe, Assistant Secretary of Treasury; R. C. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of Treasury; Frank A. Vanderlip, Chairman War Savings Stamps Commission; Benedict Crowell, First Assistant Secretary of War; Frederick P. Keppel, Assistant Secretary of War; E. R. Stettinius, Assistant Secretary of War; A. B. Bielaski, Bureau of Investigation; Wm. R. Willcox, Federal Railway Wage Commission; H. A. Garfield, United States Fuel Administrator; Herbert Hoover, Food Administrator.

SPECIOUS PLEAS OF THE UNPATRIOTIC.

First, pacificism; second, opposed to all war; third, opposed to oversea fighting; fourth, this is an unholy war; fifth, it could have been avoided; sixth, Wall Street war; seventh, rich man's war and a poor man's fight; eighth, Wilson a dictator. A thousand other disloyal utterances.

AGITATORS NOW AS DURING CIVIL WAR.

During the Civil War our great martyred President, Lincoln, made a wonderful statement in this connection, in which he compared a soldier boy who had deserted with the public agitator who was trying to work up sentiment against the administration, in the following language:

> Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wily agitator who induces him to desert? This is none the less injurious when effected by getting a father or brother or friend into a public meeting and there working upon his feelings till he is persuaded to write the soldier boy that he is fighting in a bad cause for a wicked administration of a contemptible Government, too weak to arrest and punish him if he shall desert. I think that in such a case to silence the agitator and save the boy is not only constitutional, but withal a great mercy.

ROOSEVELT'S APPEAL TO STAND BY PRESIDENT M'KINLEY DURING SPANISH WAR.

Typical of many was the appeal made in 1896 by Col. Roosevelt then candidate for Governor of New York. He said:

> Remember that whether you will or not, your votes this year will be viewed by the nations of Europe from one standpoint only. They will draw no fine distinctions. A refusal to sustain the President this year, will, in their eyes, be read as a refusal to sustain the war and to sustain the efforts of our peace commission to secure the fruit of war. Such a refusal may not inconceivably bring about a rupture of the peace negotiations. It will give heart to our defeated antagonists; it will make possible the interference of those doubtful neutral nations, who in this struggle have wished us ill.

In similar tenor former President Benjamin Harrison pleaded for the election of a Republican Congress to support McKinley. He is quoted in the Philadelphia North American of November 1, 1898, as saying:

> If the word goes forth that the people of the United States are standing solidly behind the President, the task of the peace commissioners will be easy, but if there is a break in the ranks—if the Democrats score a telling victory, if Democratic Senators, Congressmen, and governors are elected—Spain will see in it a gleam of hope, she will take fresh hope, and a renewal of hostilities, more war, may be necessary to secure to us what we have already won.

THE FLAG.

"Your flag and my flag, and how it flies to-day,
In your land and my land and half a world away;
Rose red and blood red its stripes forever gleam,
Snow white and soul white, the good forefathers' dream;
Sky blue and true blue with stars that gleam aright;
The gloried guidon of the day, a shelter thru the night.

Your flag and my flag, and, oh, how much it holds!
Your land and my land, secure within its folds;
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed, the red and blue and white;
The one flag—the great flag—the flag for me and you,
Glorifies all else beside, the red and white and blue.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SWITZER indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I found this item in a local newspaper in Oklahoma, and I think it ought to be preserved in the records of this country. So far as I know, it is the best record, I think, for patriotism, for sacrifice, and for service that has been called to my attention. It is as follows:

Zeke McCoy, of Vian, who left with the county contingent, is the ninth member of his immediate family to enter the service. He now has eight brothers who are already serving with the colors.

[Applause.]

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS AT YELLOWSTONE, MONT.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 41) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

AUTHORIZING THE STATE OF MONTANA TO MAKE EXCHANGE OF LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 934) authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation in said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Montana be, and is hereby, authorized to select, in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the lands withdrawn for the Huntley irrigation project and formerly within the ceded portion of the Crow Indian Reservation in said State, other unappropriated surveyed nonmineral public lands of equal area situated within the limits of said State in the manner provided in the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 U. S. Stat. L., p. 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes": Provided, That such selection of lands by said State shall be a waiver of its right to the lands in said section 16: And provided further, That the homestead entries heretofore erroneously allowed for a portion of said section 16 shall become valid, subject to future compliance with the law applicable thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYING LAND TO THE CITY OF BOZEMAN, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 936, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Bozeman, Mont., certain lands for alley purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Montana state whether it is the purpose to donate the land, or is it to be paid for?

Mr. EVANS. It is to be donated. The citizens have donated approximately the same amount of land that the Government is to donate to make the alley. They want the alley to enter the Federal building.

Mr. WALSH. It does not appear that the citizens have donated any. The provision is that "the adjacent and abutting property owners shall also quitclaim to said city a strip of land of sufficient width to create a 17½-foot alley." Has that been done?

Mr. EVANS. I can not say that the deed has been executed; but it is a condition precedent to the Government turning over its portion of the land.

Mr. WALSH. The portion to be taken from the Federal site is about 10 feet in width, and that would leave 7½ feet.

Mr. EVANS. The balance would be 7½ feet, as the alley is to be 17½ feet wide. The people would give more, but that width runs up close to their buildings.

Mr. WALSH. Why could not the city of Bozeman pay something for this property? The Government had to pay for it.

Mr. EVANS. As a matter of fact, the Government paid little or nothing for the property. I think it was donated for a Federal site. They have built the structure. They have a mud alley in the rear of it and they desire to pave it, and the city must do it, but it does not care to pave it unless they get title for public purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Bozeman, Mont., for the purpose of a public alley, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to a strip of land 10 feet in width off of the rear of the Federal building site in said city of Bozeman: Provided, That the adjacent and abutting property owners shall also quitclaim to said city a strip of land of sufficient width to create a 17½-foot alley: Provided further, That the city of Bozeman shall open said alley and improve and maintain the same as other public alleys of said city are improved and maintained.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS AT YELLOWSTONE, MONT.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 41) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for a hotel, and other purposes, the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, which was objected to, be permitted to retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, it should go to the foot of the calendar; otherwise, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the first bill called, S. 41, goes to the foot of the calendar and stays on the calendar.

There was no objection.

CHANGES IN BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2180) to approve mutual cessions of territory by the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota and the consequent changes in the boundary line between said States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Congress hereby consents to and approves of the cession by the State of Wisconsin to the State of Minnesota of the following-described territory, to wit:

All that territory formerly a part of the town of Buffalo, in the county of Buffalo and State of Wisconsin, which lies northerly and westerly of the following-described line, to wit: Commencing at the point in the center line of the main channel of the Mississippi River above Island Numbered Seventy-two, where the center line of the channel running between Island Numbered Seventy-two and Island Numbered Seventy-one intersects the center line of said main channel, and running thence easterly and southeasterly along the center line of the channel between said islands and between said Island Numbered Seventy-two and the main Wisconsin shore to the center line of the main channel of said river, being lot numbered three in section numbered one, township numbered eighteen north, of range numbered eleven west of the fourth principal meridian, and commonly known and described as Island Numbered Seventy-two in the Mississippi River, duly made by the act of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, known as chapter sixty-four of the session laws of nineteen hundred and seventeen, approved April ninth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and assented to and accepted by the State of Minnesota by act of its legislature, known as chapter one hundred and sixteen of the session laws of nineteen hundred and seventeen, approved March twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, an authenticated copy of which act has been duly filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, and by the written acceptance of the governor of the State of Minnesota filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin on the twenty-fourth day of April, nineteen hundred and seventeen; and the boundary line between the said States at the location of said cession is hereby described and declared to be as follows, to wit: Commencing at the point of intersection of the center line of the main channel of the Mississippi River with the center line of the channel running between Island Numbered Seventy-two and Island Numbered Seventy-one and running thence easterly and southeasterly along the center line of the channel between said islands and between said Island Numbered Seventy-two and the main Wisconsin shore to the center line of the main channel of said river.

SEC. 2. That Congress hereby consents to, and approves of, the cession by the State of Minnesota to the State of Wisconsin of the following-described territory, to wit:

All that territory formerly a part of the town of La Crescent, in the county of Houston and State of Minnesota, which lies easterly of the following-described line, to wit: Commencing in the northeast quarter of section numbered eleven, township numbered one hundred and four north, range numbered four west of the fifth principal meridian, at the point of intersection of the center line of the west channel of the Mississippi River with the center line of the main east channel of said river and running thence southeasterly along the center line of said west channel to its intersection with the center line of said east channel of said river in the easterly part of section numbered twenty-four in said township and range, duly made by the act of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota known as chapter one hundred and sixteen of the session laws of nineteen hundred and seventeen, approved March twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and assented to and accepted by the State of Wisconsin by act of its legislature known as chapter sixty-four of the session laws of nineteen hundred and seventeen, approved April ninth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and authenticated copy of which act has been duly filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, and by the written acceptance of the governor of the State of Wisconsin, filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota on April seventeenth, nineteen hundred and seventeen; and the boundary line between the said States at the location of said cession is hereby described and declared to be the center line of the west channel of the Mississippi River beginning at the point of intersection of said center line with the center line of the main east channel of said river, in the northeast quarter of section numbered eleven, township numbered one hundred and four north, range numbered four west of the fifth principal meridian, and running thence southeasterly to the point of intersection of the said center line of said west channel with the center line of the main east channel of said river, in the easterly part of section numbered twenty-four, in said township and range.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGING PUBLIC BUILDING SITE AT EATONTON, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city upon such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States: Provided, That the cost of such new site, including the purchase price of the present site, shall not exceed the original limit of $5,000 fixed by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, authorizing the acquisition of a Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, can anybody state how far this new site is from the present site that the Government now owns?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND], who has charge of the bill, is unavoidably absent. I am not able to give the information the gentleman desires.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INCREASING SALARY OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY, CONNECTICUT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4246) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. I desire to be advised what, if any, authority the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice has to initiate legislation increasing the salary of the United States district attorney of Connecticut?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and as the gentleman who introduced the bill [Mr. LONERGAN] is absent, the Chair will ask that it go to the foot of the calendar. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONTEST AND CANCELLATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be first read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entries made for pasture and wood reserve lands in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations, in the State of Oklahoma, opened to settlement and entry upon sealed bids, as authorized by the act of June 5, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 213), be, and the same are hereby, made subject to contest, upon charges alleging that the entryman never established residence upon the land, or that having established such residence he failed to maintain same, or to improve and cultivate the land in accordance with law; and upon proof sustaining such charges, submitted in accordance with the rules of practice, the entries will be canceled and the money paid by the entrymen in default will be forfeited: Provided, That any person who has been residing upon the land for at least two years prior to the cancellation of such entry, and if there be no such settler, then the successful contestant, shall, if qualified to make a homestead entry, have a preference right for a period of 60 days from notice, to make a homestead entry for the land, paying therefor the price bid by the original entryman, or a price to be fixed by appraisement upon the applicant's request, the improvements made by such settler not to be taken into consideration in making such appraisement: Provided further, That should there be two settlers on a tract, the land will be partitioned to them upon mutual agreement, or will be sold to the settler submitting the highest bid at a public offering: And provided further, That payment for the land shall be made in four equal installments, one installment at the date of entry, and the other installment in one, two, and three years thereafter: And provided further, That failure to comply with the homestead law or to make the annual payment when due in the case of any entry under this act shall be a sufficient cause for the cancellation of the entry and the forfeiture of the money paid: And provided further, That any vacant lands in the wood and pasture reserves in said Indian reservations, opened to entry under said act of June 5, 1906, for which no preference right of entry exists, as herein provided, or under the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 550), shall be subject to sale at public auction to the highest bidder under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the moneys received from the sale of the lands under this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, shall draw interest, and be administered in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of said act of June 5, 1906.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, after the word "contest" insert the words "at any time after 60 days from the date of this act."

Page 2, line 22, strike out the word "installment" and insert the word "installments."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MONDELL (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, the bill having been read, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be now acted on.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUBTREASURY PROPERTY, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7225) providing for the transfer to the custody and control of War Department property in San Francisco, Cal., known as the old Subtreasury property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] if he can state where this California Débris Commission is now housed?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, they occupy, as I recall, some quarters in the United States Appraisers' Building. But I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts that there are many officers of the Federal Government at San Francisco that occupy rented quarters, and if the Débris Commission should move to this building I have no doubt that some other officers of the Government can be accommodated in the offices now occupied by the Débris Commission. It would probably effect a saving in rental by the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Is this building vacant and unoccupied—this old Subtreasury?

Mr. KAHN. Whether it is unoccupied now I do not know. This Subtreasury building, I want to say, was the only one of the Federal buildings destroyed by the fire of 1906. It was never fully rebuilt. It was cut down several stories, and a new roof was put upon it. It was occupied by the Subtreasury until the new Subtreasury building was finished, but whether the Treasury Department people have been using it since that time I do not know. The Treasury Department seems to have no further use for it, and the War Department could use it to very good advantage.

Mr. WALSH. This does not change the ownership, but only the custody and control?

Mr. KAHN. That is all. The ownership is still in the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to transfer to the custody and control of the War Department the old Subtreasury property, located on the north side of Commercial Street about 60 feet west of Montgomery Street, and known as 608 Commercial Street, San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND, PRINCETON, IND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10663) to convey a strip of land on the site of the Federal building at Princeton, Ind.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey, by quit-claim deed, to the city of Princeton, Ind., for the purpose of a public alley, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to a strip of land off the rear of the Federal building site in said city of sufficient width to provide, in connection with land adjacent thereto, a ten-foot alley: Provided, That the city of Princeton shall open said alley and improve and maintain the same as other public alleys of said city are improved and maintained.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "city" strike out the words "of sufficient" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five feet in."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3134) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver for shipment, nor shall any common carrier nor the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia any live calf not accompanied by its mother unless the same is four weeks old or over: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than four weeks old.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation, or any common carrier or the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50 for each calf offered for shipment, shipped, or received for transportation or transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding with this bill, the Chair can answer the parliamentary inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] a while ago. The bill about the district attorney's salary for the district of Connecticut was properly referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. There is a long string of decisions to that effect, beginning with section 4317 of Hinds' Precedents. From the reasoning on the proposition, the Chair doubts very much whether it is a correct reference.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the author of the bill a question. I want to know why he makes the age of the calves so young. Why not make it three or four or even six months—a year would satisfy me better? It would seem that the supply of cattle of the country are dependent on the calves. If you permit the calves to be slaughtered you are not going to get enough cattle to feed the country.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to say to my friend that personally I am very much in sympathy with the view which he expresses, but if he knew the difficulty I have had about fixing the age limit——

Mr. WEBB. I am not going to object. I am saying I think it is very important——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What I want to do is to try to get this bill through. Then, perhaps later on we can get some amendment to the law. I was obliged to enter into a sort of compromise arrangement by which four weeks was agreed upon finally. The gentleman knows the circumstances. Certain dairy districts of the country have been great offenders. The gentleman knows what they do. They take these little calves away from their mothers when they are too young to take other nourishment than their mother's milk. They do not want to teach them to drink. They sell them when they are a day or two old, before they have learned to drink or eat. There are places where they bone them off and make them into canned chicken. When you eat canned chicken you are liable to be eating immature calf. They have been shipping them in great numbers to Boston and New York. The committee finally agreed to the four weeks' limit. I think, myself, that the question of the increase of food for the people is an important one to be considered, but I am afraid if this bill should be amended so as to increase the age that it will never pass. There is also a constitutional difficulty which I will not undertake to discuss now.

Mr. WEBB. I am not going to offer an amendment in view of the gentleman's statement, but I think it is a very important war emergency measure that we should preserve the calves of this country in order to make cattle to feed the people, and I wish we could make it four or six months or a year. However, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to approve what the gentleman from Michigan has said, because we tried to get 4 months, 6 months, and 12 months, and the more we asked the less we were able to get.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is it a House bill or a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. A House bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time and passed.

FORBIDDING PENSIONS TO DISLOYAL CITIZENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5380) to forbid the payment of pensions to anyone who is or may hereafter become disloyal to the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEBB. It ought not to be on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what this is doing on the Union Calendar?

Mr. WEBB. It does not carry any charge on the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. It is on the Union Calendar because it relates to money in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. A bill that puts money into the Treasury or takes money or property away from the Government goes to the Union Calendar.

Mr. WEBB. This does not do either.

The SPEAKER. This bill, it seems to me, puts money into the Treasury and lets it stay in after it gets there.

Mr. WEBB. Provided a person is convicted of disloyalty.

The SPEAKER. Suppose a man is drawing a pension of so many dollars a month and he becomes disloyal and is convicted under this bill, his pension remains in the Treasury for all years to come. The Chair thinks it is rightly on the Union Calendar. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5380) to forbid the payment of pensions to anyone who is or may hereafter become disloyal to the United States Government.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no pension shall be allowed or paid to any person who is shown to be disloyal to the Government of the United States or in sympathy with the cause of any Government with whom the United States is at war. The use of seditious or abusive language in regard to the President of the United States may be accepted as presumptive evidence of such disloyalty.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, beginning with the word "is," in line 4, strike out all down to and including the word "disloyalty," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "after final judgment, stands convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes,' approved April 20, 1918, and an act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, or any of the provisions of the amendment of said last-named act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to forbid the payment of pensions to anyone who is or may hereafter be convicted of certain disloyal crimes against the United States."

QUARTERS IN POST-OFFICE BUILDING, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 204) to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the District Court of the Northern District of California and its officers, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill remain on the calendar. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] representing that district is not able to be here because of sickness, but will doubtless be here when the calendar is considered again. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that this bill remain on the calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. To go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. RAKER. To go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. To go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of important business on this Unanimous Consent Calendar. There are only 18 men on the floor of the House, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum, and evidently there is none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn. You can not get a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 5; noes 16.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 3.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged and until midnight of December 31 of the year following that in which such war is concluded, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 766), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 12860) granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female) pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 12861) amending the act of August 24, 1912, chapter 389, paragraph 1 (37 Stat., 550), to include periodical publications of regularly incorporated charitable organizations, admitting such publications to the mail as second-class matter; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. WEBB introduced a bill (H. R. 12862) granting a pension to Nancy Robinson, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rules XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of Adolph Lewisohn, of New York, favoring the Keating child-labor bill; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. ESCH: Resolutions of the Pecos Valley Water Users' Association of Texas, favoring the Chamberlain-Smith reclamation bill; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Charles G. Kelly and others for the enactment of the Edmonds bill (H. R. 5531) to provide a pharmaceutical corps in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Petition of Andre Rouseyrol and many other citizens of Los Angeles, Cal., for the enactment of the Edmonds bill (H. R. 5531) to provide a pharmaceutical corps for the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PRATT: Petitions favoring the prohibition of the beverage-liquor traffic during the period of the war as a war measure, by the Methodist Protestant Church of South Canisteo, N. Y.; the First Baptist Church, of Hartsville, N. Y.; and the Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists of Canisteo, N. Y.; also, petition adopted by the Epworth Leagues and Y. P. B.'s of Brookton, Slaterville Springs, and Forest Home, N. Y.; also, resolution adopted at a public meeting at Savona, N. Y., relative to polygamy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Resolutions adopted by the Young People's Society of Tunbridge and of the Young People's Society of Berwick, both in the State of North Dakota, urging war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition signed by Judge O. D. Comstock and 52 other citizens of Minnewaukan, N. Dak., urging war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 3, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we commit our way into Thy hands. All things work together for good to them that love God. We believe that out of the strife and conflict of the present time there may come a larger life, a higher form of civilization, a diviner destiny. We commit it all to Thy hands and pray for Thy guidance. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PURCHASE OF LIBERTY BONDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the issue of liberty bonds will again be offered next month, or beginning this month, probably. There has been a pretty generous support everywhere. Everyone, according to his means, has subscribed. I see no reason for the procedure adopted in a communication of date July 20, 1918, which is an order, apparently, from local authorities, against which I wish to protest. I do not know that it is by any direction of Federal authority, but the board of education of district No. 139, in Hamilton, Ill., notify the teachers:

> According to our records you were not among the number who registered your purchases and intended purchases on June 28 of war-savings stamps in compliance with President Wilson's proclamation.

I do not know that the President has any power to issue a proclamation to the teachers of public schools ordering them to subscribe for stamps. I do not believe he has done so. I have seen nothing of the kind.

We have, however, obtained—

> an extension till next Wednesday, July 24. Will you please report before next Wednesday evening to the secretary of our board of education, personally, on your war-savings stamps purchases?
> You are required to give amount of war-savings stamps ($5 stamps) you have purchased and total amount you expect yet to purchase before the end of the year 1918.
> All such reports will be then tabulated and sent in to general headquarters for review.
> All such persons not making purchases of stamps must appear and give reason for failure to do so.

This is an extra-official statement to compel those probably who hold their positions from the board of education in this particular place to subscribe. I think it my duty to protest against such a usurpation of authority or such an abuse of power. The American people are not ready either in that particular district or elsewhere to subscribe to such autocratic treatment. We have voluntarily given liberally of our means. There is a general outpouring of everybody, large and small, in their subscriptions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask who wrote the letter that the Senator is reading?

Mr. SHERMAN. Who signed it?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Did the teachers sign it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is signed by the board of education. There is no name save the secretary of the board of education, district 139, E. M. Leroy, secretary, dated Hamilton, Ill., which is in Hancock County, Ill., a city right opposite Keokuk, on the Illinois side, at the end of the power dam.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree with the Senator that it is a most extraordinary document.

Mr. SHERMAN. It certainly appears to me as it does to the Senator from Colorado. It has all the authority of a distress for the collection of taxes and seems to present an obligatory duty. I wish to seasonably make my protest here against it in the hope that it may have proper publicity and be checked.

PETITIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a letter signed by M. P. Goodner, executive secretary of the State Council of Defense of Washington, in the nature of a petition asking Senators and Representatives to vote for the repeal of the act fixing zone rates for second-class mail matter. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of sundry citizens of Danville, Bolivar, Sharpsville, Berlin, Brush Valley, Berwick, Williamsport, Glen Moore, Barneston, Springfield, Garrettford, Upper Darby, West Philadelphia, and the townships of Bloom, Dyberry, Oregon, and Lebanon, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 934. An act authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation, in said State;

S. 936. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Bozeman, Mont., certain land for alley purposes; and

S. 2180. An act to approve mutual cessions of territory by the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota and the consequent changes in the boundary line between said States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3134. An act to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves;

H. R. 5380. An act to forbid the payment of pensions to anyone who is or may hereafter be convicted of certain disloyal crimes against the United States;

H. R. 7225. An act providing for the transfer to the custody and control of the War Department property in San Francisco, Cal., known as the old Subtreasury property;

H. R. 9897. An act to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10609. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city;

H. R. 10663. An act to convey a strip of land on the site of the Federal building at Princeton, Ind.; and

H. J. Res. 325. Joint resolution amending section 8 of the amendment to the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4901) to amend sections 1033 and 1034 of the Code of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 4902) granting a pension to William E. Kersey (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4903) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Lockwood (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4904) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marcellus M. Crocker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 4905) granting a pension to Ella A. Mead;

A bill (S. 4906) granting a pension to Singleton M. Paulley;

A bill (S. 4907) granting a pension to William B. Wilson; and

A bill (S. 4908) granting a pension to James J. Butler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) authorizing the admission to the United States of aliens who are refugees from conditions created by the war; to the Committee on Immigration.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. SHEPPARD offered the following resolution (S. Res. 295), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. DILLINGHAM was, at his own request, relieved from further service on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WEEKS was, at his own request, relieved from further service on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Finance.

That the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Appropriations.

That the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Rules.

That the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Appropriations.

That the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] be assigned to membership on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before morning business is closed I should like to inquire what is the status and prospect of the so-called housing bill (H. R. 9248) in the District of Columbia. The last information I had concerning it was a disagreement, and a very serious one, between the House and the Senate members of the committee of conference. While they are quarreling time is passing, the 1st of October will soon be here, and unless we have some legislation on that very serious subject there will be a great deal of difficulty and trouble in the District growing out of what I understand to be a generally prevailing intention to increase the rents in the District.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator refer to what is known as the Pomerene measure?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I perhaps did not give it the proper appellation. I mean the bill upon which there has been a pending conference for some time. Perhaps the Senator can give the Senate some information about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state to the Senator that I think the situation really requires pretty prompt action as far as conditions in the District are concerned. The situation with reference to the bill as I understand it is this: A disagreement arose between the House and Senate, and the Senate conferees have been excused by the Senate from action. The Senate has passed a resolution reciting the status of the matter, and that has gone to the House of Representatives and no action has as yet been taken by that body.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that some further action should be taken by the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know what action under the circumstances could be taken by the Senate upon that particular bill. I do know unless the Senate does get some action something ought to be done otherwise, and we ought to make provision in some other bill that may be passing here.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not conceive of any situation that would be more delightful to me if I were a landlord in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield to me, I think at the time the resolution was passed the suggestion was made that it would be competent later on to move to discharge the Senate conferees and ask for a new conference that might revive the matter. I think the Chair informally stated that such a motion would be in order under the rules.

Mr. THOMAS. I give notice, Mr. President, that I shall submit a motion to that effect upon the convening of the Senate to-morrow morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator that the Senate conferees have been excused from acting by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not see that any resolution to discharge them is necessary or how they could be discharged. They have in effect been discharged already.

Mr. THOMAS. Some sort of a resolution on the subject to get action ought to be passed by the Senate; I do not care what you call it or just how we get at it, but I want to see something done with that bill and done very soon. It is one of the urgent matters that is now before Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. It is perhaps more urgent in some respects than anything else. I am told that new employees are coming into the city at the rate of 500 a day. The construction of the temporary quarters for them is proceeding at a snail's pace. We have an abundant amount of labor, but I notice that it is conducting itself very leisurely in the construction of these houses; and, of course, the influx of that number even for a month or a week would seriously affect the existing situation here, 500 a day being 15,000 a month.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I was going to agree with the Senator upon the proposition. The Senator will remember that the dignity of the Senate was very much offended by some remarks made in the House, and that led to the unfortunate situation which we are now in. It would seem that after this length of time the feeling in the Senate should subside and we ought now to do something to solve the situation. I believe we must have new conferees appointed under the parliamentary situation, and I hope the Senate will take action.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope so. Senatorial dignity is a good thing, but it is at the expense of the employees of the Government in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENYON. It is good for the profiteer.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa, who is on the committee, and also to the Senator from Colorado that it is more than the dignity of the Senate which is involved; it is the honesty of the Senate conferees and of Senators. I hope the Senator will read the resolution the Senate passed when considering the form of a resolution to discharge the conferees.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not desire to reflect upon the Senate conferees. I have no question but that if I had been a member of the committee I would have taken the same position, and which was sustained by the Senate. But the conditions are becoming very serious in the District, and some legislation even at the expense of our sense of the treatment which the conference committee on the part of the Senate received is demanded by an exigency that can not be avoided and is getting more and more pronounced every day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Colorado. Is the Senator informed—I saw something in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, House proceedings—about a bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported by Representative CLARK? It was a bill covering the housing question. It proposes to vest in the executive department, the President, the power, a nominal exercise of power, to take the buildings wherever there is a dispute, and if necessary protect the rights of tenants, as I understand the comments on the bill. That would be another committee than the one in which the difficulty arose referred to by the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I recall seeing something of that kind, but I did not charge my memory with it particularly. However, I hope some bill, some measure, some provision, or some resolution will soon be enacted by both Houses that will relieve this wretched situation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agree with the Senator from Colorado. I am thinking that that bill might be the foundation for further action. It opens up the question so that even if we did not take the bill as it came from the House it would be the foundation for proper amendment and action and avoid a large part, if not all, of the embarrassment that came from the other bill and the unfortunate condition in which it was finally placed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 3134. An act to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

H. R. 5380. An act to forbid the payment of pensions to anyone who is or may hereafter be convicted of certain disloyal crimes against the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 9897. An act to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

H. R. 7225. An act providing for the transfer to the custody and control of the War Department property in San Francisco, Cal., known as the old Subtreasury property;

H. R. 10609. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city; and

H. R. 10663. An act to convey a strip of land on the site of the Federal building at Princeton, Ind.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to ask that the House joint resolution 325 be substituted for Senate joint resolution 169 and take its place upon the calendar. It is the joint resolution, the Vice President will remember, amending section 8 of the draft act which passed last week, and it was discussed at some length here the other day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want to have the House joint resolution taken up for passage now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I should like to have it passed now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the proper procedure would be to ask unanimous consent to consider the House joint resolution and when it is passed to indefinitely postpone the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no relinquishment of any public land entry made under and by authority of section 8 of the act of Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,'" approved May 18, 1917, shall be valid or effective for any purpose unless executed after the entryman shall have actually resided upon and cultivated the land, in the case of a homestead entry, for at least six months, and in the case of an entry made under other than the homestead laws, after the entryman shall have complied with the provisions of the applicable law for at least one year.

Any person, firm, or corporation soliciting or dealing with the relinquishment of such claim or entry prior to the completion of compliance with the applicable law and with this resolution, and who or which solicits, demands, or receives or accepts any fee or compensation for locating, filing, or securing the claims or entries for persons entitled to the benefits of said section shall, upon conviction, be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned for not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not want to delay action upon the subject embraced in this joint resolution, but I should like to suggest that the resolution go over for a day and be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The Committee on Public Lands has never considered the subject. Last week I made some observations regarding the matter which, to my mind at least, raised some very important questions. I believe that in the interest of good legislation this joint resolution ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands for consideration. I am not going to object to the present consideration of the resolution, if the chairman of the committee insists upon its consideration at this time; but I do feel that the Public Lands Committee ought to give the matter consideration. The members of the committee are here in Washington now—or at least a majority of the committee are—and they ought to be able to dispose of the matter to-day in committee, so that it may be taken up for consideration by the Senate to-morrow. No harm can come from a delay for a day or two or for a week or two, for no entries can be made for several days which would be the subject of relinquishment.

I see no objection to the matter being given consideration in committee for at least a day, and I request the chairman of the committee to permit the joint resolution to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands in this case has done what is very frequently done here in reference to emergency legislation. The majority of the members of the committee read and recommended the enactment of this joint resolution last week. That is not an uncommon method of procedure. When the joint resolution was presented to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], he took the same care to examine it as did others, and he objected to it; but he was the only member of the Public Lands Committee who did object.

Mr. President, the Senate joint resolution was very carefully prepared and the House resolution is almost in hæc verba with the language of the Senate resolution. The changes which were made were immaterial. In view of the suggestion that has been made by the House that under the Fall amendment to the draft bill there might be a possibility of frauds being perpetrated on young men, in order to relieve that doubt entirely the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and others who considered the joint resolution thought it ought to pass. If the junior Senator from New Mexico wants to object, he must take the responsibility, but I feel like insisting that the joint resolution be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have yielded, I think, once or twice——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But we are now in the morning hour.

Mr. GORE. I know that, but the consideration of the joint resolution may consume the entire day. [A pause.] The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] suggests to me that he only wishes to have the joint resolution considered until 2 o'clock.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. GORE. I wish to explain that the unfinished business was agreed to be made so with an ironclad order that nothing else should be considered. I have yielded a time or two for the consideration of the pending resolution; of course, I am anxious to facilitate its consideration and passage, but I do not want to be continually yielding, for I might be regarded as somewhat derelict in my efforts to press the unfinished business to its passage.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: While the unfinished business by unanimous consent was made such, to be considered exclusively, it does not come up until 2 o'clock each day after an adjournment, does it? There is a morning hour, I believe.

Mr. GORE. I understand the unfinished business is to be considered after the morning business and not after the morning hour.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not understand that the unfinished business should also occupy the morning hour. I understood that we had unanimously agreed that it should remain the unfinished business; and, under the rules of the Senate, the unfinished business automatically comes before the Senate at 2 o'clock each day, or, at least, two hours after the Senate convenes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the situation exactly: The unanimous-consent agreement provides that the bill—

Shall continue the unfinished business of the Senate—

Which would, of course, prevent a motion to substitute any other business for it—and then further:

And on and after August 26 it shall be considered to the exclusion of all other business (except that it may be temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent) until passed or defeated on a vote taken on the question of its passage.

If the present occupant of the chair had been called upon to rule first, he should have held that after August 26 the present unfinished business should occupy the exclusive attention of the Senate until after it was passed; but the Senate itself has construed the unanimous-consent agreement and has been proceeding with morning business right along.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that there was a ruling during the absence of the Vice President to the effect that the unfinished business was to be taken up immediately after the close of morning business, and it has been in the past so taken up under that ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know what the ruling was, but does know that the Senate has construed the unanimous-consent agreement to the effect that the bill is to be considered after the conclusion of morning business.

Mr. SMOOT. I said "after the close of morning business."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the unanimous-consent agreement has been construed, and it is now too late to raise the question about morning business. The Chair has a right to lay down messages from the House of Representatives, and the Senate has a right to take them up and dispose of them. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 325) amending section 8 of the amendment to the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, section 8 of the bill which passed the Senate last week extending the draft age contained a provision with reference to public-land entries which is an innovation upon all legislation upon that subject heretofore passed by the Congress of the United States. It creates a new policy with reference to the public lands, and, in my judgment, the new policy, although springing from commendable motives, is not justified at this time.

All the public-land legislation of the country since the very earliest legislation providing only for the sale of the public domain has contemplated actual settlement. The purpose of it has been to develop the section of the country where the public lands lie. Very liberal provisions have been made respecting the entry of these lands, and especially with reference to entries by those who have served in the armed forces of the country; but the legislation, even though dealing with the rights of those engaged in the armed forces of the country, has all had in mind as its prime purpose the settlement of the public domain, the making of homes, and the development of the country where the lands lie.

We are all familiar with the homestead laws, which require actual settlement, actual improvement, and in practically all cases actual cultivation—everything implying the ultimate getting of the applicant for the land upon the soil itself and his development of it. Special privileges have been made with respect to soldiers under legislation which existed prior to our entry into this war. A soldier of the United States Army or a sailor in the Navy or a marine while in the service was permitted to make an entry upon the public lands, but with very important provisions. In one of the statutes it is provided that he must at the time have residing upon the land some member of his family and that he, within six months after the application to enter, must personally go upon the land and reside upon it. We have another statute which enables a soldier to make an entry or an application for an entry upon the public domain by an agent, but it is coupled with the provision that he must within six months personally go upon the land and comply with the provisions of the land laws.

We have also a provision in existence since 1872 that all those who have served or are serving in the armies of the United States, regardless of age, may make homestead entries; but in all these laws there are requirements that in six months there shall be actual settlement and compliance otherwise with the land laws of the country the same as in the case of a civilian.

That has been the policy as to soldiers' entries. Their affidavits can be made outside of the district in which the land is situated under legislation which existed prior to this Congress; but they must come upon the land ultimately and comply with the provisions of law which other people would have to comply with in order to obtain title to the land from the Government. It has never been the policy of this country to try to furnish land as a mere bonus to those in either the Army or the Navy; it has never been the policy during the wars of this country to hold up the public domain and prevent people from going upon it and using it during the war so that it might be retained for the benefit of the soldiers after the war.

This legislation, as I have said, is an innovation; it establishes a new policy. Under section 8 of the new draft act it is provided:

SEC. 8. That any person under the age of 21 who has served or shall hereafter serve in the Army of the United States during the present emergency shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws: Provided, That any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service: Provided further, That applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

Under that provision it is possible—and that, it seems to me, is its only purpose—for soldiers under 21 years of age who are in the Army and all those who may go into the Army at any time henceforth under the age of 21 years, regardless of their residence, to make an affidavit away from the land, never having seen it, and hold up the use of that land until six months after discharge from the military service.

We do not know how long this war is going to last; we do not know how long these people are going to be in the military service; and I submit that it is unwise to hold up the settlement of the public domain and prevent its use while the war is going on. I submit that it is unwise to enable anybody who has never seen the public land to hold up the use of that land until he shall have been discharged from the Army.

This is a time when we are seeking to produce all the food which this country can produce. This is a time when we want the public domain actually used by people actually upon the land, when we want this land cultivated if anybody is willing to cultivate it. We want this land to get into the private ownership of those who will use it during the war. We do not want it held out from use until the indefinite period of six months after the war shall have ended and the applicant for the homestead has been discharged from the Army.

We have passed a good deal of legislation regarding the soldiers of the country and their rights upon the public domain during the war. We have provided in all cases that where entries have been made prior to enlistment the term which the soldier shall serve in the Army shall be construed as actual residence upon the land. In regard to desert-land entries we have provided as to entries heretofore made, or made prior to enlistment, that the requirement of the expenditure of a dollar an acre on the land each year while the soldier is in the service of the Army shall be deferred, but in all the remedial legislation up to this joint resolution we have sought to have actual settlement upon the land and to benefit those who have previously gone upon it with a view to making an actual improvement or bona fide home upon it. No legislation up to this joint resolution has provided that the land shall be held up, that it shall not be put to use during the war, or rather that it shall be put in a position where its use can be prohibited during the war.

Moreover, Mr. President, I deem section 8 of the act passed the other day unwise because it makes a discrimination between our boys over 18 years of age and under 21 who are not permitted actually to enlist in the Army. All of these boys are within the selective-draft age, and the reason why they will not all get into the Army is because of ill health or because they are serving some useful purpose necessary to the conduct of the war. I see no reason why the boys of this country 18 years of age and under 21 who are not enlisted in the Army should not be permitted the same rights with respect to the public domain as those who actually get into the service; and if the privileges of the general land laws are to be extended to those below the age of 21, is it not important that they should be extended to those who are within the draft age and who are staying at home because they are producing something, performing a service essential to the conduct of the war?

I submit, therefore, that there is no reason why a discrimination should be made between the boy 18 years of age who goes into the Army and the boy 18 years of age who stays upon the farm in order to produce food. Moreover, Mr. President, I see no reason why the boy under 21 years of age who enlists in the Army should have any other or greater rights than the man above 21 years of age who enters the Army. If you are going to enable a boy under 21 to hold up a homestead until six months after his discharge from the Army, I ask you what reason can there be for denying this right to the man above 21 years of age? The man above 21 years of age is much more likely to have some one dependent upon him, to have home conditions which make it necessary for him to engage in independent enterprise, than the man under 21. So why should there be this discrimination? No reason has been suggested.

Section 8 was put into the bill without any consideration from the committee; it was put into the bill without any discussion upon this floor; and it seems to me that there is something here which demands serious consideration from the committee and serious consideration and debate upon this floor. It is important; it affects the entire western section of this country. As I pointed out the other day, there are serious consequences which may flow from it.

The joint resolution which has passed the House, and which is almost identical with the one presented to the Senate the other day, simply meets one particular phase of the situation. It prevents relinquishments during service in the Army; but that is simply a further step to tie up the land and prevent its use during the period of the war and for six months afterwards. So this joint resolution, instead of meeting the situation, to my mind accentuates some of the evil.

What is a relinquishment? It is nothing except a surrender of the land by the applicant back to the Government of the United States. That is all a relinquishment is.

Can there be any serious objection to it? The only objection which has arisen with regard to relinquishments in the past has sprung from the thought that by getting relinquishments and holding them in the pocket of some speculator you tied up the public domain, you prevented settlers who actually wanted to use the land from going upon it and acquiring title to it. That has been the objection to relinquishments in the past. But, Mr. President, with this joint resolution adopted, at one fell swoop you put a restriction upon the acquirement of title to all the land which may be entered by these soldiers. Instead of removing the evil from promiscuous relinquishments which has existed in the past, you simply add to it, and do by law what we condemned in the past as being done by private citizens.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not true that the danger under the existing law, in so far as there is any danger, is of land agents securing boys in the service to make applications and then securing from them their relinquishments and thus speculating in them, while under the pending joint resolution that can not be done? Will it not mean a very much less number of applications with the joint resolution passed? Will it not confine applications to young men who really intend in good faith to locate upon the land and shut out all others?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has just referred to speculation as the evil. Speculation per se is not an evil. The evil comes from enabling the speculator to tie up the land.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator say that speculation in homestead relinquishments is not an evil?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will ask the Senator to state what evil will flow from it.

Mr. LENROOT. The evil is this, that if speculation be permitted in homestead relinquishments, you have encouraged a vast number of men to tie up lands through making entries with the idea not of making homes for themselves but of selling out to a land locator, and thus speculating upon relinquishments. The very idea of speculation in relinquishments involves the tying up of public lands, not for improvement and making homes but for speculation only.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I agree with the last statement which the Senator made, but I do not think the first statement is in harmony with the last. Relinquishment is one thing, securing people unlawfully to make entries is another, and the securing of people to make entries for an unlawful purpose is contrary to law now, and will be as long as anything like existing legislation obtains. That is one evil which is made a criminal offense, and nobody wants to repeal any provision of that kind. But when you come to the relinquishment itself after the entry has been made, the only purpose of the relinquishment is to turn back the land to the Government and put somebody on it who will use it. In other words, by speculating in relinquishments you simply prevent some sincere person from going upon the land and obtaining title to it.

What does this joint resolution do? By providing that no relinquishment shall be executed until six months after discharge from the service, you tie up by legislation these public lands. People may go upon them and enter them under promises that the land will be valuable after the war. They will make their entries with the vain hope or prospect or accident that they may want to use the land after the war is over; and when they do that, you have tied up the land by this joint resolution so that it can not be released, so that an honest homesteader who wants to make immediate use of it can not use it.

Mr. President, I submit that this legislation is unwise. It is true that it can be said that the passage of this joint resolution will not hurt the situation very much, that it can be remedied hereafter; but it is my experience in this body that the time to enact appropriate legislation is while the people are wanting something done with regard to it, and that is why I am objecting to this joint resolution. I think that all Senators are willing to give to the boys under 21 years of age exactly the same rights that those above 21 years of age possess. I do not believe that anybody objects to that. I am satisfied that that was the thought in the minds of practically all of the Senators at the time this section was written into the draft bill. The only thought which came into our minds was that a good, wholesome provision was being made for those under 21 years of age. It was not discussed. It had not been given consideration by any committee. No Senator had it explained to him on the floor, and I imagine that very few gave it consideration at any time, assuming and resting in confidence that it simply provided some benefit, and the same benefit for the boy under 21 as the citizens above 21 possessed. But upon analysis it does more. To my mind, it will have a very serious influence upon the productivity of the western country during the war. It will seriously retard the growth and progress of that section of the country.

To my mind, the provision which all of us agreed to, and which goes far enough, is simply one which will give the boys under 21 years of age, and above 18, the same privileges as citizens above 21 years of age. Is not that all that we want to do? Do we want to give them more? Has any reason been suggested why the boy under 21 should have a higher privilege with respect to the public domain than the man or soldier above 21?

So, Mr. President, if there is a disposition to pass this joint resolution without any serious consideration, I am going to ask to substitute a bill for it. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry—whether a bill can be substituted for a joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about the right of the Senator to move to strike out all after the resolving clause and put in anything he wants to or can get in.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if the matter is to be disposed of now, and not to go back to the committee, I should like to substitute the following provision:

That any person under the age of 21 who has served, or shall hereafter serve, in the Army of the United States during the present emergency, and any citizen of the United States who shall have attained, or shall hereafter attain, the age of 18 years or more, shall be entitled to the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and no other or greater rights, privileges, and immunities, under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over 21 years of age now possess under said laws; and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss particularly the matter referred to by the Senator from New Mexico. [After a pause.] The colleague of the Senator who has just surrendered the floor informs me that he desires to have a vote taken upon the pending joint resolution, and I presume so does the Senator from New Mexico who has just been commenting upon it. I will yield the floor until the matter is disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel that perhaps a word should be said upon this matter before the vote is taken.

The discussion of the subject by the Senator from New Mexico, whose familiarity with the subject is as great as, if not greater than, that of any other Senator, has opened up a number of very important considerations that perhaps were not reflected upon with any particular degree of care or intensity by those who are responsible for the provision of the bill to which the joint resolution is addressed.

Among other things, it is very pertinently inquired by the Senator from New Mxeico as to whether those over the age of 21 years should not be entitled to exactly the same privilege given to those under 21 by the bill, namely, the right to verify an application for a homestead in some distant country in which they may at the time be serving in the Army or Navy of the United States. The trouble about the matter is that there are well-founded apprehensions that the amendment as it existed in the first place would open up possibilities of fraud that none of us desire to leave open.

I can not but feel that the Senator from New Mexico, who now offers a substitute, is unduly apprehensive about the absorption of the public domain under the provisions of the bill as it now stands with the amendment which was eventually made to it. I can not believe there will be any great rush to make entries under the provisions of the bill, safeguarded as it is. It does, as a matter of fact, when considered in the form in which it was finally passed, represent an entirely new policy, but that new policy is simply the reflection of new conditions. Heretofore entrymen making homestead entries were at perfect liberty to execute relinquishments of any kind they saw fit. That was a perfectly wise policy. It was adopted so as to speed the absorption and appropriation of the public domain. Under the act as it stands, as a matter of course, as pointed out by the Senator from New Mexico, there will be more or less difficulty about the rapid disposition of the public domain; and yet, as I said, I do not believe that there is a cause for the apprehension which he evidently entertains.

Mr. President, heretofore in connection with all the great wars waged by this country we were under no necessity whatever to make provision so that those returning from the war would have abundant opportunity to take public lands.

We had a great abundance of them and the returning veterans freely availed themselves of the opportunity to take land. But the area now open to appropriation is limited, and it is going very rapidly, indeed. Our young men arriving speedily at the age of 21 years would be entitled to take these lands, but we take them from their homes and we send them to a distant country, so that they can not avail themselves of the opportunity to take the lands even when they arrive at the age of 21 years.

Speaking for myself, Mr. President, notwithstanding it means to some extent the tying up of the public domain, I am in favor of permitting these young men, before they go away and even after they go away, to exercise the privilege of taking a piece of the public domain and adopting a policy which will not mean the entire absorption of the public domain while they are gone by those who remain at home. Accordingly I think all ought to agree to the policy of giving these young men an opportunity to take lands.

Mr. President, if we adopt the substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico none of them will be able to take any public lands after they have left their homes, simply because, under the existing law, it becomes necessary to make the affidavit in verification of the application within the land district in which the land is situated, and the beneficent purposes of the act will be to a very large extent entirely destroyed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me for just a moment. Yet, on the other hand, if we leave the matter in such shape as that they may take the lands, make their entries abroad with perfect freedom, execute their relinquishments at any time or at any place, we immediately offer a most inviting field to land sharks and others desirous of absorbing a large portion of the public domain and institute at once a traffic in the relinquishments which they shall procure from the boys in France, and then sell to others who may desire to enter these particular homesteads. We ought not to leave that door open. Consequently the amendment finally took such shape as to make such relinquishments unavailable to anyone, and to be effective for no purpose whatever until the entryman shall have resided upon the land for the period of at least one year. With that qualification, I do not feel, as does the Senator from New Mexico, that there will be any very large amount of the public lands appropriated in this way.

But, Mr. President, if it is done it can only be done by the man who has the bona fide purpose eventually to cultivate the land and to reside upon it, because he will have no object in taking it and he can do nothing with his right unless under those conditions, and I am perfectly satisfied that he shall have that right and that the land shall be preserved for him after he has returned.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There has been a great deal of legislation enacted since we entered the war for the relief of certain entrymen upon the public domain, but all of that has simply gone to the point of protecting entries made before the soldier entered the war. Does not the Senator believe that all the young fellows of the country who live in a land section and who know conditions in the West, know what the land is and what use it can be put to, will have an opportunity before they are actually enlisted in the Army to make their entries, and, if they do, then legislation which we have enacted in two or three different bills would protect their rights during the war?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think many of the young men will avail themselves of the right given by the act and make their entries before they go away.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; Mr. President, I again inquire why we should not give the right to the young man just coming 18 years of age, or 19, or 20, to make an entry before he has to go into the Army. This relates only to those who have served or are serving in the Army. So it does not extend the right to a young man of 18, 19, or 20 years of age until he actually goes into the Army and leaves the land.

Mr. WALSH. Much may be said upon that, because a young man may be drafted and actually never see service at all. This is intended to give the right to those who can not avail themselves of the right in any other way.

Mr. President, I conclude what I have to say about this matter by suggesting, as I did on Friday to the Senator from New Mexico, that this legislation was not carefully considered by a committee as legislation of this character under ordinary circumstances ought to be, but no possible harm can be done with the joint resolution if passed as it came from the House, and then the whole subject can have the careful consideration of the committee upon the bill offered by the Senator from New Mexico, and it can be perfected in accordance with the wisdom which may be developed in the course of a full hearing and discussion before the committee.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the discussion, and if the Senator from Montana will allow me I will simply refer to one phase of the land question, in his time, and ask him if he has not also thought upon the proposition. Under the 640 acres grazing homestead act there are classifications going on by the department. In every land district in New Mexico there are now surveyors and agents of the Land Department engaged in classifying the lands. None of the lands in New Mexico were subject to this 640-acre entry until classified. Those classifications are being made. In reports from the department recently in the Russell land district office there have been approximately three-quarters of a million acres the preliminary work upon which has been done.

In the entire State of New Mexico, in all the different land districts, the acreage involved would amount to approximately 3,000,000, as I compute it, and yet the lands are not distinctly classified and are not subject to entry at this particular moment. They are being listed and in a very few months or weeks many of them will be classified and will be subject to entry. The homesteaders have come in from various portions of the United States. Those who are of age and qualified homestead entrymen under the law have made their applications for the designation of these lands and obtained a preference right. There are great communities throughout my State in which this condition of affairs exists.

Now, the boys who are 21 have the same opportunity their fathers had to enter the land. Those who are 18 years of age have not. Many of them will be subject to military service under the draft law. They will depart from that community and yet they are individually familiar with every quarter section of land, as is required by the regulations. They can testify; they can make oath as to the exact character of every 40 acres of a 640-acre tract or fraction thereof which they might desire to enter. They can not make those entries because they are not 21 years of age. Their rights should be preserved to them. That is all there is or was intended at least to be covered by the provisions of the amendment which has now been enacted into law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, another thing may be said in that connection. It would be only a very small portion of the right that we ought to extend to these young men to give them the right to make entry before they actually go away, because many things may intervene affording a young man an inviting opportunity after he has gone which did not exist at the time he left home. It might easily be that he would be able to purchase a relinquishment from a neighbor who desired to leave the country for one reason or another. It might be that he would be able to institute a contest against an entryman who had failed to comply with the law. In the western section of the country—a matter that will soon engage the attention of the Senate—they have suffered a very disastrous drought. As a consequence of these conditions many homesteaders will abandon their places after the lapse of a certain period, six months or thereabouts, possibly a year, and these will be subject to contest and possibly relinquishment may be purchased from them. So a young man who had no thought of making a homestead entry before he goes into the Army would find a most inviting opportunity after he had actually entered the service.

But, Mr. President, no great harm can be done, as it seems to me, to allow the joint resolution to go through, and then the whole subject can be canvassed and considered by the committee upon the bill which is tendered by the Senator from New Mexico as a substitute for the pending joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the only purpose which I had in calling attention to the joint resolution has been to get the attention of the Senate directed to the situation, which ought to be dealt with in a serious manner. I quite agree with the Senator from Montana and my colleague that the passage of the joint resolution per se will not hurt the situation very much. It will have a tendency to hold matters in statu quo until proper legislation may be had. Believing, as I do, that the attention of the Senate has now been called to the situation and having the belief that the Committee on Public Lands will deal with the situation in a careful way, I am not going to further oppose the passage of the joint resolution, and instead of offering my bill as a substitute for it I simply ask that it may be introduced and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred.

The bill (S. 4909) extending the benefits of the public-land laws to persons under 21 years of age, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) regulating the operation of the act entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917," will be indefinitely postponed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] The morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

UNOFFICIAL AND PERSONAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in this juncture of affairs I desire to submit some observations on unofficial and personal government.

The union of the American people in the war against Germany is one of the remarkable chapters in the history of nations. The obliteration of partisan lines in the conduct of the war is the most gratifying evidence of national spirit. The diverse racial elements of our population and the fierce political struggles in our domestic affairs make both events especially significant.

The minority party has generously given its support to the President and his Cabinet on every essential war measure proposed. Doubts on the wisdom or propriety of details are resolved in favor of the administration. Criticism of admitted or demonstrated error has been constructive or friendly, not malignant or destructive. The recorded votes bear witness to this happy truth. This unanimity will continue to the end, whatever rebuffs or want of appreciation may be manifested. Our country's welfare makes it our duty and our wishes a willing service or sacrifice. The inspiration of a great hope for a league of peace-loving, justice-administering nations and a higher patriotism than merely one country lights our way amid the sorrows and perils of our generation. A new spirit will be born on the shell-pitted, blood-washed fields of France.

This is no one man's war. It is the war of no political party. Neither is it the war of one country. On the battle ground of nations entire peoples are joined on the solemn issue of whether governments responsive to the consent of the governed shall survive or medieval kingship wielding the power of peace and war, life and death shall return mankind to the feudalism of the Dark Ages. This clearly felt but hitherto dimly seen goal is the higher impulse that has girded the sword on militant republics and sent the best of their blood to the battle fields of an imperiled world.

Our thoughts to-day are on the Marne. We see our colors in a distant land. Beside the flag of France our soldiers hold the lines with as brave men as ever that martial race sent to keep sacred her soil from the foot of the invader. They join with England and her colonies, younger children of her liberal empire, who send their sons to defend this great parliamentary lawgiver of nations. Italy strives with a valor and devotion worthy of the great cause at stake. What an inspiring scene to animate all who remain behind the lines! The heirs of the ages we! Our generations bear the priceless treasures won by civilized man since first he smote the oppressor, not to travel the path of glory but to achieve civil liberty for himself and his successors. If they fail on the battle front, all we have and know perishes in weakness and dishonor. The torch we caught from our fathers' hands goes out in the savagery of the Hun and the despotism of his king if we lose.

In this supreme crisis what a spectacle is the slacker in the rear, the workingman who strikes or quits or lags in the needful task, the wretch whose alien heart is wrong. For as they falter, at last its intended weakness breaks by that much the strength of the far-off battle line in whose ebb and flow pulsates the heart of the world's humanity.

What of those who, while the American people are centering thought and effort on our tremendous task, use the war to betray republican government to its undoing? Under the specious pretext of war necessity they are now substituting their obsessions and follies for the institutional liberty that is the birthright of both soldier and civilian. They pillage the temple of free government and set up in it their false gods, shouting that war demands the new worship. When the men return in victory they will face in civil life a socialistic state. Vast bureaucracies and centralized departments will have seized the principal occupations of private life. I believe it part of my duty to save for the man at the front the domestic institutions of his country at home while he is making the world safe for democracy abroad.

Autocratic power never rests. One demand granted becomes the lever to lift its impudent claims to further heights of usurpation. The great climacteric of civil government will come with the end of the war. We must then decide whether the American Republic remain a Government of regulated individualism or be transformed into a civilian autocracy of interrelated boards, bureaus, and departments operating the chief instruments of production, distribution, and communication of thought, including the printing press. The newspaper is as much within this subtle and malign power as the telegraph or bank. The recent order curtailing news columns under the guise of conserving paper stock is an invasion of the right of a privately owned, free press, designed to control the avenues of information.

Not one undertaking seized as a war measure is intended ever to be returned to their owners by the Burlesons, the Bakers, and the Gompers. They know as we do that the war is a handy pretense to embark the Government on their fantastic adventures. Physical properties are seized. They are used to exploit pay rolls dedicated to the alleged sacred cause of labor. At the very mention of this a complaisant Congress falls prostrate.

Pay rolls inevitably become the potent rod of politics. Not a Government enterprise but will be a recruiting station to mold votes to continue such a Government. It is political, not governmental control. It is not Government ownership, it is political ownership. No one knows this better than its promoters, who laugh at the ease of concealing from the public their real political purpose. It is so ridiculously simple they have lost their caution. The sincere socialist is aghast at the rapidity of the advance. The thinkers among them deplore the speed of the movement. They fear a reaction. Their heads are clearer than the power-drunken part of the crew on the ship driving upon the shore of a decrepit despotism of political control of essentially private pursuits. Call it what you like, it is a political party bent upon political ownership and control of all private property. Government control is a mere name. It lulls some into repose. It deceives some. It misleads many, because it is always easier to accept names than examine facts. No such vast delusion ever went so long unchallenged. Government control as now exercised by this administration is the threshold of permanent political ownership and operation. This administration's settled purpose is never to return to their owners any of the enterprises seized as alleged war necessities. It is publicly stated by a Cabinet officer intimately associated with the Executive that such property will never be surrendered to the owners without a vote of the people in spite of the express mandate of every act of Congress authorizing the taking that Government control be limited to a fixed time after the end of the war. Let it be blazoned to the thinking people of the country that Government control after the war is undiluted political control. On all questions directly or indirectly related to labor Gompers is practically President of the United States. Burleson controls the physical agencies for the communication of thought, McAdoo the railways and the country's finances. The three can reduce the industrial world to servile obedience or wearied disgust when they will acquiesce in a surrender of their property as a relief. The pay rolls will be unionized and the service and voters used to maintain and perpetuate the political party that subscribes to the original prostitution of Government and its subsequent usurpations. In the deepest sense it is reactionary and affirmatively so retrogressive as to end in the decay of Anglo-Saxon American spirit. Strip off the mask of alleged Government ownership and see behind it the revealed political ownership and control of Gompers, Burleson, and McAdoo for partisan purposes, to be used relentlessly to elect party candidates now and in 1920 a President. A medieval class government by a few who control the political party is what it is, call it by any name you please.

Consider the facts briefly stated: The shorter lines of steam railways are returned to their owners to survive or perish, as they can. They must subsist on local traffic or make terms on through business with the Government. They are reduced to impotency and can be bought at any figure a political government decides ultimately to pay. The standard return of the retained lines is the sole source out of which interest and dividends can be met. Such payments are vital to the maintenance of railway security values. If the standard return is to be diverted at the pleasure of the Government to improvements, betterments, and extensions and war instruments, such securities will swiftly reach the vanishing point. The negotiations now pending disclose a demand by the Government of this power, so as to apply what is in effect the rent paid by the tenant Government to the lessor railway owners for the use of the latter's private property. A like claim on the telephones, telegraphs, and industrial plants will be made. The slump in privately owned shares will be colossal. The cynical reply is made, this is the Government's time to buy cheap. The natural result of such an enormous shrinkage in values would be a tremendous panic.

The opportunity to exploit common stock at the expense of other issues by interested groups under such a power is among some of the incidental evils. The fluctuation of railway shares under the hammer of the Government's asserted claim to divert the standard return at pleasure expresses the sinister effect of political control of every species of private property. Not a public utility, a municipality, or a private corporation can borrow money on its own bonds without the approval of the Government. I know that at present the ban is a moral force only, but it is as effectual for drying up the fountain heads of credit as if armed with the plenary powers of a mandatory statute. Here again political influence centers in the Federal Government to sway every part of the country. After 30 years of political experience and observation I know how such a power will be used in the stress of campaign warfare. The strength of any political system is tested by evils resulting from a crisis and not its apparent safety or strength in normal times. Our ancestors, who founded our present constitutional system of representative government, so often reviled, surveyed the historical experience of the English-speaking race and of antiquity to provide against such stress and insure against both mobs and oligarchies.

It must be remembered that it is on the rights of private property that arbitrary government usually begins its attacks. That outpost taken, the great primary rights of person can be more readily disintegrated and destroyed.

Those rights are always vulnerable, because they arouse the hatred of many who are without property. Such assaults are made under the claim that a redistribution of property by law rather than economic processes is necessary by the changed conditions of modern society. Equality of opportunity under the law is the specious plea advanced. Equality of property is calmly assumed to be the only instrumentality to bestow of giving to each an equal amount as a cure for the unequal equality of opportunity. Therefore distribute property by law as a necessary means to the desired end. The evident absurdity gifts of fortune reduces considerably the number who favor a periodical division as a remedy.

That inconvenient individual result is avoided by aggregating the individuals and benevolently saying private property, now held by a few, will, by a philanthropic government, be taken and held for all who toil, who shall share equally in its benefits. The scheme is plausible and has led astray many kindly hearts and sincere searchers after truths. The basic error is ignoring the varying individual qualities and merits of persons and the lack of vigilant care for possessions owned in common as against what is owned by the individual. These two powerful incentives have stood the test of ages as the propelling forces of human economic progress. Any system which ignores either and assumes that everybody can be made a philanthropist by changing the form of government has and will come to grief. Still the scheme offers the accepted weapon for an insidious attack upon the entire institution of private property. Mere names are not substitutes for thought. The administration is embarking on a course whose governmental compass points to a total destruction of private property. Its ownership is now being assumed sufficiently under the pretense of war powers to aggregate its control in the hands of a few politicians and labor leaders. Whether they will administer it for a general diffusion of benefits among all or for powerful dominating groups or classes, ignoring and crushing the rights of minorities when peace comes, is the query. If human nature is become purged of its follies, its vices, and its crimes, it will succeed, for the millennium has arrived. No restraints of human government are needed to regulate a world of angels merely waiting for the last trump and suitable ascension robes. If this be not so, we enter upon a painful experience to learn anew the limitations and chastening influence of those immutable laws set about us by nature and an eternal God for our discipline and development while we tarry and toil for a brief season on earth. There is no practical difference between the political ownership and operation of essentially private property for the alleged equalization of the benefits to all and the actual benefit of a class or group and the periodical division of property among all so as to equalize property possessions. The process moves through longer cycles. It finally reaches the same goal in the slower mutations of government ownership as the swifter and more direct methods of taking and dividing.

Socialism is the fantastic younger brother of almost decrepit despotism, which it wants to succeed; its efforts are therefore in the deepest sense reactionary.

This was written by Nietzsche, the German, some time before he died.

History does not record a race that permitted its private possessions, its earnings, and its right to toil to be assumed by an oligarchy, however wise and just originally, that the subjugation of their personal rights or civil war did not end the melancholy chapter. Those who deserve civil liberty and the rights of a free man see danger from afar, as did the spirits who laid the deep foundations of the Republic now so vilely sought to be cast away while the best of our blood and brain struggles devotedly to free the world from a military despotism. The Kaiser will be overthrown, his ambition blasted, till he eats the bread of bitterness and drinks of the waters of sorrow. While we sacrifice to this paramount purpose, shall we permit without protest civil officers to rivet an economic class despotism on our necks? I abhor such a scheme. I denounce a political autocracy covertly engaged when the Nation is in the stress of war in undermining the institutional civil liberty that will turn victory into ashes on a trusting people's lips.

Politics is adjourned! Worse, more rampant, rancorous, partisan politics never abused the patriotism and generous confidence of a great Nation. I know the answer to this. My reward will be the mendacious charge that I am embarrassing the administration in its conduct of the war.

We are not. We are criticizing the conduct of domestic affairs which relate to the peace period.

American civil government need not be destroyed to achieve victory abroad. "A country preserved at the sacrifice of all the cardinal principles of liberty is not worth the cost of preservation." Against the clandestine partisan activities of this administration hidden under the thick clouds of war, I raise my voice seasonably in remonstrance.

What an ungrateful return for a mighty loyalty! Poor and rich, the humble and the exalted, have answered their country's call and broken down party lines everywhere. Behind this rampart of a Nation's devotion hide a coterie of politicians gilded and plated by a group of theorizing, intolerant intellectuals as wildly impractical as ever beat high heaven with their phrase-making jargon. They appeal to the impulsive, the thoughtless, the ignorant, class hatred, the iconoclast, the freak, the degenerate, to convert the United States into an economic class despotism administered by a political party. Even now it is putting up and pulling down candidates to this end. Not on principle is the test, not how they voted, but when, and their ability to endure servile prostration before the seat of power. It even presumes to dictate Republican candidates in Republican States, beating its pharisaical bosom the while that all may witness its nonpartisan virtues. I respect the open, honorable warfare of a political opponent; I can not the skulking treachery to deceive and destroy. It introduces into American politics what too nearly resembles the German methods, among nations universally execrated and condemned.

There is no change now from other days, Mr. President. There circles about the seat of power in every age the unctuous sycophant, who beats the earth with his brazen forehead and tortures Heaven with his discordant brayings. In monarchies the king's jester, who was among the wisest of the realm, sufficed somewhat to abate such pests, so as to give relief to the royal cranium, without resorting too frequently to justifiable homicide. For egomania or any species of grandiose vanity nothing is so deadly as impulsive laughter. It has relieved many an inflammation without bloodletting and brightened the journey to our final interview with St. Peter. Many times anciently it gave the official fool killer a needed rest, so as to recuperate for his busy season. These defensive practices, sanctioned by arbitrary governments, have never found favor among free peoples. The obnoxious satellites who in earlier times were kept down by the court jester and the headsman infest modern democracies unchecked. If it fall out that some of the present variety of this servile gentry hath a facility of expression, a book results. Then it is the difficulties of saving our most cherished institutions are vastly multiplied. Ordinary laws are futile. Constitutional limitations aggravate the disorder. Nothing but an oriental despot could devise governmental processes adequate for the offender. Holy Writ suggests, as it so often does, a remedy for sorely beleagured human nature, for Solomon advises:

> Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit.

Grave analysis and sound argument fall unheeded on certain weightier offenses. Let this be at once my apology and defense in this Chamber for my past or future lapses from accepted standards.

Worst of all, a grave suspicion is bruited about that the real power that wields the scepter revels in the laudatory mire of a biographical wallow now extant. Horrifying evidence that the mere idle gossip of envious pelf seekers is not the source of these tales accumulates. The most recent testimony is extracted from 306 pages of a book called "The Real Colonel House." The approved way is to begin with the hero's birth, but it is more lucid to begin with the end and finish with the beginning. As the time is out of joint anyhow, the last paragraph on the last page is first quoted. It refers to the colonel's choice of exit:

> I have always wanted to die with my boots on. I dread the thought of dying in bed.

It is inconceivable over 300 pages of miasma could escape its author without the colonel's knowledge and approval. This assumed, his chances of dying in bed are brighter than the average Texan's is supposed to be. Anyone who could read such personal reference and resist a mighty desire to hunt the author up and dispatch him is not game. He is doomed to die barefooted of an untragic cold in the head or something like that. I read the whole devilish mess, feeling that somehow or other the hero would, at last, be redeemed. When the final paragraph quoted was assimilated, hope fled to the darkest abyss of despair, never to return.

Our ancestors provided us with a government by the people through the agency of the election of public officers. Congress has created great departments to supplement the President in administering executive power. Vast sums of money are appropriated to this end. Governmental power is supposed to return to the people at fixed intervals. This makes our Government responsive to public opinion and enables its representatives to enact, expound, and execute the great salutary elementary principles that successfully govern States. After the "real Col. House" is understood it is easy to see the criminal blunders perpetrated by our ancestors in framing the Constitution under whose sheltering walls the public peace and private security of 100,000,000 people are maintained.

Be it ever remembered the simon-pure texture of the colonel's thoughts can be had only by digesting a novel written by him. I know that heretofore it has ordinarily been mere gossip around the cloakrooms that he was the author; but I state, subject to any proof that may be offered that he is not, that I have such satisfactory evidence as leads me to say that he is the author of the novel. The publisher of the Gehenna of a tale of politics, civil war, love, and reform with a meat ax says, introducing his weird eruption to a skeptical public:

> The author of this book, a man prominent in political councils, must necessarily remain anonymous. His pages are full of facts known only to the inner circle in statecraft and finance. His story shows how the seething, radical elements in the political cask to-day, under pressure of rising prices for the poor and greater privileges for the rich, literally burst into one great conflict—the second Civil War—out of which rises the figure of Philip Dru, who shapes the future of the Nation.

Its title-page is dated 1912 and is a story of 1920 to 1935 called Philip Dru, Administrator. Here is exhibited the colonel's whole mental viscera. If there be twilight zones in the biography of 1918, the colonel's 312 pages of fiction flashed from the watchtowers of 1912 a searchlight athwart the gloaming so any wayfarer can see everything. Suffice it to know Philip Dru is an autobiography of the colonel himself and solves the conundrum how to get rid of the Constitution.

In Joe Jefferson's autobiography, in the foreword, he quotes an Irishman who says, "A man's autobiography should always be written by himself." This, therefore—the biography written by one of the numerous Smith family—is really misnamed on the title page. It ought to have been written by the colonel himself, because it contains his inner personal and political life. In the novel he solves the problem of how to get rid of the Constitution. His forebears in 1861 wrestled with it in just the same way. They failed in the first Civil War. The second civil war succeeds in fiction. It is a rebellion against plutocrats who exist only because of a written constitution. They corrupt Congress, the Supreme Court, the President, everything. The people rebel against the ill-flavored government. A hideous battle is fought near Lake Erie. It makes the Marne and Verdun look like a street car riot. He revels in fictitious dead. Col. House's biographer quotes him as saying:

> I think it is my memory of early times keeps me from being so shocked as some people are at the dreadful slaughter of this war. To a man who can remember when bad men killed for sport in open daylight in city streets and desperadoes swarmed in bands and ruled whole tracts of country, the destruction of European lands is not so startling after all.

So it is natural when he drops into fiction to be liberal with imaginary gore. Of course, the plutocrats lose the battle. The Government of the United States which sheltered them, the Constitution which created them by protecting the vested rights of property, and the whole obsolete theory of the reserved rights of the States went to everlasting smash. The colonel in battle array on the page of fiction is a fearsome sight indeed. Nobody can fully appreciate it without reading the novel at length.

Again we view Col. House in triumph. Nothing is visible now but Philip Dru, administrator of the Republic. He becomes dictator with a clean slate. He indulges in a few remarks. Rebellion is justified. The government was defective in machinery, defective in constitution and laws. Laws caused all the differences between the few and the many. The constitution and laws are grotesque, obsolete, oppressive, arbitrary, and the source of injustice. The whole Federal Government is a system of negation. It restricts efficiency. It is a fair question whether this whole allegory of alleged inefficiency and oppression does not violate the espionage act every time a copy of the book is sold. I believe it does. So our hero obliterated the entire pestiferous brood with his trusty sword. Delightfully like Creel, who tried to turn the trick with his fountain pen. How plain that these kindred souls in fiction stand by each other heroically in a bloodless revolution by seizing everything in sight. Always we glimpse in both, in the biography and fiction, the abolition of government by law and the substitution of a superman government.

The waste of effort in the ministration of the Christian churches will interest the clergy:

> There was evolved the Christian religion of to-day, a religion almost wholly selfish and concerned almost entirely in the betterment of life after death.

The old hymn that said—

> This world's a wilderness of woe;
> This world is not my home—was a humbug, according to Col. House. According to this novel, it is a mere jingling ditty, as the university professor in Chicago said when he was making fun of our grandfather's hymns a few years ago. So the colonel, in order to explain matters, starts a heaven here on earth to show how useless the pulpit has always been up to this time.

The fictitious hero frames a universal code of laws himself. Everybody is given an equal opportunity. Everybody gets justice. Avarice is eliminated. The sting of poverty is removed. Envy, selfishness, extravagance are banished by a few wholesome laws conceived in horse sense and conferred by the colonel on a long-suffering people who are become incapable of self-government. They are rescued from devouring plutocracy by this benignant genius who is a mixture of Thomas Jefferson, George Washington, and Jefferson Davis on the American side of the family and of Moses, Zoroaster, and Napoleon in Europe, Asia, and Africa. He exterminates quack doctors. The lawyers are shut up by showing them the standing army. Two-thirds of the State and Federal courts are abolished and the practice of the beggarly remnant so simplified and expedited everybody can be his own lawyer and collect his claim the day after he brings suit. Psychology is substituted for taxation. We will pay our taxes in a state of spiritual exaltation, just like a man chloroformed has his leg cut off and does not know it. Cotton exchanges reformed, woman suffrage settled, swamp lands, old-age pensions, labor insurance, Government pawnshops where one's benevolent uncle accepts anything as collateral without interest, free employment agencies, eight-hour day or less, work for everybody, high-cost living rooted out, political bosses killed off, a short ballot, commission form of government, monopoly dead, funerals reformed, crape discontinued, and cremation introduced, gossip and quilting clubs giving healthful circulation to family secrets discouraged, peace leagues and Hull Houses started everywhere; a battleship he invents that can not be hit, all the powers of Europe, Asia, and Africa made behave and their several spheres of activity fixed by this colossus in whom we again glimpse a reflection of the "real Col. House." Mexico is soundly drubbed, Canada annexed, the Philippines swapped off and made a vassal of Japan, China and Japan given a free hand to chase Russia out of the Orient, and then the millenium arrives. It makes us sad, for nobody can afford to die after House gets through cleaning up the earth.

The colonel's set of remedial laws make the Code Napoleon seem like a prohibition ordinance in a local-option town. The last feat of this Ajax of modern fiction was to frame a constitution to fit his code of laws. This wise precaution prevents any of the statutes from being held unconstitutional by future judicial aberration. Most text writers will regard this as an innovation. Simplicity must, however, not be sacrificed to antiquated scruples in popular reforms. No lawyer ever thought of such a perfectly novel scheme. But that tribe are chained to precedent and much given to wise saws and fixed rules which are scorned by all true reformers everywhere. A few men like Col. House, or his alter ego, Philip Dru, properly distributed through the ages, will make resolution No. 193, introduced January 8, 1917, by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], to remove all judges from the bench who decide an act of Congress unconstitutional, a waste of print paper.

The colonel presents his views of freeing the slaves in the first Civil War. He estimates it confiscated $2,000,000,000 worth of perfectly good salable live stock. Then the pension system following the Rebellion was one-sided. It pensioned only the Union soldiers. He figured out by 1927 more than $5,000,000,000 had gone to those who kept the Government from destruction, while the South was taxed her part and could not get on the pension roll. A post-mortem reflection is inserted that for nearly half a century "no southerner was considered eligible for the Presidency." They are now, we infer, collecting back pay and recuperating from the 50 lean years when the colonel's constituency abstained from refreshing themselves at public expense.

The inspiring panorama of the colonel's hero riding swiftly down Pennsylvania Avenue on a seal-brown gelding named Twilight amid the deafening plaudits of the multitude is worth many gallons of midnight oil and hours of toil to discover and drag forth into the glare of day. The only modesty shown in the whole affair is mounting him on a gelding.

Unofficial and personal government began with Mr. House—he execrates the colonel to his name—and is now in its zenith. His biographer says the colonel is one of the most remarkable characters in American history. A swarm of colonels in all latitudes will instantly dispute this. At any rate our startled gaze first rests on him with Lloyd George, President Poincaire, President Wilson, Gen. Lundendorff, and the Kaiser. Such a vision of glory makes Creel wish he had done it himself. The colonel's name, I quote, "is now a household word throughout the world. After the President no man in public life exerts so dominant an influence on domestic or international affairs. He occupies a place in connection with the administration which is anomalous, because no such place ever existed before Wilson became President. The colonel wields a power greater than that of any political boss or Cabinet Member, because the President knows he can trust him." This resounding slam on officers elected by the people proves what an expensive piece of excess baggage Congress is. It explains why such impedimenta encumbering the Executive is to be soundly cuffed now and then and shown its place.

Why should the Cabinet be thus cruelly banged about when three of its members hail from the colonel's own State of Texas? Diplomats do not act in foreign parts until this unofficial envoy extraordinary and personal minister omnipotent surveys the habitable globe. We learn from his biographer he saw the war coming in 1913, and in 1914 went to Europe to notify the Kaiser not to start it. Henry Ford collected a frenzied drove of pacifists and more or less hairy architects of prismatic visions in Oskar II and hied him to Europe to do the same thing after it started. If both of them had spent their energies in preparing for war and awakening public sentiment their claims to fame would read better. Ford is to be made Senator from Michigan by Executive order, and Col. House has his biography published while he is still alive. Paul wrote Timothy, A. D. 66:

> Alexander, the coppersmith, did me much evil; the Lord reward him according to his works.

When the colonel went to Europe as the President's personal envoy in May, 1914, he abode in the capitals of the powers. Advice he gave then in abundance. The faithful chronicler of unofficial government informs us they listened politely and went their several degenerate ways. The views of the United States on the freedom of the seas were delivered to the belligerents in March, 1915, by the colonel on a second trip. In substance it meant exemption from capture or harm of all noncombatants and neutrals and confined war solely to operations of the armies and navies of the belligerents, the cargo, contraband or noncontraband, of merchantmen being guaranteed against seizure. A blockade of an enemy nation becomes impossible. A navy could be used only as a defense against invasion. The United States was then a neutral and at peace with every Government in the world. The offer of Col. House changed the international law known to every civilized country. The President then had no war powers. His secret and personal envoy exercised unofficial and usurped powers of government. His gratuitous advice so to settle the U-boat dispute provoked the derision of Germany and the impatience of the allies.

The colonel had a plan next to turn Austria into a collection of internal disturbances which would make the Bolchevists yearn for it as a vast improvement over their contrivance to disintegrate undesirable empires. If it had been adopted instead of causing people to look bored, the war would have been over before the President could have kept us out of it in 1916. How the colonel could have elected him a second time if this debacle had occurred the biographer prudently avoids.

However, reelect him he did, almost single-handed against the world, the flesh, and an astonishing variety of devils. The only help he had were a few football players with their college yell, "He kept us out of war," and a miscellaneous assortment of Bull Moose remnants shouting onward and downward, landing bodily in the Democratic Party. These political windfalls became a household necessity to the administration. The President is a strict party man all say who hold discourse on that subject. He found them legal tender in the payment of minority obligations. This did no violence to his conscientious scruples on party regularity. It further enabled him to pay off his friends outside his party and really to forage on the enemy. This noble squad of last deckers have since all found gratifying and comfortable office to represent the Republican Party. Not a refusal or a resignation appears to mar their continuous efforts for many years to devote themselves to the public service. Having failed to secure elective office from an ungrateful people, they all virtuously resolved they would rather sit at the door of the Democratic Party on the minority pay roll than dwell in the tents of Republican wickedness.

We learn from this historical compendium the colonel decided a coalition cabinet during the war was impossible. It was admitted it had succeeded in Europe, but—

Our political institutions would not lend themselves to such departures. There were constitutional, political, and human obstacles in Washington which would not permit any Republican to be chosen to any civil position about the President.

The extraordinary amount of responsibility intrusted under the Constitution to the President made it incumbent upon the Chief Executive to have the support of men of his party. To him will go the credit for victory. No; a coalition cabinet was rejected by Col. House's evenly balanced mind.

The President had certain aims and ideals which he could not intrust to any but lieutenants of his own way of thinking.

To him, to the President, will go the credit for victory. I have thought possibly, Mr. President, in my innocence or ignorance, that the credit for victory would go to a loyal and united American people. I have thought it even possible that some small measure of credit would go to the minority party who have voted for war supplies, who have voted for men, so that both may be used in force without stint against the public enemy. The majority in this Senate have been generous and given us due credit. I have thought possible that everyone who set his politics aside and rose to the higher level of patriotism would be entitled to some credit. But we are informed by the colonel that this is an error. To the President will go the credit.

The colonel is quoted:

If a war-council bill is passed, he can veto it, and if it is passed over his head, he can appoint men whom he knows he can trust.

The resolution by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] in the beginning of the war looked to the appointment of a joint committee on the management of the war. It was beaten, and beaten with the approval of the Executive. I take it, therefore, that all appointments in every executive department, in every one of the civilian offices, and in the airplane department are those for which the President primarily is responsible.

He has appointed men whom he knows, to follow this quotation, I presume, he can trust. Having done that, claiming the credit for the war, assuming the power that makes him responsible, we ask him, therefore, to produce the necessary results commensurate with the expenditure of money and the granting of power by Congress. The report recently made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate indicates that in the airplane construction the men whom he knows he can trust in this branch of the service have proved either recreant to their trust or supremely incapable of performing their duty.

I state on credible information Col. House read the proof sheets of the book before it was published. Politics is not adjourned even in conducting the war. Again quoting the colonel:

The handicap on statesmen is talking too much. They like to say something that will attract the crowd and then sit idle for a week and read over their speech complacently.

No statesmen ever read his speech oftener than the colonel did the proof of his biography.

The colonel became the head of the American war mission. We learn from this deluge of biographical conceit professional Democrats and Republicans boiled with rage because he had never worn the toga of a Senator or possessed the privileges of the House. They did not understand that colonels outranked a mere Member of Congress and are much more numerous. No one in Congress noticed the temperature rise. Neither would any save a valorous knight of the inkpot resolved to create a hero at all hazards paragraph his subject as a mysterious colonel and unlettered Texas ranchman who conferred with premiers of the great European nations. Still unofficial and personal government in view.

From a remarkable quotation we learn the colonel believes "the smaller the number of men handling a proposition the better." Connecting the prompt and beneficial results got by the colonel's hero of romance, Mr. Dru, with the quotation, we realize a military dictator or a king is this Government efficiency expert's way of solving great reforms. "Let the people rule" is a grotesque theory.

The colonel, we learn, is now gathering peace data and preparing a treaty that will settle everything everywhere. The Senate's function will be limited to ratifying what he sends to it. The amazing bales of international lore he is stowing away can be faintly conjectured by reading chapter 23 of his biography. An immense array of wise men abound there. Some are essayists of incalculable horsepower who have essayed everything under the sun. Professors are professing furiously. Lawyers are lawing. Editors are editing. Cartographers are mapping the earth's surface and geologists examining its bowels. A fair sprinkle of socialists are innocently planted away. They will spring up every time political ownership needs boosting. Time nor place ever influences them in thrusting their views forward. The troop of savants, each prancing gaily along on his lifetime hobby, will leave nothing to be desired and everything impossible ever to be known. The records of civilization will be ransacked, beginning with original chaos and Moses and ending with the Official Bulletin. Everything will be discovered, from what has become of the billion-dollar airplane appropriations to the color of an Arab sheik's hair. Conservation experts are secured who could have created the whole earth if they had been consulted in time and saved enough cosmic building material to make an extra one for the Kaiser. On his committee are mathematical seers who can demonstrate the fourth dimension and square the circle so lucidly it can be taught in the primary grades. Others swell dried apples to any desired power by the binomial theorem, thereby adding to our food supply. Executive experts look in your eyes, order you to walk backward five steps and jump sideways, both ways simultaneously, and assign you to the kindergarten instruction of Government mules or decide you only fit to assist Creel. Psychologists with X-ray vision drop different colored handkerchiefs on a table, spill a half pint of navy beans, ask you in a sepulchral tone what disease Walter Raleigh died of, and demand the number of legumes without counting. Your memory, perceptive faculties, concentration, and other mental giblets are tagged and you are pigeonholed for future reference.

I have seen those psychologists in my time and have dealt with them. If they were put out in a forest or in a potato patch, they have not sense enough to kill a rabbit or dig a potato to save themselves from the pangs of starvation. This is a government by professors and intellectuals. I repeat intellectuals are good enough in their places, but a country run by professors is ultimately destined to Bolshevism and an explosion.

We learn from this perennial volume of incessant surprises that all foreign Governments have secret ambitions and pet obsessions mingled with their war aims which will warp peace-treaty talk. It is Col. House's function to riddle them out and purify peace. Alsace-Lorraine has been dissected and card indexed by this committee. From the Chinese wall to Archangel it is so analyzed and arranged the Senate is relieved of all responsibility save ratifying the colonel's labors.

German West Africa and all the rest of that continent will be cross-filed and familiar as a golf course. The freedom of the seas will be examined from every angle of law, commerce, and history by the colonel. In this aggregated encyclopedia the Jews in Palestine, the Slavic elements in the Balkans, the Czecho-Slovaks, Italia Irredenta, Poland, Arabia, the Kurds, Armenia, Afghanistan, and permanent peace are all being now salvaged by the colonel and his committee. Here we are thrown a life preserver which keeps breath in our bodies a little while.

The colonel's and the President's minds run parallel on everything of great importance. It is the only thing that saves us. If they diverged, I forbear, with the limited facilities of mere human speech, to presage the end.

Here is how it all started: The colonel picked four governors of Texas and United States Senators too numerous to recite. He ran its politics for years by simply telling everybody else what to do. Then all at once it staled on him. For a long time he had been out with a dragnet searching for a candidate to exploit in a national convention. The colonel, the biographer says, opined Bryan's free-silver nostrum was a fatal dose of poison. But, said he—I quote still:

I couldn't conceive myself voting anything but a Democratic ticket.

The independent citizen is the highest type of citizen, the colonel hastens to remark, with a modest spirit of self-abnegation. While the heaven-decreed ratio was being knocked rudely about by blasphemous scoffers, we read the colonel sat tight and bided his time when the frenzy would abate. If this book is to be trusted, the colonel tarried in his storm cellar 12 years. It is commonly supposed during this period of nearly total abstinence the colonel compounded in his novel the saturnalia of reform, in which he staged himself as the dictator of North America and the last hope of a degenerate world. At any rate, having detected what he diagnosed as a lucid interval in his party, he fared forth with his dragnet again. Mayor Gaynor attracted his attention. In the early summer of 1910 the colonel suggested he run for governor of New York and allow himself to be translated from Albany to the White House.

The mayor acted up mulishlike, so runs this tale of the man who was out when fate disguised as Col. House knocked at his door. He refused to hearken to the colonel's voice. Contrary to custom, fate called a second time. The mayor was invited to make a speech at the Dallas State Fair. The Texas Legislature was in session. Both barrels of Lone Star politics could be discharged at once. A party of friends, casually headed by the colonel, appeared at the New York City hall and bid the mayor observe the White House beckoning him frantically from the skyline of the Texas horizon. But with the customary provincialism of the blase New Yorker he forgot his acceptance of the colonel's invitation to hit the trail for the Presidency via Dallas. He wired a Texas newspaper man collect he never heard of it before. Anybody who could father a snub like that might be fit for mayor of a coast town, but he lacked executive sense to discriminate between a chairman of a ward meeting in the metropolis and a Texas statesman. The colonel dropped him unostentatiously but instantly. Anybody who could not remember Col. House longer than that made him want to die with his boots on worse than ever. This unseemly affair also made the colonel uncomfortable. Acting on his request, the Texas Legislature had resoluted beseeching the mayor to orate to their joint bodies on any current topics of public concern. Here the biographer got his notes mixed. These were the fellows who boiled with rage. The colonel's ears burned several days.

But he wiped off the slate and started a fresh search for somebody to make a speech at his State fair. Now the author halts creation long enough to remark:

> That was probably the worst mistake that Col. House ever made, and it served to convince him that his policy of putting prospective candidates over the jumps until they had demonstrated their paces was the only safe one.

From his indefatigable biographer we derive the satisfying information the colonel was not discouraged, but with—> his usual calm aplomb surveyed the available stock of eastern Democrats.

He moved his star of empire over Princeton, N. J. Thus Texas scored heavily on New York, the Presidency crossed the river, and the city hall remained unspoiled by madding ambition. Right here history repeats itself. To anchor down the star at the aforesaid spot the colonel dangled his State fair before Gov. Wilson. He just would have somebody make a speech at his fair, although he thinks speech making a useless vanity, yet many giddy creatures will persist in listening to it. So Gov. Wilson came, "went over his jumps, and demonstrated his paces" with as much zeal as if he had not been the colonel's second choice.

All these contortions behind the scenes remind one strangely of the ways of politicians and divers of the ungodly. But among the elect, like the colonel, it is a candidate's civil-service examination. It separates the remembering sheep from the forgetful goats who forget their invitations to State fairs, and the like. So the candidate passed with good grades; the colonel gave out the word and the mill started. There had not been so much excitement in Texas since it was independent and lost a $5,000,000 loan from France because an Austin hotel keeper horsewhipped the French minister's servant who had killed the boniface's pigs that had broken into the stable and eaten the minister's horse's corn, whereat the Gallic diplomat, failing otherwise to obtain satisfaction, killed the loan as dead as the pigs and left the Lone Star Republic in high dudgeon.

To resume the trail, the colonel and the governor met in New York soon after. Let it be told in the colonel's own language; no mortal can improve it:

> We talked and talked, we knew each other for congenial souls at the very beginning. I don't remember just what we said, but I know we hit the "high spots." We agreed about everything.

Of the second meeting the colonel says:

> We talked about everything, I believe, and this time we could go into details and analyze our thoughts. It was remarkable. We found ourselves in agreement upon practically every one of the issues of the day. I never met a man whose thoughts ran so identically with mine.

Here originated the parallel of minds already related. The biographer's innocence is the most touching passage in the roll call of human credulity. The annals of American politics do not reveal a candidate who had not a parallel mind with the man who carried the delegates from a State like Texas and a lot of its neighbors around with him. This veracious political encyclopedia of the genesis of Democratic politics says the colonel fell ill of a fever at a most inopportune moment. It was right after the Manhattan Club affair, when George Harvey, an early and sincere friend, was sacrificed in cold blood to pacify Col. Bryan and Col. Watterson. If Col. House had been on his legs instead of sick in Texas, it is hinted it would not have happened. "His diplomacy in handling men" as one colonel to another would have saved the day. As it was, Col. House, we learn by the book, feels it operated to their candidate's advantage, because the radicals were delighted to see a man of preservative good sense like Harvey kept out of the inner circle. The radicals have been delighted several times since. They have multiplied in the administration like a malignant germ culture. They must please Col. House, as they believe in smashing things as much as the colonel's heroes in his autobiographical novel. One iconoclast recognizes another by instinct, just as the book says the colonel does his politics.

The Joline letter, written by the President in 1907, desiring earnestly some dignified and effective way of knocking Bryan once for all into a cocked hat, came to the surface while the colonel was still sick. Like his candidate's application to the Carnegie pension fund for an annuity, the thing excited campaign headquarters a good deal. Bryan returned from Jamaica just in time to get their full flavor. The colonel being ill, Josephus Daniels was dispatched to meet Bryan and explain. He fixed it up beautifully, and a Secretary of the Navy was politically begotten on the spot. Out of a spell of fever and the cocked-hat epistle the fates wrote a Cabinet member's commission.

Senator Bailey's friends, we next learn, owned most of the voting shares in the Texas State machine. The colonel scorned petty details. He got Burleson to attack the machine. Gregory joined in the chase. Here were two more Cabinet members hatched in as palpable a political incubator as ever rejoiced the heart of a politician. Houston had more than a platonic affinity in Texas politics as president of the agricultural and mechanical college of that State. He was useful in 1912 by filling their candidate's speeches and cranium with destructive free-trade data. Translated to Missouri, he is debited to that State. This accounts for another Cabinet member. Mr. Redfield had laid the robber tariff by the heels with sundry heavy blows when he was a Member of the lower House instead of the Texas House. He was likely one of the statesmen who read over his speech for a week complacently. It would not be amiss to have somebody who dealt in a large way with abstractions. So commerce was enriched by his presence in the Cabinet. He has made some sparkling contributions to trade. From him came the shocking information that the high cost of living was caused by too many delivery wagons. He invented a plan of reducing meat bills by eating cheese. An epic on fish and clams is credited to him, along with a sonnet or two on sheep-killing dogs.

A. Mitchell Palmer was originally slated, I learn from this veracious source, for Secretary of War. Unfortunately Mr. Palmer was a Quaker. He feared the position would endanger his creed. There was little time left in Cabinet building, we learn by a perusal of the book, to secure a man of the proper caliber, so they had to take what was available. Joseph P. Tumulty suggested Lindley Garrison. Every sincere lover of his country would wish Mr. Tumulty might have been authorized then and there to select more of the Cabinet if this is so. Garrison measured up to the place. He saw the shadow of the mighty struggle across the Atlantic. More practical was he than House because he sounded the note of preparation. His plan would have trained an army ready to strike when we declared war, not 15 months afterwards. Creel would have been robbed of his rapturous ecstacy, but the public would have reconciled itself to that. Garrison's successor has made everybody wish the Quaker had overcome his scruples and been put in charge of the fighting instead of one who thinks the war front is 3,000 miles away, talks glibly of quantity production of combat airplanes, delays three months the draft-law amendment of 1918, opposes universal military training, and says Washington's soldiers at Valley Forge were drunkards and chicken thieves, only to be declared by Executive proclamation to be the most capable official that distinguished functionary ever knew.

This worldly turmoil would make a carnal politician casually observe it the same as he does, but the Cabinet was not done by considerable. The historian informs us the party was still rent by feuds and dissensions. The horoscope cast by the colonel showed Col. Bryan in the offing unprovided for. Bryan's aid in holding the party together was desired. He was not made Secretary of State to guide the steps of 100,000,000 people in the quicksands of Old World diplomacy, but to serve as a cohesive tie, a sort of mortar to bind the rolling stones of a political party together. It was considered by the President and his friends the correct policy to placate Bryan by taking him into the Cabinet. Politics began there and it has never adjourned since in domestic affairs. It is frankly said that in two years when he resigned he had played second fiddle long enough to serve the purpose he was selected for and "his power for harm had waned." Was there ever a more sordid revelation of selfish time-serving politics in American affairs with the first executive office next only to the President shuffled about as plunder to serve partisan ends?

Reformers must, of course, write some hullabaloo about politicians. It is popular with men who could not be elected town clerk by their neighbors any place in the civilized world. But what has Col. House got out of it for Texas? Three Cabinet members and enough Federal appointments to crowd the Bolshevist government up through the Arctic Circle. It is a mistake to say the South is in the saddle. Col. House and a coterie of Texas politicians are in the saddle, and they are doing politics in the same old way. Here is what the author says about the colonel's purpose and peculiarities in politics:

Practical politicians immediately concluded that here was a man to be conciliated, and they were quick to endeavor to place their talents at Col. House's disposition. But for all who came he had a courteous greeting, and not much else. He listened to what they had to say, of course. He is an unusually good listener. But after they had talked their heads off he had only a courteous good-by to reward them with, and the practical politicians went away with a distinct feeling of resentment. They told each other that "this fellow House" was plainly not going to share things; he was going to try "to hog it all for himself." And clumsily, after their own fashion, they sought to start backfires against him, which either flickered out in the kindling or else spurted flames at the conspirators. It took a long time for the professional politician to have it seeped through his head that Col. House was not in the game for the purposes which animated him.

It is an open secret that Col. House's rôle in the administration at first was that of political next of kin to Mr. Wilson, an all-around counselor and conciliator. His wits fairly itched to get at the international problems, which were the most interesting phase of governmental work to him; but he appreciated the need of settling the vital questions of domestic legislation before devoting his attention elsewhere.

He has a talent for taking the kinks out of Government work.

Any leader who disregards the politicians can not help succeeding is a maxim we learn. Here is the way he manages his business:

"Listen," he says, "you do not need to call in the town brass band, enlist spellbinders, and hire a press to accomplish any worth-while purpose."

Tell it to the Committee on Public Information. Why not ask the colonel to take that amazing outfit in hand and muzzle its roaring deluge of emptiness? Why not have the colonel sell Liberty bonds without so much uproar? The colonel is "a consulting expert in politics and adviser and assistant of office-holders."

He plays politics because he loves politics, because he can not resist the pleasure of directing men and policies any more than the born artist can keep his hands off paint tubes and brushes.

We know whom to hold responsible from now on.

He is chief adviser in the formation of all of the President's important decisions.

Col. House's sole object is to help Mr. Wilson in his difficult task, and in helping him to help Americans and all mankind, and to the President the advice of this man of crystal-clear vision means acceleration of his gigantic projects for humanizing modern civilization. "It is safe to say," observes the inspired hynotized author, and I have no doubt it is so, "that nobody appreciates Col. House's value so highly as does the President." This applied to 100,000,000 American people is literally true of this alleged unelected unofficial assistant President of the United States. He it is, the Executive's spear, whose staff is like a weaver's beam and whose weight is 300 shekels of brass, who is the six-fingered son of Gath in this administration.

After this astounding melange of as personal politics as ever appeared anywhere, the colonel gravely remarks in appointments, "Our first test was fitness." After this tell us anything, and it will be made credible. If he can perform such services as are indicated without publicity and without a brass band, then save such orders as recently went out from the Postmaster General; save the orders that went out curtailing the use of print paper, when the columns of all the newspapers in the country are cut all the way from 15 to 60 per cent, including the week-day editions, as well as the Sunday editions. I view this and all the other insidious advances, Mr. President, as a means of controlling the sources of information and of distributing that information to the general public only as the Government permits. It is an attack upon the freedom of the press in an effort to control and bring within governmental supervision the distribution of all domestic news from whatever source it may come or of whatever kind it may be.

It is these reasons, Mr. President, that have led me to analyze the mind of the President's chief adviser as indicated by the work of fiction and by the biography recently given to the public. They throw a flood of light upon the intentions of the administration and of its unofficial, irresponsible advisers; they indicate the goal for which both are bound, and become a material guide at this time as to the merits or demerits of measures presented in this body hereafter for taking over different enterprises in private life for alleged purely war purposes.

Several Senators on the minority side who sincerely believe in Government ownership of certain agencies—one of them the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]—have said in regard to taking over the telephones and telegraphs that it was well understood that there was no war emergency. While the Senator from California favors the Government ownership of certain public utilities, this process of taking over many things on war excuses has run to dangerous limits. It is only a question of time when all the insurance companies will be attacked in the same way and when their business will meet with Government competition, or be seized as other lines of private enterprise have; when every line of industrial effort will, by the same process, be taken by the Government and operated ostensibly for war purposes. It is to check this method of advance concealed by such reasons, the masked purpose of a general advance toward the universal ownership of all the instruments of production and distribution, as well as the instruments of communicating intelligence, that I enter my protest at this time. There will be nothing to tax or do, Mr. President, in the future. Five years more and there will be nothing from which an income tax can be collected or a private occupation obtained. The two books that I have analyzed, in my opinion, throw a flood of light upon the ultimate destination of this administration.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the numerals "$105,000," it is proposed to strike out "live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	McNary	Sherman
Benet	Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Culberson	Kellogg	Nugent	Sterling
Cummins	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Thomas
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Townsend
Fall	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Fernald	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh
Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell	Warren
France	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
Gore	McCumber	Shafroth	Wolcott
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on important business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I ask to have this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WARREN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the numerals "$105,000," it is proposed to strike out "live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, some of us are accustomed to straining at gnats and swallowing camels. We have appropriated some $20,000,000,000 and have provided for the raising of $24,000,000,000 as a war measure without a roll call, and yet we propose to strike out an item requested by the Department of Agriculture appropriating $100,000 for a given purpose.

This item has been discussed at some length. A justification for it is found on page 5 of the Estimate for Appropriations, 1919. Among other justifications is given the situation in the Southwest upon the great feeding and grazing ranges. I read from the Estimates of Appropriations as follows:

The situation in all the drought area from the Mexican border to the Canadian boundary is one which should receive close and persistent attention. If rains come in time to insure a crop in 1918, every effort should be made to plan a cropping system which will insure supplies of feed. * * * If rains do not come in time to insure ample pasturage during 1918, it will probably be necessary for the cattle owners in the Great Plains region, especially in Texas and other sections in the Southwest, to sell their cattle, which are being carried through the winter on borrowed money in the hope that pasture will be at hand when spring arrives.

The situation has grown so serious, Mr. President, that the War Finance Corporation has been compelled to offer some assistance to preserve the meat cattle, not only for the production of meat for the people of the United States now but that we may have the stock to draw upon in the future. The State of Texas through some of its accredited representatives has recently, as I happen to know, requested that an appropriation amounting to as much as $50,000,000 be made by Congress for the assistance of those who have lost practically everything which they have had during the present drought.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the understanding of the Senator from New Mexico that this item is intended to take care of the situation resulting from the extraordinary drought in the western section of the country?

Mr. FALL. It is my understanding that the $100,000 which is provided for here is for the payment of salaries of special observers, investigators, and assistants employed by the Department of Agriculture who are engaged in assisting the people down there to some extent to provide against losses such as have been incurred in the last year. The justification to which I was referring shows what this money is to be expended for. I was going further to call specific attention to one of the results of the work of just such men as these under former appropriations exactly such as this which have been made by Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I desire simply to say that the situation is one the gravity of which can not be overestimated, but it occurred to me that if an appropriation is made to meet the situation it ought to be expressed much more clearly than in the language employed in this bill.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is, of course, entirely correct in his statement; but the purpose of this appropriation, as I understand, is to pay the salaries of those who are engaged in exactly that character of investigation necessary to form a foundation upon which Congress may make the proper appropriations to relieve the conditions, and their particular work is along the line of assisting those who are living in the section of the country referred to, as I shall point out specifically, by attempting to find some relief from the conditions which those living there may work out for themselves.

I have some little familiarity personally with some of the work done by the agents of the department along this line. I have before me a report which should have been published, I think, long ago, upon some of the substitute feeds which are being developed, found growing upon the range, which even the cattlemen of that country did not know could be used as serviceable feed for starving cattle.

The report to which I refer is the Forsaling report, made by an agent of the department. Whether or not this particular agent is paid out of this particular appropriation I am unable to say. However, he is an agent of the department, paid out of some appropriation of that character.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. On Saturday the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] argued that this appropriation was for the purpose of teaching young farmers how to build silos.

Mr. FALL. I was reading, Mr. President, from page 5 of the estimates submitted by the department, the justification upon which they asked for this identical appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado what inconsistency there is between that statement and the other one?

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator from New Mexico will allow me, Mr. President, if an appropriation is made for the purpose of paying salaries it certainly is not made for the purpose of building silos. To me there is some inconsistency between the two ideas.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from New Mexico states that there is this suffering on the part of cattle and live stock in some localities, and that there must be means of obtaining sustenance, and so forth, in order to bring them through. It is all along the same line.

Mr. FALL. Exactly; it is all along the same line. The justification here refers to the construction of pit silos, and says, further:

If the pasture is not available these cattle may be thrown on the market. Those remaining in the Southwest are the best of the herds existing before the drought and represent a fine collection of beef-breeding animals. The department should be ready, if such a contingency arises, to throw a large force of men into that section and to develop the work done there last summer on an extensive scale with a view to save as many of these cattle as possible.

I may say that the conditions which were, if not anticipated, at least dreaded by the department, and which are referred to here, are exactly the conditions which have existed. We have in New Mexico, particularly in the southern part of it, among the best breeding ranges of the United States, and I think in some respects possibly the best cattle-breeding ranges in the United States. That is, the cattle require no shelter at all during the winter, and no winter feed in normal years. The grasses are not rich and strong, and they do not make beef cattle; but the pastures of Colorado and of Kansas and of the Northwest are replenished through the purchase of yearlings, seldom even 2-year-olds, from the great breeding ranges of west Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Mr. President, this section of the country is that portion of the Southwest formerly known as the Great American Desert. The people there are not engaged in farming. It is impossible for them to raise crops by cultivation except where they have the advantage of irrigation. The streams are very few and far between, and irrigation is only carried on upon a very small scale, in isolated localities, sometimes 40 or 50 acres; then a space of 100 miles where there will not be another cultivated portion of the country. The general range conditions in normal years will enable a cattle grower to support about one cow to 40 acres, upon an average of such range. We have had three years of drought. Cattle have died by the thousands. In the Pecos Valley in New Mexico one firm of hide buyers have bought 21,000 hides taken from the carcasses of starved animals this year alone. During my recent visit to my State I conferred with a great number of cattlemen; and the estimate placed by them upon the loss, largely in southern New Mexico, of cattle during this year alone, exclusive of the new calf crop, was 100,000 head, of a minimum value of $4,000,000. The loss to my knowledge would have been very much greater in southern New Mexico had it not been for the fact that the Government agents themselves, following and assisting in experiments made by the cattlemen, have worked out a feed which I will say as a cattleman myself I had not conceived the possibility of using.

We have great areas in New Mexico, west Texas, and Arizona covered with a species of yucca plant growing from 3 feet to 6 or 8 feet in height, the growth upon the land being as much as 150 tons per acre. This particular species of yucca, ordinarily known to us as the palmilla, has never been used or thought of being used by the cattlemen until within the last two or three years.

Another species growing upon the sides of the mountains has been used for a great many years, but this particular species has not been used. The department, through its agents, has been cooperating with the cattlemen themselves in developing a machine for using this yucca. Through such cooperation the cattlemen of New Mexico and Arizona have saved thousands of head of breeding cows this year.

First the attempt was made, I may say, three years ago to use this feed through cutting up the stalk of the yucca and siloing it; and the department suggested at that time the construction of pit and other silos for this purpose. The experiments carried out this last year upon what is known as the reserve in Dona Ana County, N. Mex., convinced the cattlemen and the department's agents that siloing was not necessary, but that the development of other machinery suitable for cutting up this particular plant was necessary. I may say to you, Mr. President and Senators, that I myself went first to the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts in New Mexico, where experiments are being carried on and have been carried on for three years, and are now culminating in the feeding of this yucca, together with cottonseed meal in a very small amount; and such experiments have resulted in establishing the fact that not only will the yucca save the lives of the cattle without any other feed, but that with a minimum of cottonseed cake fed with it cattle can be fattened upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if all this experimentation is not paid for out of appropriations for plant industry that are provided in other sections of the Agricultural bill?

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly a portion of it is, but, as I understand, such appropriations are made for specific purposes; and some portions of these very experiments undoubtedly are paid for out of such appropriations. However, other portions of the work are not so paid for, as I understand; and for that reason they have, as a justification for the request of this appropriation of $100,000, stated the conditions as they exist, and what it would be necessary to do. No appropriation of any kind whatsoever has been made to enable them to throw a large force of men into that country, as they have said should be done provided we had no rain this year.

Three million head of cattle either died or were moved out of west Texas last year owing to the drought. Up to May of this year the rains were exceedingly favorable, and it was supposed that those ranges would be restocked. Since May they have had no rain at all.

The experiments which are being carried on by the agents of the department are those such as I have mentioned with relation to the yucca, and others with relation to showing the cattlemen by actual experiment how it is possible to raise certain forage crops upon that desert area which they may use not only for grazing but as silage for cattle when it is needed. I happen to know that those experiments are being conducted, particularly in my State, through the cooperation of the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts with what is known as the reserve ranch, which is under the management of the department directly, and through the cooperation of men who are being paid under appropriations of exactly this character. I can not mention one of them who is receiving a specific amount out of this $100,000, but I do know that these people are all cooperating and are in thorough cooperation with the cattlemen of my portion of the country and of the great Southwest generally; and I can say very frankly that, in my judgment, the department is doing remarkable work, and doing work that is absolutely necessary.

The average range cattleman knows nothing about the raising of crops of any kind or character. We have proceeded along the lines of utilization of the open range where we have no pastures and no fences. This is peculiarly true of a great public-land State such as New Mexico, where we have remaining 27,000,000 acres of public domain, constituting, as I say, the great breeding area of the United States. The Congress of the United States has failed and refused, when opportunity has been offered from time to time, to enact proper legislation for the purpose of enabling the people there to utilize to the best advantage this great area of public land. The consequence is that, as from time immemorial, the cattlemen are continuing to use these lands, paying nothing to the United States Government, and simply obtaining title to the water upon the public lands. The result is that every cattleman overgrazes his range because if he undertakes to reserve it perhaps for a day in the future by not putting enough cattle upon it to eat it entirely off he knows that, being public domain, and he having no control over it and no title to it, any other cattleman or sheepman, seeing the grass growing thereupon, will move in on it and eat it off. The consequence is that there is an inducement for each man to overstock the range, to gamble, in other words, with the hope that a drought will not strike him or that he will make a fortune and sell out before the drought does strike him and the hard times come.

Recently a great deal of attention has been paid by the department to these conditions, and while the attempt which has been made has not yet crystallized, in my judgment, in a constructive form and in a proper form, and legislation has not been asked except requesting the Congress of the United States to adopt a lease law for the public domain, still experiments have been carried on and the Agricultural Department is now doing exactly that character of work which I hope will result in legislation being enacted by the Congress of the United States to relieve the conditions as they now exist.

But, Mr. President, we all know, of course—those of us from the West particularly, and those from any of the rural States—how important it is to keep up the cattle industry and the sheep industry in this country, particularly from the breeding range. The ranges that I speak of are the great source of supply for practically all the farms and pastures of the Northwest and the West. It is from these sources that you must replenish your cattle supply, and from which the world's cattle supply must be replenished after this war is over. We are suffering there to-day and losing hundreds of thousands of head of cattle. This is a small appropriation, and being, I think, properly used, some of it possibly not resulting very beneficially, but being used in good faith by the department in further investigations and for the instruction of the cattlemen themselves, who, as I say, heretofore have known nothing about any methods of conservation. This is the method in which this money is being used.

I happen to have had these matters come under my observation and to have known what these people are doing. I myself saw 2,000 head of cows that had been too poor to ship to Dakota, the range for which did not exist in southern New Mexico, where it was impossible to keep them alive upon the native ranges, where it was impossible to purchase cottonseed cake with which to keep them alive—because we are only allowed a limited amount under the rules and regulations now—I saw 2,000 head of cattle being fed day by day upon this yucca as the outcome of experiments made by the representatives of the Department of Agriculture in one portion or another of this region; and these cattle were strong, and the owner was expecting to ship them to Dakota, to the Indian reserve ranges, which are still being leased by cattlemen, within a month or six weeks. The cattle would have died except for these feeds. The use of the feed was brought about by cooperation of the agents of the Agricultural Department and the practical cattlemen themselves. This is the character of work which is being done, and I do not think this item should be stricken from the bill.

I referred a moment ago to the fact that the situation was so serious that the Secretary of the Treasury, cooperating with the Director of the Finance Corporation, was now adopting rules and regulations by which loans can be made to the cattlemen. Just let me trespass upon your time a moment to call your attention to the conditions existing in New Mexico.

The cattle loans have all been called by the banks. Over six months paper can not be rediscounted. Four millions of dollars of losses, as a minimum, have been incurred in the cattle business in New Mexico already. The State of New Mexico has "gone over the top" in every liberty loan, in every subscription to the Red Cross, in every subscription of any kind or character asked by the Government of the United States in carrying on this war. New Mexico has no munitions plants, has no war industries of any kind or character; and in the face of the greatest drought ever known, continuing for three years, and enormous losses of sheep and cattle, the people of New Mexico have responded as patriotically as the people of any other State in this Union to the call of the Government.

The banks have been compelled to carry the people for loans with which to purchase bonds. The people have mortgaged themselves to the banks. No Government deposits are placed in the banks of New Mexico. The banks can not come to the assistance of the cattlemen of New Mexico. They have not the money. Therefore, under representations made by various representatives of New Mexico, banking interests and other interests, as well as by the delegation here, the Finance Corporation have finally responded by agreeing that they would adopt rules and regulations by which the cattlemen might receive assistance. But, sir, that relief will extend only to the larger man. He must go, or be able to send some one and pay his expenses, to Dallas or to Kansas City to procure a loan. The man who wants twenty-five or thirty or forty or fifty or one hundred thousand dollars can afford to do that. The man who needs that amount can afford to pay the expenses involved.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if the drought to which he refers continues, or has it been broken now?

Mr. FALL. I am glad to say that it has been partially broken in some sections of the country. In west Texas it has not been broken to-day. In southern New Mexico it has been broken in the mountain regions. In northern New Mexico recently, when it was almost too late to make grass, it has been broken generally.

Mr. President, the point I was making was this: The big man can nearly always take care of himself. He can go to Kansas City or he can go to Dallas, pay his expenses and those of a lawyer, have an abstract of title presented, and comply with all the rules and regulations with reference to a loan. We are attempting to settle up our western country and our State with small cattlemen. We want population as well as prosperity in business. We want a cowman on every five or six thousand acres with two or three or four hundred head of cattle, enough cattle at least to enable him to provide something in the nature of a living for his family and an education for his children. Under the land laws as we have them to-day he can not so provide, but a homesteader in New Mexico taking up his homestead and attempting to make a living for his family by the cultivation of one, two, or three acres, or half an acre, through the use of water drawn from the bowels of the earth by a windmill, must have something to assist him, something to subsist upon, and he accumulates a few head of cattle. Dairying is impossible. You must feed dairy cows. They can not produce milk without it. We have not the feed for them. We can only raise the range stuff, and derive a living from the sale of the calves from those cattle.

Every cowman in New Mexico owning less than 500 head of cattle to-day, I think without exception, is in debt to his local bank. They have been compelled to buy cottonseed cake at $71 a ton, and where they buy less than a carload lot they have been compelled to pay $85 to $100 a ton for cottonseed cake which sold three years ago for $34 a ton delivered to them. They have been compelled to go to the banks to secure money with which to carry those purchases. They have been compelled to pay extortionate rates of interest and to secure the money on short-time notes. These men can not go to Kansas City nor to Dallas. They are the men who need relief from Congress through some special legislation.

I have had in mind, and have now in my desk, an amendment to this bill asking the Congress of the United States to appropriate a revolving fund of $5,000,000 for deposit in the banks of New Mexico, that it may be loaned to these people upon all their property as security, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, so that their necessities may be relieved, with the power of sale, allowing him upon the expiration of the note, if it is not paid, to take entire charge of the property and sell it out, so that the Government can not possibly lose anything if proper discretion is used in extending the credit.

Something must be done, Senators. Something is being done by the department in a small way in investigations and reports such as the Forsaling report upon this yucca, to which, being an illustration in point, I have called the attention of the Senate. The work of the Agricultural Department is not being advertised. The people of the United States, except those who come in contact with some particular phase of that work, do not know the magnificent work which is being done by the Agricultural Department. The food-conservation department is doing magnificent work, in my judgment. I am not one of those who have been found here in the Senate or out of it criticizing the work of Mr. Hoover. I think he has done magnificent and absolutely necessary work for the people of the United States; but his work has been along the line of conservation of foodstuffs and holding down the prices to the consumer where possible. Who has done anything whatsoever to assist the producer of foodstuffs? The Agricultural Department alone. There has been no more successful advertising propaganda ever known in the United States than that of the Food Administration. Its work has been magnificently advertised. The great work of the Agricultural Department receives no advertisement at all except through adverse criticism from time to time in this or the other body of the Congress of the United States.

There are valuable documents which should be in the hands of every cattleman and of every farmer in the United States lying in the vaults of the Agricultural Department, the people not knowing that they exist. This report—Forsaling's report; an exceedingly interesting one to all cattlemen in the Southwest—is not known except as it has been sent out by a few of us who have had it transcribed by typewriters and sent out to various portions of our southwestern country and secured its publication in the weekly or daily newspapers of our section.

Mr. President, I think that if it were possible for the Secretary of Agriculture to secure from the Congress of the United States any amount of money with which to advertise his work, and that of the department, and that of the agents of the department, the money would be most excellently spent and would tend very largely to increasing, as it is necessary to increase, the food production of this country. But, Mr. President, we hear criticisms of this character: I recall distinctly that on two or three occasions we have had here discussions as to the acceptance by the department of donated funds for the use of agents of the department—dollar-a-year men of the department—in all kinds of extension work, in every State of the Union, in investigating every character of insect life injurious to crops. In all work of this kind large funds have been placed at the disposal of the Department of Agriculture; and here in this body I have heard Senators whom I know to be absolutely sincere object to the acceptance by the department of funds applied exactly as the funds asked here to be appropriated are applied for special work from time to time. Upon the one hand we reject individual appropriations upon the theory that we should not use the "tainted money" of the Rockefeller or the Carnegie Foundation. Upon the other we criticize the department when it says, "We must have this necessary money to carry on our investigations," and we move to strike it out.

I sincerely believe that we do not give enough consideration to matters of this kind, and, as I said, Mr. President, it strikes me that those of us who vote without question, without roll calls, for hundreds of millions of dollars—$60,000,000 for housing, $50,000,000 more for housing, $100,000,000 more in a short time for housing—should not hesitate to grant the request of the department for $100,000 to enable them to carry on the good work which they have inaugurated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this appropriation is insisted upon for reasons which seem to me to be inconsistent. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has called attention to the very serious condition in his State resulting from an unprecedented drought, and has also dwelt upon the discovery of means of forage which until recently were not known to exist. Presumably these remarks were designed to support the contention that this particular appropriation is necessary for an inquiry into the means of cultivation of a plant which has been demonstrated to be edible and therefore which can be used for the maintenance of live stock upon the plains of New Mexico.

As far as the drought is concerned and its consequences, we all deplore it, but I am unable to perceive how the appropriation of $100,000 would go very far either toward the prevention of such a great loss as has occurred in the cattle industy or in experiments in determining the usefulness and nutriment of a plant whose usefulness and nutriment have already been determined.

The Senator called attention to the fact that the agricultural college in his own State has given attention to this subject and has developed the fact that a source of supply of forage for cattle hitherto unknown to exist exists in considerable quantities in his State, all of which, in my judgment, demonstrates one of two things, either that the purposes for which this appropriation is desired have already been accomplished or that it is too small to serve any good or useful purpose whatever.

Mr. President, I want to see, we all want to see, the live-stock industry promoted. I particularly am interested in anything that will develop what is known as the Great Plains region. I am unable to perceive how these little driblet appropriations can accomplish anything beyond the creation of half a dozen or more petty offices and paying salaries to those who hold them. The general appropriations which the Senator from North Dakota called attention to are or should be amply sufficient for purposes of this kind. The Bureau of Plants and Soils is fully equipped with such means as may be needed for the carrying out of experiments and the fulfillment of its functions. But notwithstanding that, every bill of this sort, whether it be the regular one or extraordinary bills like the present, can not come from the House to the Senate or go to the House from the Senate without being loaded with these small appropriations, which in the aggregate amount to millions and which can conserve no purpose outside of that covered by the general appropriations except, as I said, to give employment to men who become supernumeraries in the civil service and who once established always remain.

A very serious objection, Mr. President, independent of those which have been urged by myself at least to this and kindred appropriations, lies in the fact that once they enter an appropriation bill they are there forever. If we lived 100 years from now and our form of government did not change and our methods of appropriation were not radically altered we would still see these items, based upon no reason whatever except the fact that precedents have been set for them in the past, and men and women have become dependent upon them for a livelihood and therefore they should be continued.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator before taking his seat permit a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator, and I ask for information, if the bill which is now under consideration was not prepared before the general Agricultural appropriation bill which was passed in July was enacted into law?

Mr. THOMAS. The chairman of the committee can answer that question better than I can. I really do not know.

Mr. KING. The chairman of the committee was not in at the moment, but has now come into the Senate.

Mr. GORE. It was prepared after the Agricultural appropriation bill was passed through both Houses, but not before it went to the White House.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Utah will notice that it duplicates quite a number of appropriations carried in the regular bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. I will ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the bill now under consideration duplicates many items that are found in the regular appropriation bill, carrying more than $27,000,000, recently passed through this body?

Mr. GORE. I will say in answer to the question that a reading of the pending bill would lead one to that conclusion. I think an analysis of it, however, would not sustain the conclusion. The same items in terms are provided for, but work that has been under way for a number of years and provided for in the regular appropriation bill is to be expanded under the appropriations carried in this measure; that is, the existing work, the existing organization, is to be expanded to meet the expanded requirements of war. The same character of work which has been going forward in certain parts of the country heretofore is to be installed in different parts of the country where it has not been carried on heretofore.

So the bill seems to be a duplication, and even this bill seems to duplicate itself, but on analysis that is not the case. An appropriation for one item with respect to canning clubs and other clubs, which has been going forward under existing law and under previous appropriations, is to be expended in those localities, and the same sort of work is to be instituted in localities where it has not been previously carried forward. That gives the measure, I may say, a deceptive character. It seems to be duplicating even duplications, but I do not think that is the fact.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator takes his seat will he permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Were not the items carried in the bill which is now under consideration recommended by clerks and employees of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President, that every item in this bill as it came from the House, with one trifling exception of, I think, $5,000, was regularly estimated for by the department under the law and was transmitted, I understand, to the Speaker of the other House. The estimates are printed and are available, and the department undertakes to justify each appropriation carried in this bill and explains it in such a way that Senators will see duplications do not really occur.

Mr. KING. But each of the proposed appropriations has been recommended by some clerk or some bureau, the latter of which was seeking to extend its powers and to increase the number of employees who would operate under that bureau. Is not that true?

Mr. GORE. That would probably be the result. Whether that was the motive or not I could not say. I assume the head of the department called upon the heads of the bureaus for recommendations, and that certain estimates are based upon those recommendations. I understand that that is the process by which estimates are made.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Utah, that the particular appropriation under consideration now of $100,000 for live-stock production in the Great Plains region was recommended by the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and if the Senator will refer to page 9785 of the RECORD, he will there find the basis for the recommendation by the chief of that bureau. I do not think the Senator was in the Chamber when that communication was read from the desk. I had it read on Saturday. It shows the ground for this particular appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to call attention right now to what it does propose to do with this money?

Mr. KING. I shall yield for that purpose, and then I should like to ask another question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can do it very shortly from the letter which was received by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. This is what is stated in that communication:

> If the large crops of feeds which were produced there during the years of sufficient rainfall had been stored in silos, the drought which caused such losses during 1917 could probably have been borne without serious difficulty.

Then he goes on to state:

> As soon as a crop is assured, a strong campaign should be inaugurated for the construction of silos, especially the pit type, on every farm where the conditions are favorable.

So the Senator will see that the real purpose of this appropriation is to instruct the cattle raisers in the dry sections of the country and give them information which they, of course, never would receive except through the department, that if they would construct silos and raise corn and put that corn in silos in a year of plenty they would have something to feed during the next dry year. If that was something new that the western farmers never heard of before, and it is necessary to pay $100,000 to have them instructed, I would vote for the item.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is not an appropriation in any way for plant industry to show how to raise new kinds of plants and grasses; there are other appropriations for that purpose; but it is simply for the purpose of instructing those farmers when they do raise a crop, and they expect to raise a crop this year, how to build a silo, and to save their corn for next year, when there may be a drought.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Utah will allow me——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from North Dakota takes too narrow a view of the purpose of the appropriation when he says it is merely for the purpose of building silos in the Great Plains region. The Senator from North Dakota read but a small part of the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry. I just want to call attention to one or two sentences here that are very suggestive. He says:

> During the last year a careful study of the situation in the Great Plains region, which includes that portion of Montana east of the Rockies, indicated the desirability of placing the agriculture of that section, as far as possible, on a live-stock basis.

That is the object and the purpose of this appropriation. It is a great semiarid region, where there are apt to be failures in crops. Rightly used it will promote a great diversified industry there, and it will be stock raising combined with farming, thus making it a rich and prosperous country.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this fact: We are appropriating some $650,000 to $750,000 every year for farm-demonstration work, and the Senator from Utah votes for these appropriations. There is no objection to them. This is simply farm-demonstration work of a particular kind applicable to a particular region to meet particular conditions and particular needs, and on the same principle that I support the appropriation for farm-demonstration work, which, I think, is proving its value more and more as the years go by, I shall vote for this appropriation, because it is for that kind of work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Agricultural appropriation bill which was passed in July carried $4,079,588 for the Bureau of Animal Industry. It carried various other appropriations aggregating $27,875,353.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question? The Senator is referring to the appropriation that has already been made for the Bureau of Animal Industry. Is that appropriation so limited in its purpose as not to include the purposes for which the pending appropriations are made?

Mr. KING. I was about to call attention a little more specifically to the appropriations, and then the Senator will be able to determine, and he can determine better than I, whether the appropriations in the general Agricultural bill would be adequate to meet the items referred to in the bill now under consideration. But let me state first, before coming to the point that I had in mind, that of this amount of $4,079,588 appropriated for the Bureau of Animal Industry, $479,710 have been appropriated for the salaries of the officials connected with the bureau.

I might say in passing, Mr. President, that as these bureaus increase in power they increase materially in the number of the employees within the bureau, and it seems as if their activities are largely devoted to finding ways and means by which they can increase the number of employees and augment the salaries which they receive. There are some people who are determined that our Government shall be a bureaucracy whether the people will or not.

For inspection and quarantine work, including the necessary expenses for the eradication of scab in sheep and cattle, inspection of southern cattle, supervision of transportation of live stock, and so forth, $503,662 are carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill passed in July of this year.

Then for the investigation of the disease of tuberculosis of animals and other diseases $500,000 are carried in the appropriation bill last referred to.

For expenses in the eradication of southern cattle ticks $750,000 are provided in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

For expenses of investigating and conducting experiments in the dairy industry $364,390 have been appropriated.

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry, for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, and so forth, $308,680.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I likewise am curious, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] evidently is, to ascertain whether there is a duplication so far as the item under consideration is concerned. Could the Senator direct our attention to any provision of the larger appropriation bill, if that is the proper designation, which would include the item now under consideration?

Mr. KING. In reply I will state to my friend from Montana that as I understand the item now under consideration it provides $100,000 for experimentation in the feeding of live stock upon the Great Plains.

Mr. WALSH. I do not understand so. The item is $100,000 "to promote the production of live stock." Let me remark that the item to which the Senator has just called our attention in the original bill for the conduct of experimentations in feeding might seem at first blush to cover the same subject, but obviously it does not. That item is undoubtedly intended to cover tests made to determine the particular value of particular kinds of feed. Certain fodders are particularly adapted to young and growing animals. Certain other fodders are particularly adapted for fattening purposes. The item to which the Senator has called our attention in the original bill undoubtedly refers to experimentations in determining the relative values of different kinds of fodders for different animals of different ages. Now, under the estimate given us in connection with the item under consideration it is to be devoted to an entirely different purpose. I should not like to vote for this item in the bill under consideration if the matter is already covered, but if it is not it does occur to me that there is much merit in the item we are now considering.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask both Senators why they should speculate over the question as to how this money is to be expended when the author of the item itself directly states in the statement that was given by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] exactly how it is to be expended and for what particular purpose.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad if the Senator from North Dakota will call my attention to that.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the entire recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. KING. I have yielded to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from South Dakota that I do not want the Senator from South Dakota to assume that in the portion that I read of this letter to him I omitted anything essential. The Senator from South Dakota stated that I did not read it all, and therefore he read the first part of it, which reads:

During the last year a careful study of the situation in the Great Plains region, which includes that portion of Montana east of the Rockies, indicated the desirability of placing the agriculture of that section, as far as possible, on a live-stock basis.

He seems to think that that is a very broad proposition and they can consider almost anything under it, but if he will go a little further down he will see that it reads:

The only way in which this can be satisfactorily done—

I want to repeat—

The only way in which this can be satisfactorily done is to utilize silos on an extensive scale and put up such roughage as can be secured.

Then he goes on. I did leave out one other thing for which he said it was to be used, and this is on page 9785 of the RECORD:

The 1919 food-production act as it passed the House contained an item for $100,000—

This appropriation of $100,000 is the one he is referring to—with which the bureau intends—

With this $100,000—

with which the bureau intends to employ 30 beef-cattle specialists to assist farmers and cattlemen in conserving all good breeding cows and to stimulate and emphasize the necessity of breeding for a maximum calf crop and preparing permanent pastures, building silos, and preserving all available foodstuffs in the Great Plains region.

So this is to pay for 30 beef experts who are to be sent out to tell the cattle raisers of Montana and North Dakota how to raise beef cattle by conserving the best character of cows. I do not believe——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a minute. I do not believe there is a stock raiser in that whole section who does not understand what particular breed of cattle is best for dairy purposes and what particular breed is best for a beef supply. I do not believe it is necessary to give these 30 men $100,000 to tell those stock raisers how to select their particular breeding cows to raise their calf crop for the next year.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to correct a statement made by the Senator from North Dakota, if I am not in error myself. He said this is to teach cattle raisers how to raise cattle. I do not so understand it at all. I understand that it is to teach those who are not cattle raisers the advantage of raising cattle and the advantage of using silos for the utilization of roughage of various kinds that can be grown at little expense.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just exactly what I read.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; because this is what I read:

With which the bureau intends to employ 30 beef-cattle specialists to assist farmers and cattlemen in conserving all good breeding cows.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. WARREN. Is not the Senator mistaken in thinking that it refers to the appropriation of $105,000 for beef cattle?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. WALSH. The idea is that the people out there are very largely, if not exclusively, devoted to raising grain. They do not know anything about cattle raising. Many of them know very little about grain raising, and we have taken care of that. We have a farm-extension service and many experts to teach them all about grain raising, dry farming, and all that kind of thing, and it has been a source of enlightenment upon that matter. But it is recognized that the ultimate permanent prosperity of the country depends upon its becoming to a very large extent a live-stock country, and it is to teach those people.

Mr. McCUMBER. The small farmer knows that; but if he has not got the credit to buy the stock and to raise it and to hold it for three years before he can begin to realize on it, all that information will be wasted. He probably knows the value of cattle now, and if he had the money to invest in buying the stock he undoubtedly would do it. Then he would know how to conserve it as well as these beef specialists.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator now precipitates an entirely different question, as to how to finance a thing when he does know.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word. I am glad that the Senator from North Dakota has been led to read practically the entire recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry. He has disclosed by reading it that the recommendation is not wholly for the purpose of teaching farmers how to build silos. The statement read shows the activities of the Bureau of Animal Industry are or will be many, certainly in regard to the raising of live stock in the Great Plains region, where there is a special field for the instruction of farmers and stock growers.

Referring to what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has just said, the farmers went to the western part of my State, west of the Missouri River, and to large areas in his State, with the idea of being grain-growing farmers, with the idea of producing wheat largely, thinking, perhaps, they would be successful in producing wheat year after year in that largely semiarid region; but they have not been successful. Anyone who understands climatic conditions the country over can readily see why they can not succeed by devoting their energies to the growing of wheat year after year; but with the diversification of their interests there, in grain growing and stock raising, as I said a moment ago, it will become a very rich and prosperous country. The idea of this particular appropriation is to assist in demonstrating to the farmers of that region the one great and important fact that there are the facilities, there is the climate, and there is the soil, and there are the grasses, which permit this diversification. Its purpose is to teach them how they may best utilize the facilities they have and adapt them to the one great end of making that region a very productive country.

To follow out the argument of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], Mr. President, we should abolish at once at least that much of the Department of Agriculture, namely, the Bureau of Animal Industry, for each and every appropriation made here or in the annual Agricultural appropriation bill for the Bureau of Animal Industry is for something which, according to the Senator from North Dakota, the farmer himself might do or manage; and so we should do away with it all. This is simply an extension of a piece of work which we have for years regarded as most valuable—farm-demonstration work. Why teach the farmer anything about the growing of wheat or the growing of oats or the growing of corn anywhere else within the United States? Yet we have the farm agents from the Department of Agriculture in nearly all the counties of the Middle West—the great agricultural region of the country—and the farmers now would not dispense with their aid and the valuable suggestions they are able to give in regard to grain or stock raising or in regard even to the work of home economics. The Great Plains region is a field where that kind of work is needed more than it is needed in Illinois or in Iowa or in eastern South Dakota. If there is an appropriation in this bill that is meritorious it is this appropriation of $100,000. It will provide the means to instruct and help the farmer and homesteader in bringing about that diversity of industry which will insure another rich and prosperous section of our country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment the adoption of which I move.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the original amendment offered by myself covered a number of items. The amendment was divided at the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. So my amendment is not as yet disposed of.

Mr. GORE. Very well. I had overlooked that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Martin	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Kellogg	New	Sterling
Culberson	Kendrick	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Nugent	Thomas
Fall	King	Overman	Townsend
Fernald	Kirby	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Poindexter	Walsh
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Warren
Gore	Lodge	Robinson	Willey
Hale	McCumber	Shafroth	Wolcott
Henderson	McKellar	Sheppard
Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Simmons

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BENET] was compelled to leave the Chamber just a moment ago on public business. He asked me to make this announcement and that it stand for the day.

Mr. PITTMAN. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] asked me to announce that he was necessarily absent on account of official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to reserve the right to renew the motion to strike out the words "live-stock production in the Great Plains region, $100,000," when the bill comes into the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is only necessary to reserve the right of a separate vote in the Senate when an amendment has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, after the figures "$100,000," it is proposed to strike out "production of pork, $150,000."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of sickness in his family. I am paired with that Senator during his absence and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX. I inquire if the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. I withhold my vote, having a pair with that Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted under a misapprehension. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, and I therefore ask to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PENROSE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea." I ask that this announcement of my pair and its transfer stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Borah	King	Martin	Smoot
Brandegee	Kirby	Nelson	Thomas
Cummins	Lenroot	Overman	Townsend
Johnson, Cal.	Lodge	Penrose	Trammell
Kellogg	McCumber	Pomerene	Wolcott
Kenyon	McKellar	Simmons

NAYS—27.

Bankhead	Henderson	Pittman	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fall	Kendrick	Robinson	Walsh
Fernald	McNary	Shafroth	Warren
France	New	Sheppard	Watson
Gore	Norris	Smith, S. C.	Willey
Hale	Nugent	Sterling

NOT VOTING—44.

Ashurst	Gerry	La Follette	Shields
Baird	Goff	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Gronna	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Benet	Guion	Myers	Smith, Md.
Calder	Harding	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Page	Swanson
Colt	Hitchcock	Phelan	Thompson
Culberson	Hollis	Ransdell	Underwood
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Saulsbury	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Sherman	Williams

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, does that complete the amendments offered by the Senator from Iowa?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not complete the amendments of the Senator from Iowa. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 3, afer the figures "$150,000," it is proposed to strike out:

Production of poultry, $129,600.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I make the same announcement concerning my pair as I did awhile ago, and withhold my vote. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the same announcment as to my pair I made a moment ago, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on important business. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Borah	Kenyon	Martin	Simmons
Brandegee	King	Nelson	Smoot
Cummins	Lodge	Overman	Thomas
Johnson, Cal.	McCumber	Penrose	Townsend
Kellogg	McKellar	Pomerene	Wolcott

NAYS—28.

Ashurst	Henderson	Nugent	Sterling
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Sutherland
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Fall	Lenroot	Robinson	Vardaman
France	McNary	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	New	Sheppard	Watson
Hale	Norris	Smith, S. C.	Wilfley

NOT VOTING—46.

Baird	Goff	Lewis	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Gronna	McLean	Smith, Md.
Benet	Guion	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Harding	Owen	Swanson
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Page	Thompson
Colt	Hitchcock	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Hollis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Warren
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Saulsbury	Weeks
Fletcher	Kendrick	Sherman	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Shields
Gerry	La Follette	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 3 and 4, it is proposed to strike out "production of sheep, $60,000."

Mr. THOMAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I have heretofore made, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to repeat the announcement I made awhile ago as to my colleague. I ask that the announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as announced in the preceding vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Borah	Kenyon	Martin	Smoot
Brandegee	King	Nelson	Thomas
Cummins	Lodge	Overman	Townsend
Johnson, Cal.	McCumber	Penrose	Wolcott
Kellogg	McKellar	Pomerene

NAYS—29.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fall	Kirby	Robinson	Walsh
France	Lenroot	Shafroth	Watson
Gerry	McNary	Sheppard	Wilfley
Gore	New	Smith, S. C.
Hale	Norris	Sterling
Henderson	Nugent	Sutherland

NOT VOTING—46.

Baird	Calder	Dillingham	Goff
Bankhead	Chamberlain	Fernald	Gronna
Beckham	Colt	Fletcher	Guion
Benet	Culberson	Frelinghuysen	Harding
Hardwick	McLean	Sherman	Thompson
Hitchcock	Myers	Shields	Underwood
Hollis	Owen	Simmons	Wadsworth
Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Knox	Ransdell	Smith, Md.	Williams
La Follette	Reed	Smith, Mich.
Lewis	Saulsbury	Swanson

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment proposed is to strike out, on page 3, lines 4 and 5, the following:

Making cottage cheese on the farm, $52,950.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays on the cheese.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I rose to withdraw the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. I will renew the amendment if the Senator withdraws it.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me, in view of the votes on the other amendments, that it might as well be withdrawn.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, when I first came to the Senate I had the impression that nearly all of the appropriations made in this general way were wasteful. It so happened that I was appointed a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I attended the hearings that were had upon such items as were presented by the Agriculture Department. I gave close attention to them, and I came to the conclusion that nearly every one of them possessed great merit.

Great ridicule has been made over the proposition of appropriating money under this head:

Making cottage cheese on the farm, $52,950.

I turned to the hearings, therefore, to see what there was to sustain that appropriation. I want to read a few sentences from the hearings, and see whether every Senator will not agree that great good is being done to increase food products by the Agricultural Department along this line.

I read from page 31 of the hearings:

Mr. RAWL. One hundred pounds of milk will produce about 15 pounds of cottage cheese. When fed to hogs judiciously it will make something like 4.8 pounds of meat. Cottage cheese has more protein in it than meat, but it has not so much fat, so that we consider them approximately the same in food value. There is, then, more than three times as much human food in the cottage cheese as in the pork which may be produced from a similar quantity of milk.

* * * * * * *

It is estimated that, with the proper utilization of the skim milk and buttermilk obtained incident to the manufacture of creamery butter, it will be possible to add annually millions of pounds of good food to supply the Nation in the form of cottage cheese. These by-products—skim milk and buttermilk—could also be used in the manufacture of condensed skim milk, a wholesome and nutritious food, the demand for which is increasing, as well as in the manufacture of casein, which is now very useful in the arts and for war purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, whose statement is this?

Mr SHAFROTH. This statement is made by Mr. Rawl, who is the Chief of the Dairy Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry:

We have secured the services of 25 experienced creamery men for a period of four months for the purpose of instructing creamery operators as to the utilization of skim milk and buttermilk by manufacturing cottage cheese and other products.

Here the problem is a commercial one and involves the assembling of the skim milk in the factories and manufacturing it commercially and putting it on the market.

Last summer we tried that out somewhat experimentally. A small force of 10 men was employed during the latter part of the season to go among the creameries where there was or could be had a supply of skim milk.

These 10 men were able to induce 58 factories to undertake this work. These factories operated for an average period of 78 days during the time that this work was in progress.

During these 78 days those 58 factories manufactured over 12,000,000 pounds of skim milk into slightly over 2,000,000 pounds of cottage cheese. None of these factories was making the product before we took it up with them. This record shows what was done during that period of 78 days.

Most of these factories no doubt have continued it.

There is another way of using this skim milk, and that is to condense it. Condensed skim milk is being used extensively in various ways. It is somewhat more difficult to conserve skim milk in the form of condensed milk, because it requires more equipment and more skill. But we were able to induce several factories to undertake that work, and during an average period of 78 days—the period this work was in progress—they utilized 7,000,000 pounds of skim milk in that way. We were able to get two factories to utilize the whey, and they saved half a million pounds of whey.

The aggregate result of this factory work for that period, which cost the department $9,442, was a saving of more than 20,000,000 pounds of skim milk for use as human food. This was manufactured into what would be the equivalent of 3,217,000 pounds of cottage cheese, and that would be equivalent to a similar amount of meat.

If this milk had been fed it would not have produced over 1,000,000 pounds of pork at the outside, so that by conserving it and using the milk as human food we are able to save 2,000,000 pounds more of food than if it had been fed to live stock. The total cost of that was $9,442.

Therefore for each dollar spent we were able to conserve as human food 342 pounds of cottage cheese. That is the result of what was done last fall, the production of 342 pounds of good food for every dollar spent. On that basis, therefore, we asked for more funds, and this spring that work was greatly enlarged by putting on 25 men to go out into the factories. These men are experienced creamery men, and they, too, are working in cooperation with the extension departments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Was that made on the farm?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was produced as a fit food for human beings, which was the equivalent of 3,200,000 pounds of meat. Now, do you tell me that no good is produced by these appropriations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was all made, according to the Senator's own statement, in factories. I wish the Senator would tell us how to make it on the farm.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President, we know that there is waste on the farm, and we know that farmers feed skimmed milk to animals, and that milk fed to animals is not worth a third of what it is worth when it is manufactured into cottage cheese. We know also that this milk will not even be conserved on the farm unless these factories are interested sufficiently to buy the milk. This was merely an experiment to the extent of $9.442. Is it possible that when we save 3,000,000 pounds of the equivalent of meat we can not say that the action of the Agricultural Department has been good, even in this so-called ridiculously absurd item, cottage cheese?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] said that this experiment was made in the factories. That is true; but the purpose of this appropriation is to make the experiments on the farm, and to save this food to the farmer.

I really agree with the Senator that there is scarcely an item in this bill that has not behind it a necessary and a useful purpose. I feel that larger returns than from many Government activities will come from the money invested by the General Government in these activities of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. All these items, I assume, are made from milk. Does the Senator believe that because of that we should milk the Treasury?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, Mr. President; they are for the purpose of making human food from milk that ordinarily is half wasted and the rest of which is fed to animals, where it does not either fatten or otherwise build up the animal. For that reason it seems to me that with an enlargement to $52,000 of this appropriation the Agricultural Department can accomplish wonders in the production of good, wholesome food. Food which is the equivalent of meat releases a corresponding amount of meat for shipment to our soldiers.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in further answer to the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], which I think was very pertinent, I should like to say that the Department of Agriculture, through the agricultural and mechanical colleges of the several States, and through other organizations in the several States, have perfected a pretty complete organization in a great many States, if not in all the States. They have organized women's clubs, making an effort to carry them down to the township and even to the school district. They have secured the enlistment of thousands of women, agreeing to follow their rules and directions with respect to making cottage cheese; they have introduced the iceless refrigerator; and the same thing applies to the poultry club, an item dealt with a moment ago. It was my pleasure to attend a meeting of these State superintendents—most of them, I think, are women—and I heard their discussion here last fall; and the work that is being accomplished undoubtedly justifies and compensates for this appropriation.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I was so convinced by the votes on these other portions of my amendment that the Senate is thoroughly committed to them as war propositions that I rose for the purpose of withdrawing this part of my amendment at the time the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] took the floor. I am so further convinced by his remarks upon the subject that I think I should withdraw this part of the amendment. It is apparent that cottage cheese is a great necessity, both for peace, as he delineates it, and for war. From his remarks it is quite apparent that there will be no danger of any trouble in this country for lack of food if we properly develop the cottage-cheese industry, and that when everything else is destroyed we will still have cottage cheese.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that we had better have an amendment here forcing the people to eat cottage cheese after we get it manufactured?

Mr. KENYON. I am not prepared to answer that question. Likewise this cottage-cheese item must be a very important item for the war. If we run out of ammunition, we may possibly be able to use cottage cheese; or if prisoners throw up their hands and cry "Kamerad" we can meet them with the charge of "schmierkase," or cottage cheese.

The ridiculousness of the whole thing is so apparent that I am not willing to waste the time of the Senate by a record vote on the subject. As the Senate has already voted on these other items, and it is perfectly impossible to strike anything out of this bill in the way of an appropriation, I ask to be permitted to withdraw that part of my amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I renew the motion to strike it out, Mr. President.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Colorado renews the motion to strike out the item?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. That is what I was about to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. WATSON and Mr. SMOOT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as announced on the preceding roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE. I have already announced the transfer of my pair, and I will let that announcement stand for the day. On this question I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not make the announcement of the transfer on this occasion, but I have made it before; and I wish that announcement of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] to stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. Making the same announcement as the last time, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the negative). I make the same announcement of pairs as on the previous roll call, and will let my vote stand. I ask to have this announcement stand for the day.

I have also been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Smoot
Bankhead	Kendrick	Nelson	Thomas
Borah	Kenyon	New	Townsend
Brandegee	King	Norris	Walsh

Gronna	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. THOMAS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That the sum of $150,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used for the temporary relief of farmers in the drought-stricken section of the country engaged in the production of staple agricultural products, including live stock suitable for human food.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance out of said sum to banks situated in the drought-stricken section of the country, and which have loaned to farmers engaged in the production of staple agricultural products money at a rate of interest not in excess of the prevailing legal rate and taken as security therefor United States bonds, commonly known as liberty bonds, or other securities which may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, an amount not exceeding the amount of such bonds or securities at a rate of interest to be fixed by said Secretary, taking the obligation of the bank for the payment of such advances in addition to the securities held by such bank.

All such advances shall be made payable on or before November 1, 1919, and when collected shall be covered into the Treasury and become a part of the general fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary and proper rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section and shall report to Congress at its regular annual session in December, 1919, as to his action in pursuance hereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (No. 51) authorizing the printing of 25,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, together with the report thereon, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF ALIENS.

Mr. GORE. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) authorizing the admission to the United States of aliens who are refugees from conditions created by the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Concurrent resolution 51.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed 25,000 copies of H. R. 12863, entitled "A bill to provide revenue, and for other purposes," together with the report numbered 767 upon the same, as a House document, 2,000 copies to go to the document room of the House of Representatives, 21,750 copies to the folding room of the House of Representatives, and 1,250 copies to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that there be printed 10,000 copies as a Senate document for the use of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 3, 1918.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in Heaven, we appeal to Thee in all fervency of prayer for a wisdom that shall open the eyes of the world to truth, with strength, courage, and fortitude to pursue it; a love so deep, so broad, that it shall unite all mankind in the ties of brotherhood and establish an everlasting peace.

Less than this we could not pray for. More than this we do not need. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed by unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, that morning business be dispensed with, and the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the proceedings of the day consist of memorial addresses on the life and character of the late FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, a Senator from the State of Nevada; that at the conclusion thereof the Senate shall adjourn, and that the Secretary notify the House thereof.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 3, after the word "located," insert a comma and add the following: "and if the proposed project is to be located in any boundary stream or water that the applicant has secured the consent of Congress."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to speak on the amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, Niagara at the present time, under treaty with Great Britain, has 20,000 cubic feet of water per second diverted for power purposes. Efficiency at Niagara Falls would mean that that water would create 400,000 horsepower, but the water at Niagara has not been developed efficiently, and we have only 275,000 horsepower developed there.

As soon as the present Congress convened the Secretary of War, knowing that munitions of war were being made at Niagara, realizing the importance of the power there, realizing its necessity to the war, sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee a bill, which was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], by which efficiency would be created at Niagara, by which we would develop the full 400,000 horsepower. That bill has been considered by the Foreign Affairs Committee for a long time, but that committee apparently is no nearer action to-day than it was when the bill was first presented. What has been the result? The Secretary of War has gone to those who were to develop Niagara efficiency and has said to them that he believes that Congress, recognizing the necessity of the munitions of war which are being made at Niagara, would beyond question pass a bill, and so he asked the men who had this matter in charge to take the chance of losing their money and start the work of development so that that additional 125,000 horsepower could be created. Those gentlemen said, "We will spend half a million dollars at our own risk," and they have spent that amount of money; but still the work is far from being finished. It is a matter of millions, not of hundreds of thousands, of dollars, and it is absolutely necessary to the prosecution of the war that that increased efficiency should be had at the earliest possible moment. The question here is simply this, whether, owing to the fact that when the rule was brought in boundary streams were excluded, we should now in terms exclude Niagara out of courtesy to the Foreign Affairs Committee, and that is the only question. That question can properly be answered by asking another: Is it more important that we should pay the courtesy to a committee than it is to create this additional water power which is so badly needed in the prosecution of this war?

On Monday I addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, which I will read to the committee. I said:

SEPTEMBER 2, 1918.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: 1. What, which is important to the prosecution of the war, is being manufactured by power derived from the water diverted from the Niagara River—stating the percentages produced there of the whole amounts made in this country?

2. Is it important to the prosecution of the war that the power produced there be increased as far as possible—that the production be made efficient at the earliest moment this can be accomplished; and if so, why?

3. Is legislation necessary, such as, for instance, inclusion of the Niagara River in the general water-power bill now under consideration by the House of Representatives or the bill now under consideration by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, before the power plants at Niagara can be made efficient?

4. How important is it to the prosecution of the war that enabling legislation be had without delay so that the full efficiency of the power at Niagara may be developed?

5. I ask these questions because the general water-power bill, as it now stands, is broad enough in its terms to include Niagara, and the question has been raised whether it should be excluded. Thanking you for advising me promptly, as the consideration of the bill will be resumed Tuesday and the question whether Niagara shall continue subject to it or be excluded will be determined then, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, M. C.

Now, this morning just after the Journal had been read the answer of the Secretary of War was placed in my hands, and, although I have not had any opportunity to do more than simply to glance at it for less than one minute, I am going to ask the Clerk to read this letter in full; but first I am going to call the attention of the House to some specific things.

Stated in percentages, the following table shows the extent to which Niagara Falls power enters into our output of the products named:

Aluminum, 30 to 35 per cent.

Ferrosilicon, 80 to 85 per cent.

I would say that ferrosilicon, as probably is known to almost all of you, but a few of you may not know, enters into the manufacture of steel, and 70 per cent of the steel made in this country could not be made at all except by the use of ferrosilicon.

Eighty to eighty-five per cent of that absolutely necessary product is made by Niagara Falls power.

Phosphorus, 100 per cent.

Silicon, 100 per cent.

Artificial abrasives, 100 per cent.

Artificial abrasives go into all kinds of products, practically everything that helps to wage this war.

Chlorine, 75 per cent.

Electrodes, 70 per cent.

Now, without having read it before I am going to read a paragraph which seems to answer my question, as I glanced at it hurriedly, as to the necessity of legislation being had immediately:

Unless legislation is had promptly certain extensions and improvements, now under way at Niagara Falls, which were undertaken at the specific request of this department and therefore with its deliberate approval, may be suspended for lack of ability to raise the needed money. These improvements are based upon plans approved by this department; they involve the expenditure of nearly $5,000,000, and their completion will add about 60,000 horsepower to the available supply. The interests engaged in this work have found it unexpectedly expensive, and they inform me that unless permanent legislation is soon completed they may be forced to suspend work by the exhaustion of their funds and by their inability to obtain money from the banks, which are averse to lending money on property whose legal status is doubtful.

Gentlemen, that shows in a general way the situation at Niagara, and the question presented here is simply this question, whether it is more important that this committee of the House should pay deference to the Foreign Affairs Committee by waiting for it at some future time, some uncertain time, some time which will be in the regular session of December, some time in the dim distant future, some time to be reckoned having in mind the fact that the Foreign Affairs Committee have been trying to pass a bill for eight or nine years—the question is whether, with that history of the past, with, as I understand it, the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that there is no intention of taking up the bill until December, when all these projects are needed and necessary from day to day for the successful progress of the war, this committee shall wait for the Committee on Foreign Affairs. As I understand it, the Committee on Foreign Affairs is not solicitous about this matter; they have never loved the bill, they have never hugged jurisdiction, and never insisted that the bill be left for them.

It has been urged that 50,000 tourists visit the rapids of the St. Lawrence annually. Are the rights of 50,000 tourists greater than the rights of 120,000,000 Americans? Are they to be superior to the prosecution of this war? Why, there is no one who believes that navigation should not be made safe in the St. Lawrence; no one who doubts for one moment that the great power of the St. Lawrence should be at once utilized.

It is said that the Aluminum Co. of America, a great corporation, is about to develop this power on the St. Lawrence. I do not know whether that is so or whether it is not so. I do know that one of the things most needed in the prosecution of the war is aluminum, and if the Aluminum Co. of America will give it to us, in God's name let them make all they can because the War Department is at its wit's end to get aluminum. It has taken it from all the industries and devoted it to the war. Why should we oppose the further production of aluminum?

The gentleman from western New York [Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH] is a member of the committee. I am unable to state so reliably, but I am told that Mr. SMITH is in favor of this bill remaining as it is.

Now, I am going to ask that this letter be read in full. It is in answer to specific questions. I am going to ask that it be read in full so that you may have in detail before you the reasons which actuate the War Department in asking that this bill be passed in terms broad enough to include, as it does at the present time, Niagara.

I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read this letter at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 3, 1918.

Hon. S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of September 1, I would say that Niagara Falls power is used not only at Niagara Falls, N. Y., but at Buffalo, Rochester, and throughout the western part of that State. This is one of the most important industrial regions of the country, in which are located factories for the production of a very wide variety of war materials.

While many of these factories are, as stated, engaged in making such war materials as guns, shells, aeroplanes, aeroplane engines, motor trucks, and other things whose war use is obvious, the matter of power supply to such industries is of less relative importance than is the case with the electric furnace and electrochemical industries, in which cheap and dependable power is a matter of the highest consequence. It is, however, a fact that cheap and dependable power is an advantage to all industries, and while labor is a more important element in making such products as are named in the opening part of this paragraph than it is in the operation of the electric furnace or of electrolytic cells, for example, still all industry thrives most where, other circumstances being equal, power is plentiful and cheap.

There are some industries, however, in which the cost of power enters as largely into that of the finished product as to cause their existence to depend upon the availability of relatively cheap power, and most of them, being continuous processes, require also an unfailing supply of continuous power.

The latter class of industries include such products as aluminum, ferrosilicon and other ferro alloys, artificial abrasives, chlorine and the sodium compounds resulting from the electrolytic decomposition of common salt, phosphorus, high-grade steel, artificial graphite, silicon, and the carbon electrodes needed in all electric furnaces. Such industries as these have become possible in this country mainly because of the cheapness, dependability, and large quantity of power to be had at or near Niagara Falls. As a result Niagara Falls itself is the center of the electrochemical industries of the country, and in a general way it may be said that the larger part of the country's output of electrochemicals is made from Niagara Falls power. The aluminum industry originated there and has since been developed at two other localities in the United States. The manufacture of phosphorus, artificial abrasives, graphite, and silicon is carried on nowhere else in the United States, while by far the larger part of the ferrosilicon and other ferro alloys, chlorine, and electrodes made in this country are also dependent upon the use of Niagara Falls power.

Stated as percentages, the following table shows the extent to which Niagara Falls power enters into our output of the products named:

	Per cent.
Aluminum	30–35
Ferrosilicon	80–85
Phosphorus	100
Silicon	100
Artificial abrasives	100
Chlorine	75
Electrodes	70

It seems scarcely necessary to dwell upon the necessity and desirability of increasing to the utmost the amount of water power generated in the United States. Our fuel situation is well known, as are the difficulties caused to our railroads by the demand for cars and engines for hauling coal, the largest single item of freight on our railroads. Water power developed and available would be useful almost regardless of its location, but in no other place in our country is water power available in such quantity and excellence as at Niagara Falls and at the same time so close to a large and important center of skilled industry. With the best boilers and machinery a continuous horsepower generated from steam would require 6 to 8 tons of coal annually, so that the water power now developed and in use at Niagara Falls saves from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 tons of coal each year, while at the same time it makes possible the existence of some industries which, but for this power, could never have raised their heads against foreign competition. It is of the highest importance to the prosecution of the war that we increase to the utmost and at the earliest possible moment the amount of water power developed at Niagara Falls. This is shown by the fact that a careful investigation at Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and in that general vicinity last spring showed an unfilled power demand of about 135,000 horsepower, which was expected to grow to 200,000 horsepower early in 1919. Since then our Army program has been increased so that in place of 1,500,000 men we expect to maintain 4,000,000 men in France. This change will necessitate a proportionate increase in large guns, shells, small arms, ammunition, and everything that goes to make up the equipment of troops, and, unless sources of additional power are developed, we may be unable to supply these increased needs. It is to my mind, therefore, imperative that all possible additional power shall be developed at Niagara Falls, where of all places in this country it can most economically and quickly be done. Any new development at Niagara Falls should, of course, be made with the highest possible efficiency so that the maximum amount of power may be developed from the volume of water diverted.

To permit further development of power at Niagara Falls, and indeed to enable the present power companies to improve their facilities, legislation is necessary. The two companies now developing power at Niagara Falls were in existence before the beginning of the public discussions that led to the passage of the Burton Act, and since that time they have operated under revocable permits or through the mere tolerance of this department. Their status has never been definitely settled, and this involves some uncertainty and hesitation when further investments in their business become necessary. In addition the diversion authorized by our treaty with Great Britain is not fully used, and legislation should be had to permit the efficient development of the power pertaining to the unused portion as well as to enable such additional investments to be safely made as are necessary to keep the efficiencies of the two existing power plants abreast of the progress of the art. As water-power development at Niagara Falls differs in no material respect except quantity and continuity from water power developed elsewhere, I believe that sound public policy should prescribe a single law and a uniform procedure to govern the handling of the problem, and that the general water-power bill now under consideration by your House should, if necessary, be amended so as clearly to include jurisdiction over Niagara Falls. If this can not be done, then the bill pending before your Foreign Affairs Committee should be passed at the earliest possible moment. I might add, however, that once international agreement is made to indicate the extent to which both Canada and the United States may go in developing power from our boundary waters, there appears to be no other circumstance connected with the development of power from these boundary streams that calls for special treatment or legislation.

Unless legislation is had promptly, certain extensions and improvements now under way at Niagara Falls, which were undertaken at the specific request of this department, and therefore with its deliberate approval, may be suspended for lack of ability to raise the needed money. These improvements are based upon plans approved by this department; they involve the expenditure of nearly $5,000,000, and their completion will add about 60,000 horsepower to the available supply. The interests engaged in this work have found it unexpectedly expensive, and they inform me that unless permanent legislation is soon completed they may be forced to suspend work by the exhaustion of their funds and by their inability to obtain money from the banks, which are averse to lending money on property whose legal status is doubtful.

The suspension of the work now in progress would be a detriment to the public so great as almost to be a disaster. The power which it was expected to realize from these improvements has already, on the advise of our War Industries Board, been allotted to the manufacture of such products as are regarded as being most important and most in need of such stimulation. Unless this additional power is made available, we shall be short of some of the things most essential to the carrying on of the war.

For the reasons above given, I strongly urge the desirability of providing at the earliest possible moment legislation that will clearly and unmistakably indicate the terms under which the water power of the Niagara River may be improved and further developed.

Very respectfully,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1419, the water-power bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WAR REVENUES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I present at this time the report (H. Rept. No. 767) of the Committee on Ways and Means upon the bill H. R. 12863, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill and report are ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House at this time that we will call this bill up for consideration on Friday next. We think it is very important that the House should have two or three days in which to study the bill and report.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman intend now to ask for additional copies to be printed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 51 (H. Doc. No. 1267).

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 copies of H. R. 12863, entitled "A bill to provide revenue, and for other purposes," together with the report No. 767 upon the same, as a House document, 2,000 copies to go to the document room of the House of Representatives, 21,750 copies to the folding room of the House of Representatives, and 1,250 copies to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that there be printed 10,000 as a Senate document for the use in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk has reported?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the House that we are permitted to print only 1,000 copies of the hearings, and I wish to warn the Members that if they desire copies they will have to be careful to keep them because we can not print any more.

WAR PROHIBITION.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a great many Members who are away are very much concerned to know when the so-called war-prohibition bill (H. R. 11945) is likely to be brought up for consideration in the House. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the probability in respect to that?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know. I spoke to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] this morning. The Senate has not yet passed the bill, and I would say that it would certainly not be here before Thursday, and I do not see how it could be taken up then.

Mr. ROGERS. But the gentleman rather thinks it will be taken up this week?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think it will, if it does not come up before Thursday.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, I take it that if it does not come up by Thursday, and we take up the revenue bill on Friday, the gentleman will not set aside the revenue bill to consider the agricultural prohibition bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not see how I could do that, because I imagine we would take all day upon the prohibition measure. I take it also that it may have to go to the committee before we can consider it. I doubt whether we can get unanimous consent to take it right up from the Speaker's table when it comes over from the Senate and concur in the amendments or send the matter to conference. I imagine it will have to go to the committee. I would say that the probability is that it will not be taken up this week.

Mr. ROGERS. Several Members are anxious to know.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with business in order to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the purpose of that is to continue the consideration of the water-power bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR REVENUES.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Has any agreement been entered into as to the time for general debate upon the revenue bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. Our idea is to proceed without limit of debate for a day or two, and then perhaps we can see whether we ought to limit general debate or not.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Has any arrangement been made in respect to printing extra copies of the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We have just passed a concurrent resolution in respect to that.

Mr. BARNHART. I just came into the Chamber, and I would like to submit to the chairman of the committee that I have been advised by the Government Printing Office that if this resolution specifies the kind of type that the bill shall be set in we can save two-thirds of the cost.

Mr. KITCHIN. Document type.

Mr. BARNHART. That is, 10 point, octavo?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1419, the water-power bill.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment to an important part of the bill, and therefore I think it ought to be well understood.

The special rule creating the committee gave it jurisdiction of bills affecting water power, except bills and resolutions of which the Committee on Foreign Affairs has jurisdiction under the general rules of the House. I never investigated or examined what jurisdiction the Committee on Foreign Affairs had under the general rules of the House, but I felt that because it did not say boundary waters, that is what it meant, and we have used the term "boundary waters" all along, although it is not in the special rule. So when the hearings were being had on this bill, and a gentleman would ask before that Water-Power Committee about these matters, I would always say, "Well, under the rule under which we are acting we have no jurisdiction of bills and resolutions touching boundary waters." I reached that conclusion from the fact it was said that it excluded the bills of which the Foreign Affairs Committee had jurisdiction. Now, when the gentleman made his motion the other day I was perfectly willing that that or some other plan be adopted, but in talking to Mr. FLOOD, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs several times, I said to him that if there was to be any amendment to this bill touching the subject matter of his committee I would be glad to have him prepare it and offer it. I had come to the conclusion from what I had heard in rather a general, loose way that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was especially interested in excluding Niagara Falls in any general legislation, but I do not know that I was warranted in that at all.

Now, I have been as fair about it as I knew how to be and as liberal as I knew how to be, and I thought if the Foreign Affairs Committee wanted any amendment put on this bill for the reason that the bills of which the Foreign Affairs Committee had jurisdiction were excluded from the consideration of the special committee, they should offer it. But, of course, on the floor of the House any Member can offer an amendment that is germane to the bill, and the House has the right to consider it, as this rule does not apply to the House. Now, this morning I received the following letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Benedict Crowell, dated September the 3d, in response to an inquiry from the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. It says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., September 3, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In response to an inquiry from Congressman DEMPSEY I have to-day written him concerning the urgent necessity of legislative action providing for the disposition of the right to use water for power purposes at Niagara Falls. In view of the fact that the general water-power bill promises to become a law before it would be possible to secure action upon the measure proposed by the War Department with respect to boundary streams, I earnestly hope that it may be possible to deal with this matter in the bill now pending before the House.

I am writing to Congressman FLOOD urging him to waive the question of jurisdiction on the part of his committee, and would ask you if it may not be possible to give him proper assurance that the views which his committee hold will be given every consideration by the conferees on the general water-power bill.

Very truly, yours, BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

Now, speaking for myself again, I am perfectly willing, if the bill as drawn without amendment includes Niagara Falls and all other boundary waters, that no amendment be adopted excluding such waters. But I had not investigated treaty provisions as to boundary waters, and I did not know but that there was a treaty provision in regard to Niagara Falls and other boundary waters that would, in effect, exclude them from the provisions of this bill as to its general jurisdiction. I have no objection to the amendment being voted down and let the bill pass as it is, but I lived up in good faith to what I believed at the time was a correct interpretation of the rule.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman to say in the discussion last Friday or Saturday that he would not oppose an amendment being offered before the bill was finished that would take away from this bill jurisdiction over Niagara Falls.

Mr. SIMS. Or such waters over which the Foreign Affairs Committee claimed jurisdiction under the general rules of the House, if it went no further than that.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Do I understand the gentleman is to oppose this amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]?

Mr. SIMS. No; I am not opposing it or advocating it, because I asked that this portion of the bill be passed over until the Committee on Foreign Affairs had opportunity to say whether or not it wanted to amend the bill and could prepare the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want recognition, Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment or some amendment that will take away from this legislation jurisdiction over water-power diversion at Niagara Falls. This legislation has been before the Committee on Foreign Affairs for eight years. Recently the committee practically finished consideration of it and had a bill ready to report. Three times, I believe, a bill touching Niagara Falls power has been reported out of the Foreign Affairs Committee and passed this House. Diversion of power at Niagara Falls is a very complicated question. Treaty rights and many other questions are interwoven in that subject. There are two large power companies up there. One of them is utilizing the water to a high efficiency, the other is not. That is one question that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has given consideration. Everyone should agree that these companies be compelled to obtain the very highest efficiency from the water diverted. That question has not been considered in this bill. Many other questions incident to diversion at Niagara have been considered by the Foreign Affairs Committee that have not been considered in this legislation. When this committee was created the Rules Committee specifically considered the question of Niagara Falls power being utilized and excepted in the rule creating this committee that subject from consideration in this legislation. The gentleman realizes that. Every man on the committee must realize it, and it is not fair to the Committee on Foreign Affairs—it is not carrying out the purpose and intent for which the special committee here was created—to write into this bill legislation pertaining to water development at Niagara Falls. And I submit it ought to be excluded. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] did say last Friday or Saturday that if the Foreign Affairs Committee should consider that the development of water power at Niagara Falls should not be considered in this legislation he would not insist on it. But the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee is not here. He is on business in Virginia. The committee therefore is not called to meet.

In all probability we will not have a meeting, but I do know that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has given tedious and earnest consideration to this question. The Secretary of War has been before it and presented his views thoroughly before it. We have considered every possible question incident to it. The Assistant Secretary of War has never been before the Committee on Foreign Affairs to present the matter. I do not know what he knows about the question, but I am quite sure that the views of the Secretary of War ought to prevail and that your committee should not usurp jurisdiction of this question. It is not just; it is not right to do it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] admitted the other day that he did not know whether this question was embraced in this bill; did not know whether or not any question concerning the Niagara Falls diversion was in the bill. That is too big a question—by far, too important—to legislate concerning, when the committee did not consider it in writing the bill.

Mr. SIMS. The committee did not exercise any jurisdiction on that subject.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Of course not, and for that very reason this question ought to be excluded from it, and I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] ought to prevail, or some similar amendment ought to prevail, that would take from this legislation jurisdiction over development at Niagara Falls.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I understood that we had passed over this amendment without action for the purpose of allowing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to take such action, whether in favor or in opposition, as it saw fit. I neither opposed nor agreed to what was submitted.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The Foreign Affairs Committee can not agree to what the gentleman says his committee itself has not considered. Treaty rights are wrapped up in this matter, the question of compelling these power companies to utilize the water to its highest efficiency, and many other questions included in it that have not been considered by the committee, and I submit the Niagara Falls power development should be excluded.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] inserts these words on page 35, line 3, "if the proposed project is to be located on any boundary stream or water, the applicant has secured the consent of Congress," so that as amended the section would read:

Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located, and if the proposed project is to be located on any boundary stream or water, the applicant has secured the consent of Congress with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of the water for water-power purposes.

Considering the desirability of the amendment excluding boundary waters, it occurs to me that the insertion of the gentleman's amendment in the connection just cited would arouse certain doubts and ambiguities as to the interpretation of the whole section, in view of the fact that in the Western States they have the doctrine of prior appropriation of waters, a doctrine which does not obtain in the eastern sections of the country and which does not obtain in the region about Niagara Falls. So that if the amendment is inserted in the connection just recited, it would make confusion in the application of that amendment to the section.

If the gentleman desires to exclude boundary waters, I would suggest that his amendment more properly comes at the end of the last section of the bill, in which section we specifically exclude from the operation of this bill the Hetch Hetchy project, supplying the city of San Francisco with power and with water. If it is put in there, its meaning would be clear and it would not confuse the text, as would be the case if the amendment were inserted where the gentleman desires.

Now, I wish to say a few words with reference to the merits of the proposition of excluding boundary waters. In my opinion, it is better for one commission to have jurisdiction of all navigable waters and waters on the public domain and on the forest reserves, and I believe that to be the case for the very reason that the gentleman from Mississippi stated, that we ought not to create this new commission in this bill because there was already an existing Waterways Commission, and he sought to avoid duplication of work and additional expense by giving to the Waterways Commission the powers we seek to give to the commission in this bill, consisting of the three Secretaries. That same argument can be applied to his amendment. If we here have a commission that has jurisdiction of the navigable waters within the United States and waters on forest reserves and on public lands, it should have jurisdiction of boundary waters in order to avoid duplication of work and the creation possibly of an additional commission. What objection is there to this commission consisting of these three Secretaries taking charge of boundary waters? I can conceive of no objection whatever.

Why, under existing law the Niagara Falls water powers are administered by the Secretary of War under existing treaty rights. In this bill we make the Secretary of War a member of the commission, so that all the knowledge he has, all the experience he has had with reference to dams upon the boundary waters, can be brought to the attention of this commission, and the whole commission can act upon a boundary water project, and we will thus have the advice of three, instead of one Secretary. It occurs to me that we had better leave the bill as it is.

In this connection I wish to read a bit of the testimony where this very matter was brought up while Secretary Houston was on the stand. I asked him a question and referred to the water-power bill which was introduced just a little while after this pending bill was introduced in the House and was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but which has not thus far been reported. Secretary Houston, referring to that bill, said:

I see no reason for any such division—just the contrary.

Mr. ESCH. Your opinion would be, then, that the whole matter should be left to the commission provided in this bill?

Secretary HOUSTON. And, if I am not mistaken, could be dealt with under this bill.

Then he states:

My view is that the boundary waters ought to be handled by the same body, and my impression is—but I speak subject to correction—that boundary waters can be handled under the terms of this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a request for unanimous consent. This amendment was passed over in the debate yesterday afternoon. It has only been debated this morning. I want to see if we can not agree upon the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], that this amendment be reserved and offered at the end of section 29.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is my understanding of what the agreement was on Saturday afternoon. I thought it was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] only spoke of it this morning.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That was my understanding on Saturday afternoon. It was the idea that in the meantime the Foreign Affairs Committee might get a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. That the voting on what is known as the Humphreys amendment, or similar amendment, requiring the consent of Congress as to boundary waters, should be passed over and be offered at the conclusion of section 29 if that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not know what section that is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Is there an amendment pending to this section?

Mr. SMALL. Then I will ask leave to proceed out of order.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman has no amendment to section 9, can he not wait until the next section is read?

Mr. SMALL. I have no amendment to section 9.

Mr. SIMS. Then I will ask the Clerk to read section 10, and the gentleman can offer his remarks to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That all licenses issued under this act shall be on the following conditions:

(a) That the project adopted, including the maps, plans, and specifications, shall be such as in the judgment of the commission will be best adapted to a comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purposes of navigation, of water-power development, irrigation, and of other beneficial public uses; and if necessary in order to secure such scheme, the commission shall have authority to require the modification of any project and of the plans and specifications of the project works before approval.

(b) That except when emergencies shall require for the protection of navigation, life, health, or property, no substantial alteration or addition not in conformity with the approved plans shall be made to any dam or other project works constructed hereunder of a capacity in excess of 100 horsepower without the prior approval of the commission; and any emergency alteration or addition so made shall thereafter be subject to such modification and change as the commission may direct.

(c) That the licensee shall maintain the project works in a condition of repair adequate for the purposes of navigation and for the efficient operation of said works in the development and transmission of power, shall make all necessary renewals and replacements, shall maintain adequate depreciation reserves for such purposes, shall so maintain and operate said works as not to impair navigation, and shall conform to such rules and regulations as the commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of life, health, and property. No license hereunder shall have the effect of relieving the licensee from liability for any injury or damage occasioned by the construction, maintenance, or operation of said project works; and the United States shall in no event be liable therefor.

(d) That out of surplus earnings, if any, accumulated in excess of a specified rate of return upon the net investment of a licensee in any project or projects under license the licensee shall establish and maintain amortization reserves, which reserves shall, in the discretion of the commission, be held until the termination of the license or be applied from time to time in reduction of the net investment. Such specified rate of return and the proportion of such surplus earnings to be paid into and held in such reserves shall be set forth in the license. And the license may provide as to any balance of said surplus earnings that the same in whole or part shall be used in reduction of rates and annually divided and repaid to and among the persons who have paid such rate according to the amount paid by each such person during the year.

(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission. When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of navigation dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at periods of not less than 10 years, in a manner to be described in each license: Provided, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent such power is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes; and that licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or irrigation use in projects of not more than 50-horsepower capacity may be issued without charge; but in no case shall a license be issued free of charge for the development and utilization of power created by any navigation dam, and that the amount charged therefor in any license shall be as nearly as possible that ascertained by the commission to be the value of such power.

(f) Such further conditions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as the commission may require.

(g) That combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service are hereby prohibited.

Mr. ESCH. I suppose it is understood that subsections (c) and (d) are passed over. That was the understanding the other day.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and there are several amendments to be offered to this section; but I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] wishes to speak for 10 minutes on the bill, without reference to any particular amendment.

Mr. ESCH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SIMS. I have two amendments to be offered on page 37.

Mr. ESCH. But subsections (c) and (d) were passed over temporarily.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They will be subject to amendment and consideration later on.

Mr. ESCH. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and chairman of the Special Water Power Committee created in the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, under leave of the House made some remarks on August 31, 1918, pages 9797 and 9798 of the RECORD, from which I quote. In the first paragraph, page 9797, first column:

> The facts are that for many years we have been trying to pass a water-power bill. All bills for that purpose authorizing the construction of water-power dams on navigable rivers, of course, were properly referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the discussion and consideration of those bills were confined entirely to the question of navigation improvement. They depended upon navigable improvements and were incidental to and grew out of them.

The gentleman in another portion of his remarks, on page 9797 of the RECORD, second column, used this language, which he said he substantially made to the President of the United States, referring to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

> That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had always had jurisdiction of water-power legislation or the construction of dams for navigation purposes on navigable streams.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say to the gentleman that while I did say that I intended to say since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman will even have to modify that statement.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I intended to express, and I may have been in error about that.

Mr. SMALL. I think the time has come to clarify the situation a little as to the jurisdiction of committees. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] was entirely in error in the statements which he made. The facts are that every Government dam which has been authorized and appropriations made therefor and constructed by the Government was considered and reported on by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This statement applies to all Government dams which have been authorized by law since the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in 1883. It is true that Congress authorized the purchase and improvement of dams in Fox River, Wis., in 1870 and 1872 by legislation reported from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but this, of course, was prior to the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 10, 1916 (vol. 53, pt. 6, 64th Cong., 1st sess., p. 5836), there is incorporated in the remarks of Mr. Adamson, at that time chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a letter from the Secretary of War containing a list of Government dams in which power could be developed. All of these Government dams were authorized in bills reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

In Senate Document No. 57, Sixty-second Congress, first session, there was presented by Senator Burton on June 29, 1911, a list of the acts of Congress concerning water-power privileges at Government dams which was furnished by the War Department, and all of these Government dams had been authorized in bills reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I submit the statement, which I think is entirely correct, that there is not a single law authorizing the construction of a Government dam which was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce since the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

And I ask gentlemen who have been active in combating the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at any time during this debate to cite a single act of Congress creating a Government dam which was not reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

It follows, therefore, that the statement of Mr. SIMS that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had always had jurisdiction of the construction of dams for navigation purposes on navigable streams was entirely erroneous.

The two last general dam laws, the first approved June 21, 1906, and the last approved June 23, 1910, had reference only to private dams and expressly excluded Government dams from the operation of such general dam laws.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that for five or ten years—that is as far back as my memory of these things goes accurately—all bills for the purpose of erecting dams for power purposes on navigable streams have been referred uniformly by the Speaker of the House to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. SIMS. I ask for information. I did not make any assertion.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Bills authorizing the construction of private dams have been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but Government dams in navigable rivers, authorized by Congress and constructed out of Federal revenues, are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and have always been reported by that committee.

Mr. SIMS. Purely for navigation purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Navigation primarily, water power incidentally.

Mr. SIMS. Then I was correct as far as my statement went in reference to bills introduced to permit private corporations and individuals to build dams——

Mr. SMALL. That was not the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I know, but I want to be correct. I want to say that in my statement the question of jurisdiction was a minor one, and perhaps I made an error which was not intended at all to reflect on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or to deny them the great service performed when they did exercise jurisdiction. I see no reason why the gentleman's committee should not have jurisdiction of dams that are to be erected in those streams simply for navigation purposes, the object and purpose of which water power is an incident.

Mr. SMALL. So long as I am chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I will endeavor to preserve the jurisdiction of that committee.

The first instance in which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported any bill affecting Government dams or the use of same was on April 28, 1914, with reference to H. R. 16053, Sixty-third Congress, second session, Report No. 592. I refer to section 14 of that bill. The bill did not become a law. The second and last time the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a bill affecting Government dams was on March 21, 1916, Senate bill 3331, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, Report No. 404. Section 19 of that bill did contain a provision regarding the use of the power at Government dams. This bill did not become a law. No point of jurisdiction was raised against these provisions in either one of the two foregoing bills, although such legislation was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is perfectly clear that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has exclusive jurisdiction of all bills authorizing the construction of Government dams on navigable rivers and making appropriations for such construction, and it equally follows that this committee has jurisdiction of all legislation concerning the use of such Government dams for the development of water power.

The origin of all dam legislation for the last 20 years is based upon section 9 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, which provides—

That it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction in any navigable river or other navigable water of the United States until the consent of Congress to the building of such structures shall have been obtained and until the plans for the same shall have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

This legislation from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has controlled the course of all subsequent legislation concerning dams. If it were not for this provision it is quite probable that a majority of all persons desiring to construct dams would not apply to Congress but to the legislatures of their several States for authority. They would do so because the question of whether the dam was an obstruction to a navigable stream would be a question of fact and not of law. As a matter of fact, many dams are constructed where the stream is not actually navigable, and it is probable that in a majority of cases the dam would be an improvement instead of an injury to navigation.

Further illustrations may be given of laws relating to the construction of Government dams upon navigable rivers for navigation purposes. In volume 3 of the Laws Relating to Rivers and Harbors, page 72, are several laws where the Secretary of War is authorized to grant leases for navigation dams. The dams specified are in Ohio, on the Muskingum River; in Kentucky, on the Green and Barren Rivers; in Tennessee, on the Cumberland; and in Illinois, on the Wabash River. All these were contained in river and harbor acts and all concerned Government navigation dams constructed by appropriations made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and primarily for navigation. The bill providing for the increase of the height of Dam 17 on the Black Warrior so as to provide for the development of water power, approved August 22, 1911, was reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. (See vol. 3 of Laws Relating to Rivers and Harbors, p. 54.) A provision in the river and harbor act approved February 27, 1911 (vol. 2 of Laws Relating to Rivers and Harbors, p. 1468), authorized the Ragland Power Co. to complete the dam theretofore constructed by the Government at Lock No. 4 on the Coosa River. On the Tennessee River there were quite a number of acts authorizing the Secretary of War to lease the power at Muscle Shoals, beginning, perhaps, with the act of 1907 and continuing through the last legislation upon this project. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has continuously had charge of legislation regarding water-power development at Muscle Shoals. A special act approved April 26, 1904, gave the city of Chattanooga or a private corporation or individuals the right to construct a water-power dam at Hales Bar in the Tennessee River, which dam has been constructed, and this legislation was reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

There is no Government dam in existence in which power is developed, the legislation for which was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. On the contrary, every navigation dam in existence from which power is used has been reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The great contests in the House over the bills for water-power development on the Coosa, Tennessee, and Black Warrior Rivers, in Alabama, and the Long Sault development in the St. Lawrence River, N. Y., which involved dams of great cost and importance, were concerning bills which had been reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and none of same from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask to revise and extend my remarks by including the citations which I was about to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. There are only two committees of the House which, under the rules, have jurisdiction over the construction of dams, and those are primarily the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and, secondarily, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as before stated, have exclusive original jurisdiction of all bills for the construction of Government dams on navigable rivers where the primary purpose is for the improvement of navigation and water power is incidental thereto. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce appear to have assumed jurisdiction of bills authorizing the construction of private dams. As to the Committee on the Public Lands, its only source of jurisdiction must arise, if at all, where private dams are to be constructed on streams which intersect the public domain. In such cases the United States is simply the proprietor of the lands contiguous to the stream, and as such owner is subject to the laws of the States, which is expressly recognized in the bill reported by the Special Water Power Committee.

The United States, as the proprietor of lands contiguous to streams, does not occupy the attitude of the sovereign, as it does in legislation affecting interstate commerce and navigation. The Committee on Agriculture has never attempted to exercise any jurisdiction over bills affecting dams or water-power development.

Mr. Chairman, the question has often been asked since this Special Water Power Committee was created as to the reasons for excluding members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from membership on this special committee. I had never intended to refer to that question publicly in the House, although it is fair to state that a flagrant injustice was done to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If it was the purpose to include on the special committee members of the standing committees having jurisdiction of the authorization of Government dams for navigation purposes, then necessarily the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should have been included. When the special water-power resolution was first presented to the House it was stated, and so far as I know conceded, that its membership was to be made up from representatives of the Committees on Rivers and Harbors, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Agriculture, and Public Lands, and, some one said, perhaps one or two members from the Committee on Rules. The honorable Speaker of this House, who appointed the committee, sent for me during the consideration of the matter and informed me that he had been requested not to appoint on the special committee any members from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors because that committee had no concern or jurisdiction over dams and water-power legislation. The Speaker did not give me the name of his informant, but I learned from other sources that such statement emanated from a Member of this House who is a conspicuous member of the Special Water Power Committee.

It can be judged from the foregoing remarks whether such statement made to the Speaker was correct.

I took the trouble to go through the laws and their origin, and I submitted to the Speaker a communication in writing setting forth a large number of laws authorizing Government dams and the development of water power which had been presented by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I do not wish to be understood as criticizing in the slightest the action of the Speaker in the appointment of the Special Water Power Committee, who stated in announcing the personnel of the committee that he had been informed that only members from the three Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Public Lands, and Agriculture were consulted by the President regarding the initial stages of the pending bill. It is rather a naive proposition that the Members consulted by the President on any pending legislation should control the rules of the House regarding the jurisdiction of the several committees.

Without intending to display the slightest personal resentment by any member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it can be stated in all frankness that a flagrant injustice has been done to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I would hesitate to state that any deliberate misrepresentation in this respect was made, and, in charity, it must have been made through ignorance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] inadvertently, as I believe, made an erroneous statement as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I desire to give notice that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will do everything that is appropriate and within its power to preserve its rightful jurisdiction. The committee feel no resentment about their noninclusion on this Special Water Power Committee; and if that had been the only motive, I would not have consumed the time of the House.

Following are the letter and statement referred to:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 11, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In further reply to your letter of January 30, 1916, requesting information for the use of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in considering some of the details of water-power legislation, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

1. The total amount appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Mississippi River between St. Paul and Minneapolis to date is $2,391,600. The total amount expended to January 31, 1916, was $1,544,583.44 for Lock and Dam No. 1 and $739,644.14 for other work. The estimated cost of completion of Lock and Dam No. 1 is $170,000.

2. The actual construction of Lock and Dam No. 2 began in the spring of 1898. This is a low dam built for navigation purposes only, has no effect on the water-power project, and will be drowned out by the high dam authorized in 1910 and now under construction. The appropriations and expenditures given in the preceding paragraph include work on this lock and dam.

3. The estimated time of completion of the contract: Some time during the navigation season of 1917.

4. As to the amounts paid for real estate, flowage rights, etc.—The total cost of land and flowage rights, including the cost of the sites of the two locks and dams, has been $24,970 to date. The State of Minnesota and the city of Minneapolis have deeded land and flowage rights without consideration, but no stipulation has been made that either they or the city of St. Paul should acquire any part of the water power to be developed at Lock and Dam No. 1. It should be stated, however, that the flowage right conveyed by the city of Minneapolis was under the original project and subject to a limitation as to the height of the dam. Under the present project the dam will be above that limit and the conveyance will be void on that account. Both cities have declined to convey the flowage rights now needed without consideration, and agreements have been reached whereby the city of Minneapolis will be paid $15,000 and the city of St. Paul will be given part of the Government land at Lock and Dam No. 2, which is valued at about $6,000.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

MEMORANDUM.

1. Dams on Fox River, Wis.: The Fox River improvement, with a series of locks and dams, was purchased from the Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co. for the sum of $145,000 appropriated by act of Congress approved June 10, 1872. Under the terms of the transaction the Government simply purchased the line of water communication, the water powers created by the dams being reserved to the company.

2. Dams on Muskingum River, Ohio: By a provision in the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, Congress accepted from the State of Ohio the Muskingum River improvement, with all the locks, dams, canals, franchises, and property rights of every kind, including all water leases and rights to use water then running and in force between the State and private persons or corporations. In the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888, a provision was incorporated authorizing the Secretary of War to grant leases or licenses for the use of lands and water powers belonging to the United States for such periods of time and at such rates as he might deem just and expedient.

3. Dams on Green and Barren Rivers, Ky.: The Green and Barren Rivers improvement was purchased by the United States in pursuance of authority granted in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888. The improvement consisted of a number of locks and dams built by a navigation company at which the surplus water was leased, and in the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to continue the practice and to grant leases for periods not exceeding 20 years.

4. Cumberland River, Tenn.: By an act approved June 28, 1902, amendatory of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to lease the surplus water not required for navigation at Dam No. 1 on this river. No leases have so far been granted.

5. White River, Ark.: By an act approved June 28, 1906, Congress granted to the Batesville Power Co. the right to make construction for the development and use of water power at Lock and Dam No. 1, and for that purpose to withdraw water from the pool formed by said dam, the Secretary of War being authorized to fix from time to time the charges to be paid by said company for the use of said power.

6. St. Marys River, Mich.: In the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909, Congress provided that any excess of water in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie over and above the amount required for navigation shall be leased for power purposes by the Secretary of War upon such terms and conditions as in his judgment shall be best calculated to insure the development thereof. Under this authorization two leases have been granted—one to the Edison Sault Electric Co. and one to the Michigan Northern Power Co. These two leases cover practically all the surplus water belonging to the United States not needed for navigation at the rapids of St. Marys River, and each runs for a period of 30 years.

7. Mississippi River from St. Paul to Minneapolis: The river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, adopted a project for improvement which contemplated the construction of a high dam, and the leasing of water power created thereby, at rates that will insure a reasonable compensation to the United States. No leases have been made.

8. Dam 17, Black Warrior River, Ala.: By act approved August 22, 1911, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to change the plans for the construction of Dam No. 17 so as to increase its height to 63 feet, the object being: To render unnecessary the building of Locks 18 and 19, to provide for the extension of navigation up the Mulberry and Locust Forks of the river, and for the development of water power.

The lease of water power thus created has not been authorized by Congress.

9. Coosa River, Ala., Dam No. 4: By an act approved June 4, 1906, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to make a contract with any individual or corporation to complete the dam and forebay at Dam No. 4, and in consideration thereof the contracting party was to have the use of the surplus water for manufacturing purposes. No contract was made under this authorization, and in the river and harbor act of March 4, 1911, the Secretary of War was authorized to make a contract with the Ragland Water Power Co. to complete this dam, in consideration of which the company was to have the use of the surplus water for 50 years. A contract was entered into with the said company, but the work was not done, and the time limit for completion fixed by the act has expired.

10. Coosa River, Dam No. 12: By an act approved March 4, 1907, the Alabama Power Co. was authorized to build a dam at the site selected for Lock and Dam No. 12, and to use the water for power purposes, on condition that the Government should have the right to build a lock and control the dam for purposes of navigation. The dam was completed by the company within the time prescribed by the act.

11. Hudson River, near Troy, N. Y.: No provision for developing power has as yet been made nor is there any authority for disposing of it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a short statement, not over five minutes, in connection with the personnel of this special Water Power Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I tried to state the facts as I understood them, as to the constitution of the committee. The President sent for members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Committee on the Public Lands, the Committee on Agriculture, and asked if a special rule could not be adopted creating a special water power committee, the membership of which was to come exclusively from those three committees. I say "exclusively" simply because the President did not mention any other committee. The rule was brought in in that way and was put through in that way, and afterwards when we were discussing who were to be members of the committee, in the presence of Mr. ESCH and Mr. DOREMUS, I stated to the Speaker that the proposition was made to these three committees, two of which had to surrender jurisdiction of bills then before them if it was created, and that memberships from no other committee was mentioned, and that I for one not only could not consent to have members of other committees go on that committee, but that I would strongly oppose it for the very reason that it had been stated to my committee—as I stated so to them myself—that the special committee was to be composed of an equal number from the three committees, and, after having stated that to my committee and the committee agreeing, I personally representing them could not consent to put anyone else on it, whether Ways and Means, Judiciary, or any other. But I had not the slightest thought of objecting to the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors because they were on that committee, because I do think that with the knowledge they necessarily acquire about the navigable streams of the country they are doubly competent to pass on navigation dams or power development from navigation dams, and if they had been considered—I mean had been proposed—at the start no one would have objected to it, I am satisfied; I know I would not.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I understood the gentleman to disclaim that he had any part in urging that members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be excluded from this committee.

Mr. SIMS. I did not specifically name any committee; I simply objected to members of any other committee being added to the committee after the resolution was adopted in which it was provided for them to come exclusively from those committees. The rule itself does not so specify, but discussion was had on that line and all that I submitted to my committee.

Mr. SMALL. I understand the gentleman to say that he did not ask the Speaker to exclude members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from this committee?

Mr. SIMS. Of no committee. I do not remember whether the Speaker said anything about the Rivers and Harbors Committee; he may have done so. I do not remember every conversation I had with the Speaker. I may have talked with him when there was no one present but him and me, but I do distinctly remember the time when it was up fully and discussed fully, when I made my statement, that Mr. ESCH and Mr. DOREMUS were both present. If there was any other gentleman present I do not remember it now.

Mr. SMALL. As I have before stated, I would not have addressed the committee upon this matter if the only cause had been the exclusion of members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from membership on this special committee. It was the question of jurisdiction particularly I desired to present.

Mr. SIMS. I am very glad the gentleman from North Carolina has made the statement about the jurisdiction, because I did not know it near so well as the gentleman has given it.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask the gentleman who did represent to the Speaker of the House that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction as to Government dams or water powers to be developed from them?

Mr. SIMS. So far as dams for navigation purposes, I would not have made such a representation, because I know they have constructed such dams, but dams for the purpose of developing water power on navigable streams I understood to be exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as I have never known such a bill to be referred to any other committee.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman differentiates between private dams and Government dams.

Mr. SIMS. As to jurisdiction, yes. I think the River and Harbor Committee has jurisdiction over all Government dams for navigation purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Every one of them?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, my interest in this bill is mainly that the House shall pass some bill under which the water power that is lying idle all over this country shall be developed. Now, it seems to me—and I impute no motives at all—that the attitude in the past of the chairman of the committee and of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and men who sympathize with them, has been such as to prevent any legislation under which this water power could be developed, and I am anxious that we should get some legislation under which it can be.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman can not say we are preventing it when the facts are that four times we have passed the bill through the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETT. But the bills were such that I am afraid under them, even if they had become law, no development would have taken place.

Mr. FERRIS. The House could not have shared the gentleman's fears or it would not have passed these bills by unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETT. They passed them by unanimous consent not because they agreed to them but because they found by the contests in the committee that the majority of the House so desired.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, well.

Mr. GILLETT. And it may be so now. I am afraid now this bill may never become the law. You may manage to get it through the House, but I am afraid the same thing may happen now that did in the past and that the bill will appear so useless that the Senate will not pass it. Gentlemen claim that they are endeavoring to protect the Government. I thoroughly agree the Government ought to be fully protected; but, on the other hand, it will not do to hamper the men who want to develop power so closely that there is no inducement for them to go in and make the investment, and I am afraid that is what has happened in the past, and therefore the Senate has not agreed to the bill. Personally I do not see how the Government, simply by its control over navigable streams, has any real practical title for which it is entitled to any returns. It is a mere theoretical right that the Government has over most navigable streams. Take the river in which I am most interested, and it is a good specimen—take the Connecticut River about 50 miles from the sea. There is a ledge of rocks extending for 2 or 3 miles which absolutely stops navigation. Now, there is not any commercial navigation above it. There are some locks and a canal around the ledge, which were built by private parties, which will take pleasure boats around, but there has been hardly any commercial navigation for years, and yet the Government, because the Connecticut River is called a navigable stream, forbids anybody building a dam there. The ledge of rock absolutely prevents navigation, and if a dam was built there it would not prevent it more than the ledge prevents it now, but, on the contrary, it would assist navigation. We have appealed to the Government to build a canal, but the Government will not do it. Then a petition was made for a charter to allow a company to build a dam there in connection with which the Government could have built, at a relatively small expense, locks to give us navigation. That bill aroused a long debate in Congress and at the end of that debate the charter was refused. Now, the Government had not any title to that water at all. If the dam had been built it would have been a great advantage to the whole region industrially, because it would have given them an enormous water-power right in the midst of a great industrial population, and, moreover—and that is the feature in which I am most interested—there would have been given navigation up to my home city of Springfield. This corporation was ready to invest the necessary millions for the dam, and the Government experts, the Government engineers, investigated and said it was feasible and that the Government should adopt the project and build the locks.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. The Chief of Engineers has submitted an elaborate report——

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. Combining recommendations both for the improvement of the upper reaches of the Connecticut River for navigation and the development of water power?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. And reports that a large volume of water power could be developed?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. In a moment. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from North Carolina for his interruption. I, of course, am familiar with the report and with this condition, and it was that report of the engineers that I wanted carried out. But Congress would not pass the legislation permitting it. I hope this bill will accomplish it. I now yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman, of course, recalls that further up the Connecticut River my own State of Vermont has exactly the same kind of interest. The Government there has exercised a sort of paternal withholding hand to protect property which theoretically it can use but which practically it has no use for whatever.

Mr. GILLETT. I was not aware of that, because I confess it seems rather absurd for the Government to pretend that the Connecticut above the Holyoke Dam is a navigable stream.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is on the basis, of course, that it is the water flowing down which makes the navigation below.

Mr. SIMS. Did not the gentleman support a bill here for the purpose of encouraging the Appalachian rainfall in order to create water for navigable streams?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. Why not? That does not help us any until we can get some locks or canals around these natural obstructions. And not only will you not allow the Government to do that, but you will not allow private persons to build a dam there and thus permit locks and canals to be erected.

Mr. SIMS. Probably waiting for the increased rainfall the gentleman is trying to provide for.

Mr. GILLETT. There is plenty of water if we only had this dam, for there is 8 feet of water for miles above this obstruction, but the dam is not allowed on the theory that the Government has a title to that water and therefore ought to have some remuneration for it. Now, I sympathize with the purpose of the gentleman to protect the Government. There is no question that in the past in the matter of railways, for instance, we were careless and prodigal and threw away millions of dollars, which these railroads unnecessarily received. At the same time we ought not to forget that in that way we brought about a speedy development of this country which would not have come in any other way, because unless we offer an inducement to men to embark in enterprises with profit we can not expect them to go into them. And in that way we developed the country and we developed the enterprising, upbuilding spirit which we call American. The danger I fear in this bill even as it stands to-day is that it is not attractive enough for capital to be invested, and that the bill will not accomplish the end desired and that little development will result from it. The reason I oppose the vital amendment is that I am afraid under that, uncertain as it is, there is still less chance that capital would develop these great water powers. Now, in the last 10 years, if capital had been allowed to develop the water power and if the Government had been more liberal, the advantage which the Government would have gained and the profits which this whole country would have received would have far more than compensated for any profits or advantages which the Government will now get under either of these propositions. It would have been much more advantageous for us if we had given a much more liberal bill 10 years ago than it will be for us to give this to-day. And, as I say, I am afraid under this bill to-day the great danger is that it is not attractive enough so that the water powers which ought to be developed in the country will still run unharnessed to the sea, and while we are debating about saving money for the Government opportunities and profits are steadily and rapidly running to waste. I shall vote for whatever provision I think is most likely to cause water power to be developed, believing that every clause is at least sufficiently guarded to thoroughly protect the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say that this matter will be more interesting to gentlemen in the West, where irrigation exists, and therefore the time will be and ought to be consumed by them, and I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado and others interested in this amendment about how much time they want, and let us close debate at a certain time with the understanding that it be used largely by those gentlemen.

Mr. SMALL. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Page 35, line 17, after the word "development," strike out the word "irrigation."

Mr. SIMS. Now, I would like to get unanimous consent as to this. I do not intend to participate in the debate myself.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like five minutes on this and five for——

Mr. ESCH. Ten minutes on this side.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, and I want to call the committee's attention to the hearings.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, we will never get through with this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have put in two hours doing nothing this morning, and now we have gotten to the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment shall continue for 30 minutes, one-half for the amendment and one-half against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall terminate in 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think all the gentlemen who have asked for time on this side are in favor of the amendment. The three gentlemen who have asked for time on this side are in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. It seems to me it is an unusual demand.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] wanted 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I want the time equally divided. The committee have reported the bill with this amendment in here, and it is one of the big important things in the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Let us have the unanimous consent, and I hope the gentleman will not use all the time, although it is a vain hope.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, my object in moving to strike out this word "irrigation" is this: This is a water-power bill. The purpose of this legislation is to regulate the water power of the entire United States, both upon the navigable and nonnavigable streams. It is purely a water-power measure and we have no right in this bill to include and interfere with other subjects that are not necessarily involved in water-power control. Section 27 of the bill, which was inserted upon my motion and after vigorous insistence and discussion, is, as all western Members will readily recognize, a literal copy of section 8 of the irrigation and reclamation law of June 17, 1902, and is put into this bill, the same as it was inserted in the reclamation law, for the purpose of protecting the water rights—that is, the irrigation rights of the people throughout the arid West, and every western man knows how tremendously important that section has always been in guarding the vested property rights of the irrigation of the Western States. Everyone who knows anything about western development or about irrigation or the waters of the streams of the Western States knows that the Congress of the United States in 1866 and 1872 expressly gave the waters of the streams throughout the arid West to the people of those States in order that they might use them for the irrigation and reclamation of the arid land of those regions. The waters were given absolutely, to be diverted from the streams under a right of appropriation for irrigation, domestic, mining, and other beneficial purposes. When those States were admitted into the Union the enabling acts of Congress admitting them, and the constitutions which they each adopted and which were ratified by Congress and approved by the President, contained provisions expressly dedicating forever the waters of those streams throughout the West to the people of those States to be by them appropriated and used.

And while there is a constant effort being made in Congress off and on all the time to either directly or indirectly undermine or encroach upon the vested water rights of the West, especially for irrigation purposes, every western Senator and Representative has diligently and constantly watched and jealously guarded as a sacred heritage the vested water rights of the arid West. Every time an effort has been made like this is to inject into a bill some provision that will allow some Federal bureau or commission or outside or Federal control to exercise authority over our water rights there has always been a concerted, and, thank fortune, a successful fight made by the western Members against it. I know my good friend from California [Mr. RAKER], who secured the insertion of this word "irrigation" in this bill at this place, has the best possible intentions. I know he does not intend by this provision to surrender our western vested rights. But I am equally positive that this provision would do that very thing. It would give this water-power commission, sitting here in Washington City, authority and jurisdiction over the use of the water of our western streams under the guise of water power, and with this clause regarding irrigation development in the bill this commission could and would not only complicate, supersede, and override our irrigation laws of the Western States but would determine the quantity and character of every western irrigation development and the amount of water every irrigation ditch might carry.

The doctrine of priority of appropriation is the foundation upon which the agricultural development of the West has been built. And no words could describe the amount of damage that could be inflicted upon the vested property rights of the West—the titles of our farms, our canals, our reservoirs, and fertile fields and orchards—if any provision should now be allowed to creep in that would unsettle or in any way jeopardize those vast vested rights.

We inserted this reservation clause—section 8 of the reclamation act—in the Hetch Hetchy law for the protection of the water rights for San Francisco at my instance and I have put it in several other bills. And I earnestly hope this committee will strike out this reference to irrigation in this section and will retain section 27 in this bill and prevent untold complications, conflicts of jurisdiction, litigation, and loss of property rights, which will certainly ensue if you do specifically and expressly confine this bill to water-power legislation and not interfere with or complicate the irrigation laws and rights of our Western States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is mistaken as to the effect of the amendment. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that when those who had experience in this matter appeared before the committee they agreed that this ought to be in the bill. I refer to the statement of Mr. Merrill, as found on page 20, and then again on pages 89, 90, 94, and 123. I again find the statement of Mr. BRITTEN, on pages 238, 239, and 240, saying that this ought to go in as a conservation measure. I find the statement of Mr. Chadwick, of New York, on page 279 of the hearings. He believed that this ought to go into the bill because it is one of the great objects of the legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Is Mr. Chadwick an authority on irrigation?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; he is an authority.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is Mr. Merrill?

Mr. RAKER. The statement of Mr. Pierce appears on pages 336 and 337. He has had much experience in the development of hydroelectric energy from water power, and he said, in response to my question:

> By all means and under all conditions the commission should require the project to be so constructed as to conserve the water after it has been used for hydroelectric purposes, so that it can be used for irrigation.

And last but not least the man on whom you are depending for this legislation, and who has had more experience on the subject than practically anybody else, is Secretary Lane, who gave his testimony before the committee, and whose testimony is found on pages 454–457. He says:

> Yes, Judge, by all means ought this provision to be placed in the bill.

Now, by way of illustration, Mr. TAYLOR, to my mind, has not rightly conceived the purposes of the act of 1866, as amended by the act of 1870, and the subsequent acts in regard to the rights of way over the public domain and forest reserves, because, as he reads those rules and regulations, he will find that there is not a single stream to-day in the Western States where you do not have to file an application and obtain permission, if it is over the public lands, from the Secretary of the Interior, and if it is over the public forest reserves it must be granted by the Secretary of Agriculture. To-day you can not get the right to appropriate the water and use it as provided in those rules and regulations without getting the consent of these parties. This is to avoid the question of a revocable permit, to the end that we might have a real and proper development.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. I want to make this matter clear before I get through. Speaking as one familiar with the irrigation laws of the West, familiar with the development of hydroelectric energy, I realize, as everybody must realize and know, that there is not a hydroelectric plant, if built properly and handled, that does not conserve and utilize to the highest degree all the capabilities of the water. All these great projects in the Pacific Electric Coast Co. do that. After they go up into these canyons in the Sierra Nevada Mountains and generate electricity they have so arranged their overflow and so arranged the waters as it leaves the wheels that they can take it up and bring it on these old mining ditches on the sides of the canyon and bring it down for purposes of irrigation to those fertile fields that are now being successfully developed—those splendid orchards and fields and gardens that have been made possible by virtue of the use of the water after it has been used by hydroelectric energy for hydroelectric purposes; so that in the West there is not a place where there is a dam or a stream that can be utilized but what there are thousands, and in many instances hundreds of thousands, of acres of desert lands lying open and unused and ready for the application of this water to them; and all this bill means and says is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I had half of the time. I have five minutes more, and I will use them now. The commission finds that in the granting of licenses, the permitting of this company to utilize the waters and lands—and it gets its right by applying to the State for it—incidentally there is a sufficient amount created for hydroelectric purposes, and below are a hundred thousand acres of land for irrigation. The company can, if it wants to be hoggish, drop the water into the stream so it can not be picked up and the land irrigated. But it is the purpose here to make a thorough investigation of the plans and specifications, practically to the end that the man who gets the license for the hydroelectric plant must so discharge his water from the dam and the take-out that it can be picked up by the next plant and used for irrigating this vast tract of desert land in the West that is lying all over these 16 public-land States, to the end that the land may be irrigated and thereby fully utilized. And in every case if you permit the hydroelectric company to take the water and conduct it and use it by virtue of its dams and reservoirs and ditches so as to place the water in the stream below so that it can not be taken up for irrigation, you not only retard but you prevent development in all these Western States, whereas by a conservative use, by proper intelligence and good business judgment, and by the investigation of the plans and specifications by this commission, they can see to it that in addition to the generating of all the electric power that the stream and the location will permit, the water can be utilized after it runs over the wheel, and used for the purpose of irrigating 100,000 acres or perhaps half a million acres of land. I will ask the committee, Can there be any objection to the utilization of our natural resources? Can there be any possible reason why this commission should not adopt its plans and specifications so that these natural resources may be used instead of going to waste? There can be no possible objection to it.

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The gentleman referred to certain men who testified in the hearings as to the necessity of putting in this work.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Did they say they wanted this for the purpose of controlling irrigation projects at all, or have they anything to do with the great irrigation projects?

Mr. RAKER. Nothing whatever.

Mr. DILL. Was not the purpose of this simply that the dams should take into consideration the possibility of irrigation?

Mr. RAKER. That and that alone; that after the hydroelectric company had used all the energy that could be used from the dam for hydroelectric energy, the hydroelectric company should not be a dog in the manger, and should not so discharge its water that it should go to waste to the sea when there are 100,000 acres of land below that can be irrigated. But the purpose of the opponents of this amendment is to the end that this water can not be used by gravity, but must be pumped by energy from the hydroelectric company up onto the benches instead of, in the first instance, being placed where it ought to be.

Mr. DILL. If the word "irrigation" could be stretched so as to cover all the ditches and side projects, could not the words "and of other beneficial public uses" also be so stretched?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely so; and it was so stated by Mr. Merrill in the hearings. And I said to Secretary Lane:

While you have got the power and can use the governmental agencies, it would seem to me—and I believe it would seem so to everyone—that if a dam or reservoir was placed down a stream, say half a mile, it would develop a little more horsepower, whereas if it was placed up the stream a mile farther you could get its full use for irrigation and about 90 per cent of the water power, you ought not to permit the enterprise to be established where you would lose so much benefit which could otherwise be obtained in the way of irrigation.

To which Secretary Lane replied:

I thoroughly agree with you.

That is the whole case. That is the acme of this bill. The idea is not to allow the hydroelectric plants to be built in these valleys and canyons in the Western States in such a way as to prevent irrigation, but to have them built at such locations and in such a way as to permit a reasonable amount of hydroelectric energy, and at the same time permit the thing that we are trying to develop and conserve in the use of the waters of this country for irrigation. The purpose of the amendment is to avoid that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no difference among those familiar with irrigation development with regard to the importance and the necessity of safeguarding all legislation that may in any way affect irrigation, so as to avoid any unfortunate effect on that class of development. There is no disagreement among western men on that subject. I want to accomplish the same thing that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] wants to have accomplished, and I want to accomplish the same thing that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who offers the amendment, wants to accomplish. The only difference is as to the effect of this amendment, and it is a curious thing that so far as I know the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is the only man familiar with irrigation who thinks the word "irrigation" should be in the bill in this place. I think it might be infinitely harmful to the cause of irrigation development. The gentleman's theory seems to be that because this commission is to pass upon the question of the diversion of water for the development of power it ought to take into consideration irrigation questions. I grant you that there might be cases where irrigation would be involved, where it might be well for the commission to give some attention to the question of the effect on irrigation, which it could do under the language remaining in the bill after this word is stricken out. The danger from having this word in the bill arises out of this situation: Irrigation water rights are granted in perpetuity, and in the nature of things they must be in perpetuity or they are of no value. Under irrigation there is no grant of a property right in water, but there is a right to use under public control, and that is a perpetual right so long as the water is used beneficially for that specific purpose. Now, we have had enough experience in the West to know the necessity of guarding jealously perpetual rights under irrigation, because we know how essential it is, and therefore we all of us realize the danger that lies in even seeming to give a commission, whose business it is to grant only 50-year franchises, any control over the diversion of water for irrigation purposes. It is the getting of the camel's head into the tent, and eventually the whole body of the camel, and some day we would be compelled to come to Congress or to the courts to cure acts which would be done under the color of this reference to irrigation.

Let us guard the right-of-way act. It is the one thing that makes irrigation development possible. We take no authority from the Secretary of the Interior by striking this word out. We leave the jurisdiction in his hands instead of dividing it with the commission.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. You might as well put the word "drainage" in as "irrigation," might you not?

Mr. MONDELL. "Drainage," or the words "domestic use," or half a dozen words descriptive of the various uses of water. It is all right to leave in the bill the general term "other beneficial uses," because that indicates to the commission that they shall serve the general situation, but to leave any impression with them that we are proposing to give them any jurisdiction of the diversion of waters for irrigation would be fatal to irrigation development.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 15, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 4, after the word "license," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on adopting the amendment.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, that was an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. He was here a little while ago, but he is not now in the Chamber. I think we ought to defer action until he is present.

Mr. SIMS. I am quite willing that action on this amendment be deferred for a reasonable time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, action on the amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, subsection E, amend as follows: Strike out all of lines 10 and 11, and the word "commission," in line 12, and insert the following:

"That a charge of not less than 50 cents per horsepower per annum for the first 10-year period after the date of issuance of said license, and $1 for the second 10-year period, and $1.50 for the third 10-year period, and $2 for the fourth 10-year period shall be levied and collected by the United States on all electric power produced by the licensee for and during said periods or for any and all further time after the expiration of said fourth 10-year period that said project property remains in the possession, use, and control of said licensee or his assignee: Provided, That all sums so collected from the licensee by the United States shall be considered and treated as an amortization sinking fund, upon which interest shall be credited to the licensee at the rate of 4 per cent, compounded annually on all sums so paid from date of payment until the sums so paid in, with accumulated compound interest, shall equal the value of all the project property of the licensee except transmission lines and distribution plants. The value of said project property to be determined as provided in this act: Provided further, That upon the payment of said sum to the licensee or paid in discharge of any outstanding bonds or other liabilities of said licensee which at such time constitutes a valid, subsisting lien on said property, that all right, title, claim, and interest, which the licensee has in and to all said project property, except transmission lines and distribution plants, shall be divested out of said licensee and vested in the United States."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the lines I have proposed striking out, on page 37, lines 10 and 11, and one word in line 12, read:

That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission.

So the amendment that I am offering is not antagonistic to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Have the Secretaries who are to constitute the commission been consulted in regard to this amendment, and has the President viséed it?

Mr. SIMS. They have not been consulted only in this way, not as to this identical language: I did ask, not all of them, because Secretary Baker was not here, along the line as to making provision for automatic or compulsory amortization. The policy of the bill as prepared and brought to us by Mr. Merrill, and as stated by himself, provided for a minimum charge of 10 cents per horsepower. Mr. Merrill, in explaining it, said that this was not for revenue purposes, but simply to defray the expenses of administration, and the policy of the bill was not to secure revenue by that charge. So that the rates would be unaffected by any charge for revenue purposes. Therefore, I assumed when I read the letter sent by and signed by the Secretaries that Mr. Merrill represented the purposes of the bill both in the original form and the amended form, and therefore the policy of making the charge seems to appear in the bill simply to cover expenses of administration, and nothing more. No charge was proposed for purposes of amortization.

That is not a charge at all in the sense that the contention had been so sharply had heretofore. As I understand, the Senate, by a majority vote, has held and contends that under the law as to navigation dams, or so far as the power of Congress is concerned regarding navigable streams, it is simply to maintain and protect navigation, and that Congress has no right to make any charge for electricity produced in this way where it was done by a private company or corporation and not by the Government with its money. There has been and is now quite a contention about the power of Congress to make a charge at all for these developments made by private corporations or individuals under license by the Government. Of course, the charge of 10 cents, while a minimum charge in this bill, might have been placed at $10, so far as the power of Congress is concerned, but the policy as expressed was not for the purpose of revenue, or for the purpose of recapture or amortization, or for any purpose except for administrative expenses. The policy of the bill as amended clearly excludes the intention and purpose of using the sum collected for anything except expenses of administration. The charge must not be less than 10 cents per horsepower, but the maximum charge is limited by the purpose of the bill. That is, that no additional amount will be charged except for the purpose of defraying the expenses of administration.

Mr. MONDELL. If this amendment were adopted, there would be no longer any reason or purpose for a recapture clause in the bill, I assume.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. This bill provides for a fund which when it equals the value of the project property less transmission lines and distribution plants is automatically recaptured. The title the property is divested out of the licensee and is vested in the United States, the licensee being entitled immediately to the amount of the amortization fund. Both bills provide for the payment of the project property taken plus any severance damages that might arise by disconnecting or severing the property taken over from that not taken over, and this amendment does not affect that provision in the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I was wondering if the gentleman would accept a slight amendment, to strike out the last two words of his amendment, "United States," and insert in lieu thereof the words "State where the same is located," and then that would vest in the State instead of the United States the property, because the people of some particular State are going to pay this amortization, and it should go to that State.

Mr. SIMS. I think that the beneficial uses of this property after it is fully developed and goes to the United States, as the gentleman says, would, of course, be largely localized. That is, the State in which it is located should receive the benefits growing out of this complete amortization, as far as possible; but the gentleman will remember that it has appeared all through the hearings, and it is not at all controverted, that to get the highest and most beneficial use out of hydroelectric development we should have interconnecting lines from one to another of these projects, so that one development at a time when it does not need the peak of its load can be used by some other power project connected with it. I do not think there is any question about that. As long as this property is in the hands of the Government of the United States it can control interstate transmission, which will have to take place if the best results follow. But if owned by a State, while the Government would have the right on any question involving interstate and foreign commerce to control or regulate rates, it would not have such complete control and authority as absolute proprietorship would give it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. DILL. If this amendment be adopted, it means that users of the power of the project must pay eventually for the project being turned over to the Government.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman means the consumers?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I want to answer that question in this way: My greatest trouble in trying to get up a compulsory amortization provision was to keep it from being made the excuse for charging the consumer an increased price. So I tried to provide for amortization so that with the interest added it would be so low in amount that while the project remained in the hands of the licensee that it could not possibly give any excuse or furnish any reason why the commission should permit it to make any substantial additional charge to the consumer. So I had this proposition in the amendment gone over by an expert for the purpose of working out and ascertaining what the charges in this amendment would add to the consumer per kilowatt hour, and at 50 cents it adds two one-hundredths of 1 cent per kilowatt hour; at $1 for the second period, four one-hundredths of 1 cent per kilowatt hour; and for the third 10-year period, six one-hundredths of 1 cent; for the fourth 10-year period, eight one-hundredths of 1 cent; and then, at $2.50, it adds 1 mill per kilowatt hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. To-day in Washington the domestic consumers are paying 10 cents per kilowatt hour. This analysis and calculation has been made by an expert who is absolutely disinterested in any project, and it shows that it costs so little to completely amortize the property at these minimum charges that it can not be passed on to the consumer nor be any reasonable excuse for selling the current at any higher rate to domestic consumers, or any excuse for any other development within the region putting its prices up on account of this charge.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. These are rather important changes in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say further it has not been submitted to the committee, it is not a committee amendment, and I am not offering it as chairman of the committee, but only as a member of the committee and as a Member of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Has it been considered by the committee?

Mr. SIMS. It has not.

Mr. WALSH. It is a rather important change.

Mr. SIMS. I think it is.

Mr. WALSH. It takes away the discretion of these commissioners.

Mr. SIMS. No; they must collect the money. This is a minimum charge only.

Mr. WALSH. The provisions of the bill give them the right to fix rates.

Mr. SIMS. I have stricken that out; lines 10 and 11 and part of line 12.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman misunderstands my question. As I understand the effect of the amendment, it takes away the discretion from this commission to fix rates.

Mr. SIMS. No; not at all.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the amendment fix rates?

Mr. SIMS. No; it says the charge shall not be less than these amounts. They may still fix rates, and, as I said, this charge will not furnish any excuse for fixing a rate in such a way as appreciably to affect the consumer.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it lessens their discretion, then, in some way.

Mr. SIMS. It takes away the idea that they are to collect only administration expenses undoubtedly, and that was, I think, a very unwise policy to adopt. Now, I want to say this: If we are in good faith, and I think every man is in good faith about this bill, and want this property eventually to come back to the United States, I must say that the recapture provisions provided in all these bills, whether they are the recapture provisions or the net-investment plan or the fair-value provisions in the bill, it will be practically impossible to ever get Congress to make an appropriation to take the property over at the end of the license period, because Congress will not appropriate unless made mandatory, and here we have an automatic amortization without any suit at the end of the time to secure the title or fix the value of the property, because the commission will have all that in its hands from the beginning and can require and will require these amortization charges, and can refuse extensions or anything else that will prevent this charge from completely amortizing. And it can increase the charge when necessary to amortize, so that it will not be a burdensome hardship upon the consumer.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What I want to know is, How does the gentleman arrive at these arbitrary figures named in his amendment?

Mr. SIMS. I will tell the gentleman. I was trying in some way to find what would amortize without compound interest. I took the 10,000 horsepower and took the average of $75 per horsepower as capital cost of the property, not including transmission lines and distribution plants, and found that at 50 cents for the first 10 years, $1 the second, $1.50 the third, $2 for the fourth, and $2.50 for the fifth it exactly amortizes without interest. I found it will be $750,000 at the end of the license period, just what the plant cost at $75 per horsepower.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for another question? What leads the chairman to believe this is a reasonable charge?

Mr. SIMS. From the fact it is so small that it can not affect the price to the consumer. If it was $100 or $150 a horsepower, the charge of one-fifth of 1 mill the first 10 years, two-fifths of 1 mill for the next, and three-fifths for the next, and four-fifths for the next, and 1 mill for the last is so small it can not be reflected in the charge to the consumer, and this commission or the State commissions will never permit an increased charge to the consumer to cover so small an additional expense.

Mr. Chairman, I will now read as part of my remarks my statement in explanation of this amendment that I had printed for use of the committee when we reached this part of this bill:

Page 37, subsection E, amend as follows: Strike out all of lines 10 and 11, and the word "commission," in line 12, and insert the following:

"That a charge of not less than 50 cents per horsepower per annum for the first 10-year period after the date of issuance of said license, and $1 for the second 10-year period, and $1.50 for the third 10-year period, and $2 for the fourth 10-year period shall be levied and collected by the United States on all electric power produced by the licensee for and during said periods or for any and all further time after the expiration of said fourth 10-year period that said project property remains in the possession, use, and control of said licensee or his assignee: Provided, That all sums so collected from the licensee by the United States shall be considered and treated as an amortization sinking fund upon which interest shall be credited to the licensee at the rate of 4 per cent, compounded annually on all sums so paid from date of payment until the sums so paid in, with accumulated compound interest, shall equal the value of all the project property of the licensee except transmission lines and distribution plants. The value of said project property to be determined as provided in this act: Provided further, That upon the payment of said sum to the licensee or paid in discharge of any outstanding bonds or other liabilities of said licensee which at such time constitutes a valid, subsisting lien on said property, that all right, title, claim, and interest, which the licensee has in and to all said project property, except transmission lines and distribution plants, shall be divested out of said licensee and vested in the United States."

A project costing $75 per horsepower for all its property excepting transmission lines and distributing plant can be completely amortized, if the amendment I have offered is adopted, in 36 years 4 months and 10 days.

Let us apply the amendment as offered to a project for developing and producing 10,000 hydroelectric horsepower and costing by way of capital investment $750,000 for all property except transmission lines and distributing plants. A charge of 50 cents per horsepower per annum would bring in a sum of $50,000 for the first 10-year period without interest, but with 4 per cent interest per annum compounded the total to the credit of the licensee at the expiration of the first 10-year period would be $59,510.

Then during the second 10-year period, under my amendment, the charge would be at the rate of $1 per horsepower, or at the rate of $10,000 per annum, which, without interest for the second 10-year period, would be in round numbers $100,000, but with interest on the amount of $59,510 to credit of the licensee at the expiration of first 10-year period and interest on amount paid in for the second 10-year period, the total amount would be $207,904.

Then during the third 10-year period under my amendment at a charge of $1.50 per horsepower, as provided under the amendment, with compound interest, the amount due the licensee in the Treasury to his credit would be $472,000.

Then beginning the fourth 10-year period, with a charge of $2 per horsepower, the sum due the licensee at the expiration of 6 years 4 months and 15 days would exactly equal $750,000, being the full capitalization for the whole project except transmission lines and distribution plants, thus completely amortizing the project in 36 years 4 months and 15 days.

These calculations are my own and without the aid of amortization tables. In making my calculations I have discarded the odd cents in the amounts due at the end of each 10-year period. I believe that $75 per horsepower is a fair average of capital cost of projects, exclusive of transmission lines and distribution plants.

In this period of 36 years 4 months and 15 days the licensee would have paid to the United States $408,334 and would receive from the United States $750,000, the United States paying to the licensee as interest, at 4 per cent compounded, the sum of $341,666.

My amendment provides that at such time as the amortization sinking fund thus provided equals the value of the project property, less transmission lines and distribution plants, that all right, title, claim, and interest that the then licensee has in and to the property so amortized shall be divested out of the licensee and be vested in the United States and that the amortization fund shall be paid to the then licensee, less outstanding bonds with interest and all other valid, subsisting lien charges against the property, and which amounts shall be paid by the United States when due.

In order to ascertain just what the charges, under my amendment, would amount to as to costs of operation per kilowatt hours delivered to the consumer, I, through the kindness of Mr. M. L. Cooke, of the United States Shipping Board, submitted my proposed amendment to Mr. G. H. Morse, a very competent electrical engineer, also of the Shipping Board, to work out the problem and furnish it to me, which was done, and I now submit the correspondence giving me the information I desired, as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, August 28, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE SIMS: The inclosed memorandum answers your request for data about the effect of your amortization assessment. It certainly seems to make a very favorable showing. In case we can supplement this in any way so as to make it more nearly answer your purposes, I certainly trust you will let me know by telephone or otherwise.

Yours, very sincerely,

M. L. COOKE.

PROBLEM PROPOSED BY MR. MORRIS L. COOKE FOR MR. SIMS AUGUST 27, 1918, TO MR. G. H. MORSE.

An amendment is to be proposed for the water-power bill as follows:

First 10 years of operation, 50 cents per horsepower year produced (based on continuous operation) is to be added to regular production costs.

Second 10 years, $1 per horsepower year is to be added.

Third 10 years, $1.50 per horsepower year is to be added.

Fourth 10 years, $2 per horsepower year is to be added.

Fifth 10 years, $2.50 per horsepower year is to be added.

The sum of all these increments for the 50 years is to be employed as an amortization fund.

It is desired to know what amount, expressed as cents, must be added per kilowatt-hour delivered to consumers to meet above extra charges on production. We are to assume a suitable efficiency of distribution.

Following is based on 85 per cent of electric energy produced being delivered to the customers and a load factor of 50 per cent:

Of every 0.746 (factor by which kilowatts are transformed into horsepower) kilowatt-hour produced, $0.85 \times 0.50 \times 0.746 = 0.317$ kilowatt-hour reaches the customer.

$\frac{0.50}{365 \times 24}$ = extra cost per 0.317 kilowatt-hour which reaches the customer during the first 10 years.

Therefore the extra cost per 1 kilowatt-hour reaching the consumer during first 10 years will be:

$$\frac{0.50}{365 \times 24 \times 0.317} = $0.00018.$$

This is about 0.02 cent per kilowatt-hour.

Therefore the amounts to be added per kilowatt-hour delivered to the consumer should be as follows:

	Cents.
First 10 years	0.02
Second 10 years	.04
Third 10 years	.06
Fourth 10 years	.08
Fifth 10 years	[1].10

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to differ with the chairman of the committee on the proposed amendment, but I can not believe it would be wise or right for us to lay a hard and fast price, even a hard and fast minimum price. There will be instances where we can not develop these projects in the West at a charge of anything like 50 cents per horsepower the first year, $1 the second, and $1.50 the third, and so on. They only charge $1 per horsepower at Niagara Falls on the Canadian side, where it is the most feasible water power ever developed. This is what Secretary Lane says on the question of charge:

(12) Among the reasons for charging royalties are: The right of the people to secure a fair return for the use of public lands which if owned by private individuals would be purchased or leased for power use at high prices, and would be capitalized at large sums by the power companies. This is not a controlling reason, however; the principal reason being that the right to exact a charge gives to the Federal Government a large measure of control over the public power development and sale in the interest of the general public. While State and Federal commissions may regulate rates, there are instances where this will not prevent abuses.

Dr. Otis Smith, of the Geological Survey, who has a good deal to do with the development of water power, and they have developed some, has this to say on what royalty should be charged:

12. Royalties should be charged: So that a more equitable division of benefits of the enterprise between private and public interests can be made than through mere rate regulation.

So that administrative expenses of the lands involved may be offset by revenue therefrom.

The use of sliding-scale royalty, properly constructed, may induce more efficient management of the plant by providing for a bonus in the form of a reduction in charge for more efficient management, as expressed in lower cost of operation and lower rates to consumers.

Such a sliding-scale charge as was contained in the Pend Oreille permit by Secretary Lane is similar in spirit to the Boston Gas plan and places a premium upon lowering prices, and so encourages best management.

Now, the representative of the Secretary of Agriculture has this to say:

The chief reason for requiring rentals or royalties for the use of power sites is in order to return to the Treasury a proper proportion of the actual costs incurred in the administration, maintenance, and protection of the Nation's water-power resources which has been paid for out of the general revenues of the Government. This would seem a justifiable fiscal policy whether or not rentals sufficient for the purpose resulted in an increase of rates to consumers, for that part of the public which had received the benefits derived from the utilization of this class of public resources would be merely reimbursing the other part which had received no benefits but had shared in the cost of administration, maintenance, and protection.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman state who signed that?

Mr. FERRIS. That was the testimony of Mr. Merrill of the Agricultural Department. He was appearing for the Agricultural Department. Again, he said:

No charge should be made for power in small plants because the cost of supervision and collection would be an unreasonably high proportion of the charge. In the case of municipalities the public interest of the lessee is so great and so direct that it may well have the benefit of a remitted charge.

16. The Secretary should fix rates where there is no public utility board, because this provision—

They also say—this was, of course, what they said in reference to the public-lands bill—the Secretary should fix rates where there is no public-utility board, because this provision—

A. Makes it increasingly difficult for water-power corporations to escape regulation by either State or Federal authority.

B. Makes it possible for a consumer who has a grievance to have a hearing in any case which may arise, either by State or Federal authority.

[1] One-tenth cent equals 1 mill.

Now, personally I have no objection to the chairman's plan to amortize the plant if it is possible to so do it. I would like to see that done. They are doing that in some cases.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In that connection, how would that be of any benefit to the consumer or to the Government itself?

Mr. FERRIS. Of course, it would take over the property, and to that extent it would be to the benefit of the Government. They will get the plant returned to it at the end of the term without appropriating for it. Of course, there would be an increase in the charge to the consumer, although, as the chairman has disclosed, a very small charge.

Mr. SIMS. What I had in mind was, and I may be wrong about it, I understood in my amendment that of course this charge should not apply to any horsepower under a hundred.

Mr. FERRIS. I was going to add, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. I was going to add that to work out a full scheme of amortization it rather seems to me it ought to have committee action. This is without any such approval as suggested by the chairman of the committee. An amendment was not even offered there, as I recall. I think it doubtful whether the House should adopt an amendment of that kind which would change the bill and would provide for amortization, which may or may not be worked out on scientific lines. I do not know how much time the chairman has given to that. He may have gone into it thoroughly. It may be a scientific conclusion, but it is so far-reaching, I think we should move very cautiously. I would dislike to adopt a scheme that has not had committee action. I do not know whose plan it is or what Government agency is behind it, and even though it may be something that might be worked out, I would be afraid to vote for it now. I would prefer to give a long time to a change so far-reaching.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has asked a question as to amortization. The Secretary of Agriculture suggested it, and his suggestion is written in the bill, and the proposition for the committee to determine now is, Shall we turn over these resources without compensation or shall we provide amortization pure and simple, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]? As the gentlemen know, the department bill, or the bill supposed to be drawn by the three Secretaries, provided for a minimum charge of 10 cents per horsepower. In order for the committee not to appear ridiculous before the country, they struck it out. If it is to be left for the commission, the charge will undoubtedly be 10 or 15 per cent per horsepower only.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has labored here for two days, and has proven, I believe, conclusively that the administration of this bill is not to be by any three Secretaries or any commission. The administration will be by some department clerk. If the Secretaries or the President did not have knowledge of the amendments that were proposed to this bill, how can we expect that the Secretaries or this commission will have any knowledge of the future operations or the administration of this bill?

The charge suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is, I believe, 50 cents to $2. The hearings show that Sir Adam Beck testified that in Canada they have the amortization plan and amortize a plant in 25 years, and that the charges in Canada are only one-half the charges in the United States—the charges fixed by the State service commissions as proposed in this bill. Now, this question is a simple one. Will Congress retain control over these valuable resources, or shall some clerk in the department have it, and at a time when, I believe, we need revenue—resources that will yield the Government revenue of at least a billion dollars a year and that can be made to yield more than $2,000,000,000 a year? It is unbusinesslike, unstatesmanlike, and I can not conceive that any 400 Members of the Congress would ever have any such idea. It is the most valuable resource the Federal Government has, and are we today to turn it over without a cent of compensation?

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. DILL. Is not this amortization, in a word, to make the consumers of the power of a certain plant pay for that plant and turn it back to the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. DILL. There is nothing but what comes out of the pockets of the consumer.

Mr. HAUGEN. The proposition is to turn over the valuable resources for the exploitation of a few financiers, and all the Government is likely to get out of it is 10 cents per horsepower.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Washington says this is a plan where the consumers pay. The plan in this bill is at the end of the time the unamortized part is to be paid out of the Treasury, which is paid for by the taxpayers all over the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. The plan suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee is this: That the consumer may have the power for half the price he will under this bill, and in less than 25 years the Government will own the plant without costing the Government one cent.

Mr. DILL. But the money that puts up the plant comes out of the consumers.

Mr. HAUGEN. The investor has his money coming to him, and he should have liberal profit and interest on his investment, and be paid every legitimate claim he may have.

Mr. DILL. Where is this money to come from, this 50 cents to $2, if not from the consumer?

Mr. HAUGEN. The money is to amortize the plant. Otherwise, it is to go into the pockets of the exploiters. That is the difference. All there is to the whole proposition is, Shall the rent for the use of the water be applied as part payment of the improvement or shall it go into the pockets of licensees?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I get into the debate at this point simply for the purpose of congratulating the country on the discovery of a real financial genius in the person of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Garabed promised us to pluck power unlimited from the surrounding air without its costing us a cent. We all wished him well; if he could get it, so much to the good. But the gentleman from Tennessee has backed Garabed entirely off the boards and put him into the deep shadows of obscurity. He has brought forth a plan under which we may accumulate millions and billions—and that is what appeals to us these days—billions—accumulate them in the Public Treasury for distribution to the general public without its costing anybody an appreciable penny; at any rate the gentleman has assured us that these amortization charges he proposes are to be of such a character that no human being—he did not put it just that way, but that is what it amounted to—would ever realize that he was contributing to this wonderful consummation under which the Government is to be the owner of all water power in the United States without anyone appreciating he has contributed to that ownership.

Those of us who can not see the gentleman's scheme in the rosy light in which he views it fail to discover the virtue of the scheme of paternalism and socialism under which he proposes, or thinks he proposes, to benefit all the people at the expense of a few. Most ordinary mortals will incline to the opinion that the money for amortization would be contributed by the users of the power, my good friend from Tennessee to the contrary notwithstanding. They would pay the bill, the general public would be supposed to have the benefit, assuming that we should develop into a paternalistic state under which the Government is to run all the water power of the country.

I imagine that the House is not ready to enter upon that sort of a plan. But again I congratulate the committee upon the discovery of this wizard of finance in my honored and genial friend from Tennessee, who would make us all rich and raise us all by our boot straps to the highest point of perfect bliss in the ownership of countless water powers of enormous value without costing us a cent and without our having appreciated the fact that we had contributed to that beautiful result. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. ESCH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to address the House?

Mr. ESCH. There are several on this side who desire time.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that at the expiration of 25 minutes all debate close on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 25 minutes all debate close on this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman did not say "section." He said "amendment."

Mr. FERRIS. Make it on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 25 minutes all debate close on this amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. THOMAS. If it is in order, I move that the enacting clause and all following thereafter be stricken out, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays. [Laughter and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that we have just had a unanimous-consent agreement that the debate on this particular amendment should close in 25 minutes. At the end of that time it might be in order for the gentleman to make his motion.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum. I guess that is in order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be had, even out of order, to satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SIMS. Let us find out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-eight gentlemen are present—not a quorum. A quorum is lacking, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. Is not a motion to strike out the enacting clause in order at any time?

The CHAIRMAN. Ordinarily, I would say to the gentleman, yes; but at this particular moment——

Mr. THOMAS. Is there anything here out of the ordinary?

The CHAIRMAN. There has just been completed a unanimous-consent agreement by which it was agreed that the debate on this amendment would close in 25 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the committee rise, the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not in the House. We are in the Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the water-power bill (S. 1419), found itself without a quorum; whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 206 Members, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole, answered to their names; and he reported the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] a few minutes ago asked if he could make a motion to strike out the enacting clause. After investigating the precedents the Chair is of the opinion that any member of the committee may move to strike out the enacting clause of a bill at any time after the first section has been read and before the last section is read. Therefore, if the gentleman desires to make his motion, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand that I have five minutes now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes upon his motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

I am for the development of the water power of this country. I may be wrong, as I frequently am, but I do not believe that this is a bill which will reach that result. I believe this bill will put the water power of this country in the hands of the monopolies of this country. I believe that this bill will take away from the various States of this Union any control over the water power, if perchance the Supreme Court of the United States should decide that this bill is constitutional, which it will not do if it follows the constitutional law of this country.

Unfortunately I have not been here for the last several days. I went to Kentucky with the funeral train of Senator Ollie James, one of the grandest men and grandest Democrats this Union has ever seen. [Applause.] But my understanding is that the proponent of this bill, Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee, a most eloquent gentleman [applause], and a man for whom I have the highest personal regard, has said that the President is in favor of this bill, and he has produced some letters from the President which he said tended in that direction. I was not here and did not hear the letters read, but other Members says that the President's letters tend rather in the other direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. So I do not know. I am going to leave that proposition to Mr. SIMS and to the Members of this House who heard the persistent and eloquent gentleman make his remarks upon the subject. But I do know that Mr. THOMAS is not today, he never has been, and he never will be a rubber stamp in any vote that he casts. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I am for this war. [Applause.] My ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War, my ancestors fought in the War of 1812; my father was a Federal soldier and upheld the flag of this Union. [Applause.] I am for my country always, first and last, and I am for my country against any foreign foe, even though I knew that my country might be wrong and that foreign foe might be right. But why should we turn over the water power of this country to a lot of monopolies? That is what I want to know. [Applause.] I am not in favor of that. There is no man, I do not care who he is, who can take up this bill and read it and say that it will help us to win this war. It authorizes a commission with $100,000 to start with, and that is just the ante that is put up, like going into a jackpot, you know. [Laughter.] The $100,000 is the ante, but when the United States gets in it will be millions of dollars, and I do not believe that this Congress has the right to deprive the States of this Union of their water power. That is what this bill does. Anybody knows who can read it. You do not have to read more than a line or two until you see what it means. It simply takes from the States all control over their own streams and their own water power and vests it in a commission of the United States, which means—you know what it means—a commission of monopoly, that is all. The question is, Are you going to do it, gentlemen? I am not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I end my few remarks by moving to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. The question is on his motion.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 1, noes 65.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. FRANK CLARK said he was going to vote with me, and he has gone back on me. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special agreement there are 25 minutes debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. I sincerely regret that as chairman of the Joint Water Power Committee he did not present the views contained in this amendment to the committee when we had it under consideration in executive session. Had he done so, an opportunity would have been afforded to examine more carefully into the merits of the proposition and to have determined our course thereon. Instead of that, the amendment is presented to the House only a few moments before its consideration. In view of the urgency on the part of the chairman of the Water Power Committee to secure indorsement of the original water-power draft presented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], I am astonished that the gentleman from Tennessee should present before this House for its consideration an amendment that so radically changes one of the fundamental principles of the bill. I do not believe that the premises upon which he bases his argument for the support of this amendment are well founded. He goes on the assumption that water power can be developed at $75 per horsepower for construction cost. If I recollect aright the testimony, the cost in California has averaged $150 per horsepower, and in other sections of the country, in the mountain region, the cost ran up to $250 or $260 per horsepower. The chairman takes the average of only $75 for the basis of his calculation. That makes an error in his whole calculation, and therefore we can not take the figures he has given us as the basis for the determination of whether or not his amendment is meritorious.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the gentleman from Tennessee indicated that $75 will be the investment for each horsepower created, or does he mean that the cost is $75 a horsepower for generating?

Mr. ESCH. The cost of the construction of the power plant.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course $75 is absurd; it could not be done.

Mr. ESCH. I am calling attention to the fact.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand; but I wanted to know what the gentleman meant.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman from Tennessee begins with a minimum of 50 cents per horsepower per annum for the first 10-year period and ends with $2.50 at the end of 50 years. There is a project on the Columbia River that will develop 250,000 horsepower. That would mean a charge in a single year of $625,000. The plant will cost $20,000,000. There would be a charge of $625,000 per annum for a plant supposed to cost $20,000,000. You can readily see what a tremendous percentage on the cost this company would have to pay merely as a compulsory amortization fund. In addition the company would have to maintain the depreciation and provide for renewals, maintenance, and so forth. It seems to me, when you look at it in that light, the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee is impracticable and will result in absolute discouragement of water-power development.

I wish to state in this connection that the main objection to bringing the two Houses together in the last two Congresses on the Adamson bill was the matter of a charge. I feel a reasonable assurance that if the language is retained in the bill to the effect that the commission shall have the right to fix the charge, without fixing any minimum or maximum, that it will be acceptable to the Senate. It was because of the provision we had in the last Adamson bill that the committee of conference between the two Houses was kept at a deadlock for seven long weeks and was finally compelled to desist and report a disagreement. I trust, in view of these facts and in view of the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee may jeopardize the fate of the bill in conference, that the amendment will not be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement, but not to repeat any argument. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated the facts—I did not offer the amendment in the committee, and I will state the reason: The fact is, although I had thought along this line, I had nothing that I could offer definitely, and did not do it because I had arrived at no conclusion when the bill was reported. I stated when I offered it that only within the last few days had I got the calculation made as to the effect such a charge would have on the development of water power. What I said about the average cost of the development of water power being $75—I may not be accurate in that—but it would not make a particle of difference whether I was or not, because this is a minimum charge and the commission will be permitted to increase it. This amendment would amortize completely in 36 years 4 months and 15 days at capitalization. That includes only the power-plant property—all except distribution lines and transmission lines. The cost of electric installation in California on the average is shown by Mr. BRITTEN, as I now recall, and as I understand it includes for the property of his company transmission lines and distributing plants, as also irrigation plants, and then they built a large number of storage dams and the cost was way above the average of what it would be in the United States as a whole. I got at the cost of the installation in Canada and as far as I could in the United States east of the Mississippi River, and it was $75 per horsepower on an average.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have some curiosity to know why the gentleman in his amendment excepted transmission lines and distribution lines.

Mr. SIMS. The bill itself practically excepts them. Both the bill handed to us by the President and the bill brought to us by Mr. Merrill excepts them—one not to exceed the actual cost and the other the net investment, and both provide in addition severance damages. I can not think that they would want to sever it from any other project property except from transmission lines and distribution plants, because in the transmission one line may be 10 miles and another 100 miles, and one a high-tension line and another a low-tension line, and the distributing plants may be much larger in some places than in smaller places. The object is to bring the power plant itself into control of the United States rather than the distributive facilities or the transportation lines.

Mr. ANDERSON. What would be the value of a water power severed from the transmission line?

Mr. SIMS. What would be the value of a transmission line severed from the water power? That would be left to negotiation; the Government certainly would not destroy, dismantle, and stop the transmission of electricity.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee I desire very respectfully to protest against this amendment, which is a change of the whole scheme of the bill, of the scheme that was submitted, and the scheme that was considered. We are trying to introduce a bill to encourage capital to take care of water power—and it has been told to you over and over again that we have had water-power acts inviting capital for the last 25 years, and that capital will not touch them because of the various restrictions. This amendment now proposes that capital must pay for the project twice over. This would say to them, "Come in and build this dam, but if you do it we will charge enough every year to make you pay for it over again before your term is up," under what we are pleased to call compulsory amortization. That is to be done whether they are prosperous or not; whether they have profits or not they must go into their pockets and pay twice over by the end of the term. At the end of the term the United States shall get the whole dam and improvements for nothing. That was not the object of this legislation as stated. Two years ago Secretary Garrison was before us, and he saw that what we wanted to do was to encourage the giving of power to the country, and if the licensees do well we expect to renew the lease to them, if they are honest and fair in their rates. If they make profits, there is a provision that surplus profits over a fair return—or, at least, a part of them—shall be applied to paying for the original investment; but Secretary Houston said when he was asked the question by Mr. SIMS in regard to compulsory amortization whether he intended to have it, he answered (p. 652) only "to the extent that there may be surplus earnings arising from the rates fixed by the State or Federal Commission beyond what would be adjudged to be a fair rate of return upon the investment." He continues (p. 652): "The amendment does not require that amortization reserves sufficient to extinguish the entire investment be accumulated during the period of license; but it does require if incomes arise from the rates in excess of what would be adjudged to be a fair return such excesses should go into an amortization reserve and should be deducted from the amount adjudged to be a 'fair value' under the original bill or from the 'net investment.'" That is fair. The clause of the bill (sec. 10d) goes a little further. If by the terms of the license—8 per cent, we will say, upon the original investment or 5 per cent or any rate of per cent was adjudged to be a fair return which the licensee may make—he may not make unfair profits, four or five times that. One per cent upon the original investment would in 50 years pay all off and 2 per cent without interest would also pay all off. If there is 10 or 20 per cent above a fair return, what is to be done with the balance? The bill answers this. It provides that the commission may reduce the rates so as to give the advantage to the consumer and prevent such excessive profits and it also has in it a provision which I think is a fair one, by which the license, after fixing what is a fair return, may provide that anything above that shall not only be liable to a proper amount for amortization, but also may provide by contract what proportion of any such surplus earnings of any particular year or years shall be returned to those who have paid the rates and, therefore, be a deduction of rates. It does not require that, but leaves it as a possible thing in the license.

The license is very carefully provided for in a fair way, so as to provide for a fair return. It does not force the licensee to take less than a fair return or to pay capital from out of his own pocket, but it does provide that if there be more than a fair return the license may provide for paying back the investment, leaving it free to the United States to deal with it at the end of the term. It likewise provides that the commission may reduce the rates or may agree on a reduction of rates by the licenses. All this is fair. Let us not change this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, listening to the reading of the amendment, I have been wondering whether it is the intention of those in charge of the legislation to develop the water power of the United States, and I have reached the conclusion that they are not in favor of the development of that water power.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman should not charge anyone but myself.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is in charge of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. There are three of us in charge of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. My own thought is that if we expect to develop the water power we must encourage investment. To encourage investment we must be fair, and you can not convince people that you are fair if you fix an arbitrary price that the investor must pay to the Government of the United States, which arbitrary price may be a very unjust price, and would undoubtedly prevent him from investing his money in your enterprise. I apprehend that the purpose of the legislation is to encourage investment, but if you enact the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] you discourage it. There is a commission proposed in this bill, and what could be more fair than to leave to that commission and the investor the right to negotiate as to proper terms? If you do that, you enter upon the consideration of the proposition with a full knowledge of the fact that the negotiations are going to be conducted in the interest of the Government and not unfairly to the investor. We are in no position here to say arbitrarily what the charge should be. We have made no scientific study of this question, and is it fair for us who have made no scientific study of a question to impose a burden upon this legislation that will prevent the investment of capital and the development of the water power? What is the purpose of consuming all the time that this House has consumed, if at the end of all that time we kill the bill? It would be infinitely better to kill the bill than to pass it with any such provision in it as that proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, who has charge of the bill. What we want to do, what we ought to do, is to exercise ordinary vision, ordinary horse sense. We ought to act as ordinary men, determined to do the thing that should be done, and when as ordinary men we have reached a conclusion after prayerful and careful and fair consideration the chances are that we have reached a conclusion that will meet the approval of every other ordinary man in the United States.

That is what we ought to try to do. We are not supposed to be versed in all the intricate problems involved in the development of hydroelectric energy, and I apprehend that the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill who introduces this amendment has no more knowledge of the cost of the development of water power than the man in the moon. He has no scientific knowledge of the construction of water-power plants. He is not an engineer. He has not the technological training that would permit him to give scientific study to the question and without that and even with that as a Member of Congress he would not have the time to give the study to it that its importance demands. The time has come for those of us who have been sitting around here waiting for a word of wisdom to be dropped from high places, from the great minds of the men who have been considering the questions involved in this intricate problem, to say something about the absurdity of the questions that are proposed for consideration in this body, and this is one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair desires to state in reference to the time that there are only six minutes left.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I had three of those reserved under the agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. I had five. I am perfectly willing to divide the time.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask that the time be extended to 15 minutes to give myself two minutes to deny anything that might come up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to understand who is to be recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. SINNOTT are both on the committee and Mr. DEMPSEY is almost a member of the committee, because he has given us a great deal of assistance.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I arise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, principally for the reason that the burnt child dreads the fire. On the 20th of August I delivered a speech in the House in support of the net-investment amendment which was proposed to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture. That amendment was submitted to the committee on February 27. The bill was reported out, I think, on June 28. I supposed I had a perfect right to support that amendment in a speech on the floor of the House, but two days after that speech was delivered and over six or seven months after the amendment was presented to the committee we received a letter from the President of the United States, and in that letter, directed to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], written on August 26, in reply to a letter from the gentleman from Tennessee dated August 22, in which the President says:

> I did not see the draft of amendments to the water-power bill which were introduced by Mr. Merrill and his associates after the bill was put in the hands of your special committee. I do not approve of them, and it is my earnest hope that the Congress will see fit to pass the bill as it was originally drafted and provisionally agreed upon in our informal conference.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee has admitted that the amendment which he has offered to-day has not been submitted to the President. I do not propose to have my fingers burned the second time. We learn from the gentleman from Tennessee the proper modus operandi of getting a bill or an amendment properly dry kilned for submission to the House. On page 9797 the RECORD shows the proper method, which he has not followed in the present instance. He has not submitted this amendment for presidential approval. For that reason, if for no other, I feel justified in opposing it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. My time is too limited to yield. On August 31, page 9797, the RECORD shows the proper modus operandi and genesis of an administration bill. An interview is had with the President. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is permitted to utter 10 words in behalf of the bill they were considering. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is permitted to utter 28 words, according to the testimony of the gentleman from Tennessee, and a part of those were uttered facetiously, according to the same testimony. The chairman of the great Committee on Rules [Mr. POU] is accorded 23 words in the drafting and in the consideration of this important bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is accorded enough words to fill a half column of the RECORD. And that is the way an amendment or a bill should be considered. That is the way it should be properly dry kilned before being presented to the House, and the amendment which has been presented to-day by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has not gone through that procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment brings up the question whether or not we are to have a water-power bill. It was criminal folly in this Nation to allow 200,000,000 horsepower to run to waste as we have up to this time. That folly became intensified when by war the need for fuel and power was vastly increased. The President saw the situation, came before Congress in a special message, and asked for it, and as a result this committee was appointed, and it has now under consideration this bill. There has been one obstacle to the passage of all water-power bills in the past and that is this: The two Houses, the Senate and the House, have been utterly unable to agree upon principles governing the passage of such an act, the underlying principles and the chief item of dispute has been the question of whether or not a charge should be imposed on licenses. Now, if we introduce any amendment to this bill, in the name of common sense let us make it as easy as we can for the conference committee to agree. Our final object is to get a bill. Why should we, when we introduce amendments, seek to get further away, seek to make it so that it will be difficult if not impossible for the conference committees of the two Houses to agree? Why, you ask the chairman of the committee in the Senate to-day, "Are you going to get a water-power bill?" He says, "Yes." "Why?" "Because the necessity is so great that the House conferees will surely recede."

You ask those who will constitute the conferees of the committee of this House, "Are you going to be able to pass the water-power bill in the face of the great necessity of the country and the insistence of the President?" And the members will say, "Yes; we are going to pass it." "Why?" "Because the Senate will recede under those circumstances," and here with that great obstacle in our way, in the face of the fact that the bill has been held up again and again, in Congress after Congress, we are unwise enough to introduce amendments which put them farther apart, which makes it more difficult for us to agree. Gentlemen, in the name of common sense, wherever an amendment is introduced let it be one which will facilitate and not make more difficult the securing of the passage of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. What is the status of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The status of the time is that there is five minutes remaining, and it has been accorded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], a member of the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has assumed that the bill has been reported by the committee and members of the committee without knowledge of the facts. I do not claim to be an expert on water-power development, but fortunately we have the evidence of a gentleman who is an expert on that subject, one who has probably had more experience than any man in this country, Sir Adam Beck. And, for the gentleman's information, I read from his testimony as to the cost. On page 714 he says:

The average price of power or cost of power delivered to 225 municipalities in the Province of Ontario is under $18 a horsepower. We have made reductions annually. We were obliged to make reductions because the excess surplus earnings of the municipalities were such that if we had continued the rates that were originally established, based on one-half the cost that they were buying or securing power for previous to our coming into the field, we would have had such a large surplus that the whole debt of the municipality would have been wiped out in 10 or 15 years.

As the gentleman knows, in Canada they have municipal ownership, amortizing the plant in 25 years. The gentleman states the charge at which it was fixed originally it would have amortized the plant in 10 or 15 years. The cost in Canada is $18, it being half the price charged on this side as fixed by the State service commissions.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman hear me say anything about the cost?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman asked a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Not a word.

Mr. HAUGEN. I refer to the colloquy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin.

On page 715, Sir Adam Beck had this to say:

The average domestic and commercial rate in 225 municipalities is 2½ cents per kilowatt-hour; $18 per horsepower is the average price that we charge the municipality for electricity delivered, stepped down, ready for distribution.

On page 716, Sir Adam Beck has this to say:

We are able to sell power to the citizens of Windsor, which is only 25,000 population, immediately opposite Detroit, where they have over half a million population, at 40 per cent lower rates than they are receiving in the city of Detroit. And are meeting all our obligations.

And then he goes on to state that over in Buffalo the price fixed by the public-service commission is twice the price fixed on the Canadian side.

In my opinion the amount fixed by the gentleman from Tennessee would amortize the plant in the time stated.

Mr. LITTLE. What authority has the commission to refuse a contract it would make with any individual for a length of time? When can it get authority to make a new one?

Mr. HAUGEN. It has no authority whatever. It is specifically stated in this bill it shall not be changed without mutual consent of the commission and licensee.

Mr. LITTLE. If they let a man have water at a nominal rate, do you mean that he will perpetually retain it at that rate?

Mr. HAUGEN. For the term of 50 years.

Mr. LITTLE. Do you think that would be right?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not think it is right.

Mr. LITTLE. Neither do I.

Mr. HAUGEN. Neither do I agree with the contention that we should turn over the resources without compensation. The contention is that Congress has not the power to fix the price; if it has not, it has not the power to fix the price suggested in this bill. So that argument falls to the ground. The question is, Are we going to part with these valuable resources without compensation? The bill provides that the compensation shall be fixed by this commission, and the price fixed by the commission will most likely be 10 cents per horsepower.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think you should part with these values without proper compensation.

Mr. HAUGEN. I hope there will be enough gentlemen who think so, in order that the Government interests shall be taken care of and safeguarded in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to use his two minutes?

Mr. SIMS. I believe not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMS: Page 37, lines 4 to 9, inclusive, strike out the following: "And the license may provide as to any balance of said surplus earnings that the same in whole or part shall be used in reduction of rates and annually divided and repaid to and among the persons who have paid such rates according to the amount paid by each such person during the year."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph has been passed over by agreement.

Mr. SIMS. I know; but I waited for the gentleman from New Jersey to return to the Hall, and he is present now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understood this was to be passed over until we took up——

Mr. SIMS. This has nothing to do with the net investment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. This has all to do with it.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, well, if it has I was entirely in error. I am not objecting to it on account of net investment at all. My objection would be just as strong to it if any other measure or standard was adopted. I am glad you called my attention to it. We will pass this over until we reach section 14. But I want to state this to the gentleman from Mississippi, if I may, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, that if the net investment is retained, or if it is rejected, I am still just as much opposed to this portion of the bill, and therefore I want to return to it, regardless of the action that may be taken on the question of net investment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But it is not to be considered until that time?

Mr. SIMS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Page 37, line 23, after the word "or," strike out "irrigation" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "other beneficial."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, my idea is to make this provision conform to the language on page 35 by specifically eliminating the word "irrigation." I doubt the propriety of leaving that language in there, but at the same time I do not move to strike out the words "other beneficial uses." I leave the word "use" stand, so as not to cut out the "other beneficial uses." But I do not want to specifically mention "irrigation," for the reason I stated in my other motion to strike out that word; and I think this word "irrigation" ought to come out, and if in lieu thereof we insert the words "other beneficial uses," similar to the words in line 18, page 35, I do not think the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] can seriously object.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is it the purpose to exclude irrigation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does it do that under the amendment? Would not that be included in "other beneficial uses"?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It may possibly be. But it is not a direct authority to supersede western irrigation laws.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Why not say, "other beneficial uses, not including irrigation"?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Out of deference to my friend from California [Mr. RAKER], if section 27 stays in the bill, I am willing to leave that in there. I think the Senate will undoubtedly strike it out. I have no doubt whatever but they will have a clause in there to the effect that no beneficial use in this bill shall be construed to in any manner interfere with irrigation or the exclusive right of the Western States to have the exclusive control over the waters within the streams of those States; that is, the nonnavigable streams. But in so far as the amendment is concerned, I have no objection to having it comport with line 17, page 35, I am moving to substitute for the word "irrigation" the words "other beneficial," which make it broader than it is now. I think the amendment ought to be, and I hope will be, adopted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed to think that my friend from Colorado takes the view on this subject that he does. Now, he does not see anything wrong in regard to using this power for mining. Think of it! In his mining State you can develop the power for mining, which was not in the prior amendment. But to give the farmer the use of the water to develop power for irrigation should not be permitted, according to his theory. Clearly there is a misapprehension on this matter. From a reading of the prior acts and the rules and regulations under it the gentleman must know that those who obtain a right of way can only get a revocable permit from the department, even for irrigation purposes. Under the rules and regulations provided for in the act as regards power purposes, under the act of February 15, 1901, they get only a revocable permit, and in that provision the department requires them to show what power could be developed for irrigation purposes; and here, where there is to be a development of power for irrigation in connection with the water-power development, it is proposed to cut it out. It is to say that here, where there is a stream whereby you can develop, say, 100 horsepower and at the same time irrigate a thousand acres of land, you should prohibit irrigation of that 1,000 acres of land and let the water run to waste. That is the position taken by my distinguished friend from Colorado. It can be nothing more and nothing less. I read:

Provided, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent that such power is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes, and that licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or irrigation use in projects of not more than 50-horsepower capacity may be issued without charge.

Now you give him the right to use it for domestic purposes without charge. You give him the right to use it for mining purposes without charge, when all of us who come from the mining country know that the old mining ditches that were made in 1849, 1850, and on to 1861 and 1870 are now the irrigation ditches of that country which have so improved the country. But it is now contended by the gentleman from Colorado that even if you can develop a project whereby 50-horsepower capacity can be had, you are prohibited from using the water for irrigation.

Now, I can not conceive of any piece of legislation with more folly in it than that proposition in a country where we need the water for irrigation, where one of the things in addition to domestic use and for mining is the use of the water for irrigation; when at the same time with the development of say not exceeding 50-horsepower capacity you can get it without charge, but you are not entitled to use it for the irrigation of small projects, when what the West is built up upon is this irrigation of small projects. But here we have reversed the policy with the intention to say that no man shall hereafter develop these small projects where there are 160 acres, or 500 acres, or a thousand acres, where the water shall not be used for irrigation or development, where if by chance there shall be any hydroelectric power developed the water can not be used for irrigation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the use of this power for irrigation would not be included in the term of "beneficial use"?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate be closed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I did not use five minutes. I ask five minutes in reply.

Mr. SIMS. But we thrashed it out thoroughly before.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I thought we had settled it before.

Mr. RAKER. We have not settled it, and we will not settle it until we settle it right. I ask five minutes in which to proceed.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and 5 minutes to accommodate the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. It is understood that the gentleman from California shall occupy five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Awhile ago the gentleman happened to get a vote striking this word out of the bill, when it was put in the bill after months of consideration and hearing by the committee. The committee placed it in the bill and reported it to the House. The fact that the gentleman got it stricken out is no sign that it is going to be defeated. It is no sign that the Senate is going to strike it out. We are not legislating for what the Senate is going to do. We are legislating here for those things that are right. We are trying to place in this bill provisions that will develop the country instead of retarding it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado broaden the use of this rather than restrict it, and might not irrigation be included within the term "beneficial use"?

Mr. RAKER. Surely, that might be. Now, here is another thing to show the inconsistency of the amendment in moving to strike out the word "irrigation." Mining was all right. It was not provided for. It was not included by specific words and designations, but in this provision we now see that a man may use the water for the purpose of mining, designating that mining is one of the important things, which it is; but when you desire to use the same water, the same land, and the same conditions for irrigation after you have developed your hydroelectric power and the water has gone over the wheel, the gentleman desires to have it stated in specific terms that it shall not be used for irrigation. I want to assert as an absolute fact, and I am satisfied it can not be contradicted by any engineer who has assisted in developing water and made surveys in the western country, that of every project that has ever grown up over half of the cost goes for the benefit of irrigation, and there is no doubt of it in the world. I know in my own State they are trying to put in a plant for hydroelectric energy. If you prevented the use of the water for irrigation you would make a desert out of a tract of possibly 5,000,000 acres of the finest land on earth. The plant which was established to give water to Los Angeles it turns out now could have been constructed solely and entirely for hydroelectric energy, but they are using it for the benefit of the irrigation of the lands adjoining the town and along the conduit; and the same is true of every other project and every other place, because if you stop to think, you use the land anyhow by the reservoirs, you take up the water and dam it for the purpose of confining it, so that an equal amount of water each day, each hour, and each minute will flow over your wheel to generate electricity, but that same water can be picked up and used for irrigation.

Very often the construction of the entire system would have been justifiable for irrigation alone, and if you say that you shall not make the plans and specifications so as to use the water for its highest beneficial purposes, namely, for hydroelectric energy and for irrigation, you are depriving the country of its most important use, namely, for irrigation, simply because you call this a water-power bill; in other words, a hydroelectric bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Just for one question.

Mr. WALSH. It says this license for this purpose may be issued without charge.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, that would not prohibit them from issuing a license with a charge.

Mr. RAKER. Possibly not; but with the mining and domestic and municipal purposes right side by side with the irrigation plant of the man who has his land under irrigation, why should he be charged while the man engaged in the mining enterprise is not charged? Why should we not use the water for all it is worth, and why should you make a distinction?

Mr. WALSH. There is no reason whatever.

Mr. RAKER. I simply make again this assertion, that there is not a project constructed in the West, and there never will be one as long as the earth revolves as it does and the climate continues as it is, so that irrigation is necessary, when you build a dam for a reservoir, where from 50 to 90 per cent of the construction will not be justified for irrigation alone.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, apparently the gentleman from California and I do not understand each other. I could admit practically everything that the gentleman has said. I am just as much in favor of irrigation development as he or anybody can possibly be. I have been interested in irrigation nearly all my life. I am called "The Father of the Water Rights on the western slope of Colorado." As the first referee of the district court of that entire country I adjudicated, determined, and established all the priorities and water rights, including over a thousand decrees, covering that vast, new northwestern part of our State, and settling the water rights of thousands of people. I have practiced irrigation law for over 30 years, and if there is anybody in the West who is interested in irrigation development I certainly am, and I would be the last one to ever knowingly interfere with any western development. I have always jealously guarded on this floor the rights of our Western States, and whenever I see the camel's nose of Federal bureaucratic control getting in under our tent of State irrigation rights I am fearful as to what it will lead to. I confess I am exceedingly incredulous about it. If you will read this language of this subsection here, the provision that we are now referring to, it provides that for a limited amount of use of water, including irrigation, no charge may be imposed.

Let me ask the gentleman from California, has the Federal Government or anyone else ever in the history of the West had any right to charge for the use of unappropriated water for irrigation? Never on earth. They have no authority to charge us a royalty for our water for irrigation, and I do not propose to consent to it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not just now.

Mr. RAKER. May I answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not now. The gentleman can do so in his own time. I do not propose to permit any law to give the Government or anybody a right to impose a royalty charge upon or regulate any water for irrigation. If the law provides that the people may use 50 horsepower without charge it directly implies a charge for all above that amount. I do not care whether it is 50 horsepower or whether it is only a thimbleful of water, Congress has no right to charge us for it. It belongs to us. It is our heritage. Free water for irrigation has built up the West, and nobody can rightfully put any charge on it and nobody can lawfully put any 50-year limitation or any other limitation upon our constitutional right to the free and unimpeded and perpetual use of the waters of our streams for any beneficial use we see fit to make of it.

The only condition or limitation that the law or anybody can put on the use of its water in the West is that if a man does not use it beneficially and continuously it goes back to the State government. As long as he uses it it belongs to the person who appropriates and beneficially uses it, and the use is free and without charge. I want to prevent anything getting into this bill that will allow some Federal commission in Washington to regulate or limit or control or put a charge on the use of water for irrigation in the West. That is our individual business. That is all there is to it, and all I am trying to prevent. I do not want every westerner to be compelled to consult some Federal agent every time he wants to irrigate his potato patch.

Cutting irrigation out of this bill does not prevent people from irrigation development. They can and will, as they always have, develop under the State laws. They will develop under the doctrine of priority of appropriation. That is the way development will be made, and not by Congress or some Federal commission here in Washington, 3,000 miles away, and under such conditions and limitations and upon such charges as they see fit to impose. That is the provision that the gentleman from California would have in, and I am trying to prevent it. I am bitterly opposed to the principle itself of submitting and subjecting and surrendering our vested constitutional right to the use of our own water for irrigation in the arid States to any commission on earth.

It belongs to us by the constitution of every Western State and by every enabling act which permitted them to come into the Union. I do not want to permit a law to be made taking away or jeopardizing that right and giving it to some commission. That is all there is to it, and I ask to have the word "irrigation" struck out in every place except in section 27, where it uses this specific language. What is the use of trying to fudge in, circumvent, and undermine or destroy this section by any subterfuge. Here is the language the committee put in the bill on my motion and after exhaustive consideration. It reads like this:

SEC. 27. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired therein.

That section not only recognizes and protects our plain constitutional vested water rights, but it is fair and honest, and no friend of the West can ever vote to destroy its effect or thwart or nullify its purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 14, after the word "States" insert "or any other licenses."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, that will then read:

When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of navigation dams or other structures owned by the United States or other licensees, in the discretion of the commission the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at periods of not less than 10 years, in a manner to be described in each license.

This provision they have in the bill is so just and wise that it occurred to me that it ought to be extended to cover everything in contemplation in the bill. If it is good for navigation dams, it is good for all other licensees. If it is necessary for the navigation licensees, it must be necessary for others. The time of 10 years gives everybody a time to get started, and it is a good time to readjust. Take the second 10 years, and the licensee might have a license authorizing him to pay a small rate, and by that time he might be making an immense fortune, and yet there would be no way to readjust it because his license runs for 50 years. I do not think it would be fair, because the licensee of a navigation dam might be called on after the first 10 years to raise and raise his payments, and there might possibly be a rivalry between them, and therefore the other licenses ought to be adjusted every 10 years; and that is the purpose of this amendment. This Government years ago gave away to the railroads enough land to have built every railroad that was built, and a great many scandals and robberies would have been done away with if the Government had built the roads and sold the lands. In that event the Government would have made millions. Here you give away untold values, and what do you get? This Government should not let all this get away from Federal control. This plan will be as decisive and far-reaching as the Dartmouth College case. Every 10 years there should be a readjustment of the charges, and now is the time to arrange it. You have had the lesson of the railroad land grants.

I am afraid that you are going to do the same thing now. You are giving away the last great gift in your control, and you are getting nothing for it. I do not see how any man dare vote for such a proposition. This simple three-word amendment will put a stop to the whole business. It will put all the licenses upon the same basis as this navigation-dam license that the bill provides for. It will put all of the licensees on an equality. If you do not insert this amendment one man, 50 years from now, may be rolling in millions while another fellow in the same business a few miles away may be making only a reasonable amount of money.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under this bill all these projects are put under the State utilities commissions, and if they permit anyone to get wealthy out of it, it is the fault of the State in which it is located and not the fault of the commission or of this committee.

Mr. LITTLE. Then why put this provision in that those who have navigation dams shall be readjusted every 10 years? If it is fair for one it is fair for the other.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. One is a project that belongs to the Government, and the other is a project that the Government does not own, where it does not own the water and does not own the site or any part of it.

Mr. LITTLE. Nor does it own any of the licensees, and they should be treated alike. One licensee should pay the same as another. There is no reason why you should give one set of men contracts that nobody else can get. It is not fair or sensible. You are going to be subjected in ensuing years to an immense amount of criticism for the thing that you are inserting in this bill.

If it should turn out that men shall grow rich at the expense of the last great gift of the Nation, and you have not provided that they shall make proper remuneration, every man here will be criticized, and no one likes to vote against a bill that has such splendid opportunities for good in it; but for heaven's sake, make the same provision for every licensee. This is a simple thing. It can be done in three words. It will not disarrange anything in the bill. It will just say to these gentlemen that will get a license to use water anywhere they want to that they shall be subject to the same readjustment every 10 years which the man who gets the license under a navigation dam is subject to, and if it is not right that they should be subjected to that readjustment, you should not ask the other man to be readjusted. The theory that the States can alter any contract made by the Nation in a license is, of course, without any foundation whatever. When this license issues from the Federal Government no State board can interfere. No court will hold otherwise. The commission issuing the licenses will consider the fact that one has the advantage of a Government project and make the charge accordingly. They will take the same fact into consideration every 10 years at the readjustment. But they can not do that if they do not pass my amendment.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, it is astonishing how one with the usual precision of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] should make such a mistake. The difference between navigation dams and a private dam is this: A navigation dam has already been constructed by the United States, so that the licensee of a Government dam is not subjected to the large expense involved in the construction of a private dam. The dam is intended primarily for navigation purposes and incidentally for water power. The gentleman will understand that one of the difficulties in the development of water power by the issuing of licenses for the construction of private dams lies in the difficulty of inducing capital to make investment in these water-power plants. If the price to be paid is to be adjusted every 10 years, would the gentleman invest his money, stock, or bonds in a water-power plant?

Mr. LITTLE. An investor has to be adjusted under the other provisions, does he not?

Mr. GORDON. In the other case the Government paid all of the expense.

Mr. LITTLE. No; it did not.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; it did.

Mr. SMALL. There are sufficient restrictions in this bill already to protect the public, but if an investor is confronted with the contingency that every 10 years there is to be a readjustment of the license terms and the prices which he is to pay, it would be a sufficient deterrent to prevent the investment of any capital and would make the bill absolutely nugatory.

Mr. LITTLE. If there were sufficient provisions, of course, I would not have offered the amendment, at least if they appealed to me. What are the provisions that require a man who takes a license for 50 years to be readjusted or rearranged in conditions according to the development of the business that he is running? Where is there any such provision?

Mr. SMALL. The purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to place dams constructed by private capital in the same relation as the licensee occupies with reference to Government dams.

Mr. LITTLE. Sure. That is, on that point, as far as a readjustment of payments every 10 years to meet conditions.

Mr. SMALL. The present law, which was reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, requires that all Government dams which in this bill are called navigation dams shall be constructed with sloughs and all the other particular appliances of a dam useful for water power, so that when the licensee takes possession of it he has a complete dam fitted for navigation, and also fitted to be immediately applied to the development of water power. That great expense has been borne already.

Mr. LITTLE. The commission will take all those things into consideration when they readjust, will they not, if it is a fair commission? If they will not, we should not have such a commission.

Mr. SMALL. But the gentleman loses sight of the fact we are inviting capital to invest in these water-power plants.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not lose sight of it.

But will not the commission take all those facts into consideration when they readjust? Why, surely.

Mr. SMALL. The weakness of the gentleman's amendment lies in the uncertainty which it involves, and capital will not invest.

Mr. LITTLE. It is not more unfair for one than for another. Each knows just what to expect—a readjustment every 10 years. Why should any Government grant be untrammeled for 50 years?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 18, after the word "works" strike out the semicolon, insert a comma, and add the following language: "that such license shall be upon the express condition that said licensee shall make settlement or compensation for all damages to be caused by the construction of such project according to the laws of the State where such damages are to be caused before the construction of such project."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will meet with the approval of the committee. I think there is nothing in the amendment but what any man on the committee will see is wise and ought to be the law. The bill as drawn by the committee, it will be noticed, is drawn in an awkward way. For instance, it is stated in the bill:

No license hereunder shall have the effect of relieving the licensee from liability for any injury or damage occasioned by the construction, maintenance, or operation of said project work.

But the statement is not made that the licensee shall as a prerequisit before construction pay those damages or cause them to be settled or paid before the work is started. In my mind and due to my experience that sort of a provision is very essential in these projects. I have in my mind, Mr. Chairman, the Mississippi River in particular and some experiences which I have had on that river in watching some improvement work which has been made there. In 1905 the Congress passed an act permitting the Keokuk & Hamilton Water Power Co. to build across the Mississippi River from Keokuk, Iowa, to Hamilton, Ill., a dam for the purpose of generating hydroelectric power. A few years after that act was passed work on this great project was started, and to-day there is stretching across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, and extending over and touching the Illinois shore in the district which I represent a great dam, the second greatest water-power project in the United States. That original act did not provide in any way for any compensation to the Government, and to-day thousands of hydroelectric horsepower are being manufactured at that dam and sold to consumers at high rates and absolutely without compensation to the United States Government at all. I want to say, further, that the original act as it was passed by this House and by the Senate had a provision in it as to damages which reads as follows, and I would like to have the chairman of the committee and the rest of the gentlemen notice this, because it is a provision that is entirely different from the provisions of this act and seems to be a provision that ought to cover the case, but, as I shall state in a minute, does not:

That compensation shall be made by the said Keokuk & Hamilton Water Power Co. to all persons, firms, or corporations whose land or other property may be taken, overflowed, or otherwise damaged by the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said work in accordance with the laws of the State where such land or other property may be situated.

Now, that act provided, if you gentlemen will notice, that compensation must be paid by the Keokuk & Hamilton Water Power Co., according to the laws of the State in which the damage was committed. This act does not so provide. This act has no provision that damage shall be paid as a prerequisite to doing the work. The only difference between the language of the act of 1905 and the amendment I have offered is this, gentlemen, that I have provided in my amendment that the license shall state as a prerequisite that before beginning work the person starting the project shall make settlement for or pay all damages to be caused by the erection of the proposed work. Does any man here in this committee know of any eminent-domain act of any State in the Union that permits the erection of a railroad or any other public utility that does not provide as a prerequisite the payment or settlement of all damages to be caused by the erection of that improvement?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Or the giving of a bond.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The giving of a bond or the payment of compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. I think this is important.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman ask for five minutes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman propose that this shall be a part of the license and a condition on which the license is issued?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. It does not require them to pay whatever this damage may be in advance?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No. I think the license ought to be taken on the condition that the licensee before starting construction will make settlement for this damage under the laws of the State in which the damage is to be caused.

Now, let me tell you what has happened on the Mississippi River. That project has been completed for over 10 years. The Mississippi River has been dammed there, and they have been making this hydroelectric energy, which they have been selling, as I say, at very high rates. There are damage suits pending there now, gentlemen, that have been started in the last year or two, in which hundreds of thousands of dollars in damages are involved. Those claims are pending there yet, where the people can not get their damages, and I do not know when they will do so, although the work has been finished for almost 10 years. The trouble in damming a river like the Mississippi is that nobody knows what damage there is going to be, except the engineers who have charge of the work. With that project the water was dammed for over 50 miles—from Keokuk, Iowa, to 10 miles above Burlington, Iowa—and it took the best engineering skill to figure the back-water curve. The gentlemen from Iowa here in Congress know that these things that I am talking about are true. Perhaps 100,000 acres of land have been flooded by that project, some of the best lands in the United States, and to-day some of the farmers who own those lands are trying to get into court and collect damages from this company, and suits are pending.

Mr. SIMS. The provision was not in the act? It was in the bill but was stricken out somehow?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It ought to have been in the act.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Did the act originally have the language in it that the gentleman wants to put in it, and was it stricken out somewhere in one body or the other?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know about the act of 1905 in its original form, but as it was passed it did not carry it as a prerequisite. It said in that act that they should pay the damage, but did not say when. That is the trouble about it. We ought to say that these licenses are taken on condition that the damages be adjusted before they start work, so that there will be no trouble about the thing, and so that they would have to do what a railroad company has to do, or any other public-service corporation. The licenses should be taken on the condition that they will pay.

Mr. SIMS. And given grounds for revocation of the license in case they do not?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. I do not think they ought to pay anything before they start their work.

Mr. SISSON. They might make it a lien on the property when a judgment is obtained.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think it can be handled under the laws of the various States. Take the State of Illinois; there, before any railway or any other public-utility company starts its actual work it must settle for the damages.

Mr. SISSON. On that piece of property?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. On that particular work. And so should these companies. Before they start their work they ought to settle.

Mr. SISSON. But the gentleman will understand that this difficulty that did occur with the railroads will not occur here. You can not tell just exactly what damage will occur to a piece of land by building a dam below the land, and it is only after the damage has occurred that you can determine with accuracy how much the damage has been. Therefore, unless the gentleman has some suggestion to make as to a lien upon the property of the company building the dam he will have a good deal of difficulty in the enforcement of it prior to the time the dam is built. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is manifest that each licensee ought to comply with the laws of the State in that respect before he starts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me have just one minute.

Mr. SIMS. I think well of the gentleman's amendment. I have no objection to his having one minute.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate close in four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate close in four minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think this matter is of sufficient importance to warrant us in letting the chairman of the committee take up this amendment during the night and look it over and decide for himself about it. My only hope is that if the language does not meet with his approval he can draft something along that line which will cover that point.

Mr. SIMS. If it is the purpose to pay damages according to the laws of the State in which the damage occurs, that might be thrashed out in conference. I want to get this bill into conference sometime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], but I see objections to it. In New York we have no such process by which they must settle for all damages before they can begin work on a project. It seems to me that would indefinitely hold up the commencement of the work. I do not know of any way in which you can settle for these claims except by suit.

Now, if you are going to have condemnation cases, you have to have a trial, and you may have an appeal; and the utmost you can provide for, it seems to me, is certainty of recovery. In the State of New York the way we do these things is this: When a railroad, for instance, wants to take a piece of land, if it wants to take it immediately, the statute gives it the right to enter upon the land upon the giving of a bond to satisfactorily settle damages. That enables the public utility to enter upon the construction work for the benefit of the public at once. If you provide that all these projects must be compensated for and the damages paid in advance, you will put it in an impracticable position. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] says the Keokuk dam has not been paid for in 10 years. You may put off the beginning of the work for 10 years. That could not be done.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see how the damages could arise until after the work had begun.

Mr. SISSON. Perhaps the parties suffering damage could begin suits under the laws of Illinois.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But to make them settle in advance before they can know the amount of the settlement seems to me to be impracticable.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that a vote be deferred on the gentleman's amendment so that he and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] and others may have time in which to prepare an amendment and return to it later. There is no opposition to it. I ask unanimous consent that action on this amendment be deferred until some time in the future. The debate, of course, is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that at a later time the committee return to the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the last part of this paragraph (e), following the paragraph providing that the licenses may be issued for not more than 50 horsepower free of charge. The bill reads:

> But in no case shall a license be issued free of charge for the development and utilization of power created by any navigation dam and that the amount charged therefor in any license shall be as nearly as possible that ascertained by the commission to be the value of such power.

I do not understand whether those sentences refer to the 50-horsepower licenses or not.

Mr. SIMS. There would not be any navigation dam that would develop any horsepower at all that would not develop more than 50 horsepower.

Mr. DILL. Then the provision that there shall be licenses free of charge does not refer to the 50 horsepower?

Mr. SIMS. No.

Mr. DILL. How do you expect to get any development by saying that your charge for the license shall be as nearly as possible that ascertained by the commission to be the value of such power?

Mr. SIMS. As I understand it, that refers only to navigation dams where the Government has incurred the expense.

Mr. DILL. If the licensee must pay the value of the power, how can he afford to put any money into a power plant or plant to develop that power?

Mr. SIMS. You mean to pay the value of the power delivered to the consumer?

Mr. DILL. That is what this says.

Mr. SIMS. Undoubtedly it does not mean that.

Mr. DILL. It is the last part of this paragraph, from line 3 to line 5. It says "the amount charged therefor in any license shall be as nearly as possible that ascertained by the commission to be the value of such power."

If you are going to charge a man the full value of the power which he is given a license to use, how can you expect him to go ahead and develop that power?

Mr. SIMS. I myself never inferred that the man would be charged the value of the power if he has put in his own generating plant or anything of that sort.

Mr. DILL. I think it would be a very short-sighted policy, but, as I read the language, that is what this provides.

Mr. SIMS. We can pass it over and look into it and return to it later.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I intended to ask the same question that has been asked by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I do not know that I want to move to strike it out entirely, but I did want to call the attention of the committee to it in order that it might be remedied, so that the power could be used. In fixing the charge, the commission should take the value of the power into consideration, but if they charged the full value of it there would be nothing which would induce anyone to want to develop it.

Mr. SIMS. This was drawn by a scientific engineer, Mr. Merrill, and I would not like to agree to change language that he had put in after long study without giving him notice.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to call it to the attention of the committee. I think it would be all right for them to take into consideration the value of the power, but if you charge the value of it that leaves no inducement to any man to take the power.

Mr. SIMS. That is a timely suggestion.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This applies only to navigation dams which have been constructed by the Government.

Mr. SIMS. Without any contribution from any other source.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no.

Mr. DILL. It does not say that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. On page 26 we have the definition—

"Navigation dam" means a dam or other work constructed or owned by the United States for the improvement of navigation, with or without contribution from others, from which flows surplus water not needed for navigation that may be disposed of under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So if you have a dam constructed by the aid of contributions from the power companies, if they help to construct a dam to develop water power, why should you charge them the full value of the power?

Mr. SIMS. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that this portion of the bill is intended to apply only to navigation dams that have already been constructed either with or without contributions. It does not have any reference to dams to be constructed in the future, as I understand it.

Mr. DILL. It does not so state.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let us refer to page 26 and see if it does:

"Navigation dam" means a dam or other work constructed or owned by the United States for the improvement of navigation, with or without contribution from others, from which flows surplus water not needed for navigation that may be disposed of under the provisions of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Take the dam in the Black Warrior River, No. 17, as I remember, a 63-foot dam. When we constructed that dam we so laid the foundation that it would be possible in the future to convert it into a water-power dam. Now, suppose some man wants to go there and develop the power at that dam in accordance with the limitations of this bill and under the supervision of the commission. That is a navigation dam. That is what it is put there for, and the commission has no discretion in the matter. If a company wanted to develop that great power there from that 63-foot dam the commission would have to charge them whatever the power was worth, which, of course, means that nobody would go there, because nobody could make anything out of it.

Mr. SIMS. As this was drawn by a scientific engineer, I do not want to make any agreement about it until it is looked into. I do not want this language to mean what the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] and the gentleman from Mississippi think it may mean, or maybe construed to mean. I do not want it to mean that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why would not this amendment cure the objection raised by the gentleman from Washington and by the gentleman from Mississippi: To strike out the period after the word "power," in line 5, on page 38, and insert:

Such a fair return on any amount contributed by licensee.

Mr. SIMS. I would rather we would not amend this now. If I had drawn this bill or if some member of the committee had drawn it I would have no objection, but this is the work of Mr. Merrill in both the original and amended bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. Let us pass it over with a view of getting up an amendment to prevent the possibility of this language being construed as both the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Mississippi construe it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. With unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. SIMS. There will be no trouble about that; there will be no objection to returning to it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will offer an amendment with no idea of its being adopted at this time, so that it may be considered to-morrow.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know about to-morrow, but to be considered when we return to it. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RAKER. I shall reserve an objection to that.

Mr. SIMS. Amendments can be offered, but without debate.

Mr. RAKER. I have another amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. SIMS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add new paragraph after line 5, page 38, designated "f":

"(f) That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction by another licensee of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission may, in its discretion, require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be set forth in the license, and all amounts so received by any licensee shall be paid into a special amortization reserve for the retirement of the cost of such reservoir or other improvement.

"Whenever such reservoir or other improvement is constructed by the United States the commission shall assess similar charges against any licensee directly benefited thereby, and any amount so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to be reserved and appropriated as a part of the special fund for headwater improvements as provided in section 17 hereof."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, just after the Committee on Water Power had closed the consideration of the bill in executive session a communication was received by the chairman from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, forwarding a letter of recommendation from Col. Hugh Cooper, then in France, connected with Government work. In the letter Col. Cooper recommended that there should be some legislation encouraging the construction of storage dams for equalization of the flow of streams.

The matter was submitted by the chairman of the committee to four members, consisting of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], and myself. In the absence of Mr. LEE I submit the proposed amendment. I think we all agree in the principle therein contained, but there may be possibly some difference of opinion as to verbiage. The principle of the amendment is simply this: To encourage the construction of storage reservoirs by licensees upon the stream, to the end that if another licensee builds a power plant on same stream, whether above or below the original licensee's plant, that licensee shall annually pay into an amortization reserve fund a proportion of the cost of operation and maintenance and of interest charges represented by the construction of the reservoir by the first licensee.

In that way we seek to equalize competitive conditions, for if a licensee who builds the reservior stands all the costs of the reservoir and maintenance charges, and another licensee builds another dam on the same stream and gets the advantage of the equalization of the flow of that stream by reason of the construction of the reservoir by the first licensee he has an advantage. If, for instance, they are both engaged in the production of pulp or paper, the one who builds last gets the benefit of the equalized flow and has a very strong advantage over the first licensee who was at the expense of building the reservoir.

The amendment I have offered requires that the money paid by the first licensee toward interest charges and maintenance and operation for the reservoir shall be segregated and put into an amortization reserve, in order, in the course of years, to wipe out the net-investment cost of the reservoir. So that when that shall have been wiped out there will be nothing that will be chargeable to the second or other licensees except purely maintenance and operation charges.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman stated that this charge should be imposed whether the second dam is built above or below.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If the second dam is built above the reservoir——

Mr. ESCH. Oh, no; above the plant of the first licensee, but between that plant and the reservoir.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I understand.

Mr. ESCH. Then the last paragraph of the amendment relates to payments where the Government builds the project, and that is all practically taken care of in section 17 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition upon this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon this.

Mr. SIMS. Three minutes to the gentleman from Washington and two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee how long he intends to sit this evening?

Mr. SIMS. Just as long as gentlemen will stay here with me.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, that is not very long.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I hope the gentleman will wait for a moment or two. I have been practically notified that if we do not get this bill through before Friday then the Committee on Ways and Means is going to take charge, and we will have no chance. We have not had any smooth sailing at all. Something is breaking in all the time. I do not think it is the fault of any member of the committee. I think we should go on to-night certainly until 5.30 o'clock.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will say that he will rise at 5.30 o'clock I will have nothing more to say.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, the real fight on this bill is going to come when we reach section 14, and I suggest that we get down to section 14 before we quit to-night.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; I shall make a point of no quorum if an attempt is made to do that.

Mr. DOREMUS. There is only one more section before we reach that.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; we are now on section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Then the debate is to close in five minutes?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Oh——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of this committee, and I think that I am entitled to have at least five minutes once in a while, whether it amounts to anything or not. I have given years of study to the subject.

Mr. SIMS. If members of the committee want to defeat this bill they know how to do it.

Mr. RAKER. That is not fair.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I know the gentleman from California does not want to defeat it.

Mr. RAKER. This amendment is the result of the deliberations of a subcommittee appointed after we got through with this particular thing.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from California ought to have five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Then I ask that debate close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the adoption of this amendment. Many of the streams that flow down from the mountains have lakes and natural reservoirs on the way above any suitable place for a dam, and if such an amendment as this is not adopted the first man who builds a dam on the streams may be put to the tremendous expense of building a great storage reservoir from which those who will build later will profit. The remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] apply particularly to the mountain streams upon the western side of the Rocky Mountains, and it is there that most of the development under this bill will result.

I have the honor to represent in this House a district that has a tremendous amount of undeveloped water power. The power sites are there and in most cases are already in private ownership. In some instances considerable amounts of money have been spent looking to the development of these sites; but, of course, without legislation they are all at a standstill. Take the Columbia River power sites and the power sites on the streams that flow into it. If a dam is built to establish a reservoir for water to furnish power on one of these streams, it furnishes water for all dams below it, and whoever may happen to build a dam on a power site below should contribute to the cost of the reservoir dam in proportion to the benefits received. This amendment provides that very thing, and I most earnestly hope it will be adopted.

If I may add just a word, I desire to say that I think it is exceedingly important to the country and particularly to the people of the Northwest that this water-power legislation be passed and passed soon. With only 6,000,000 horsepower out of all the water power in the United States developed, the need for legislation that will enable capital to develop this power while at the same time protecting the rights and interests of the people becomes more imperative every day.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, at the time that I asked for recognition I supposed there would be some objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], but it is so eminently proper and equitable that I can not conceive that it will fail of adoption. This certainly must be adopted, because unless such an amendment is incorporated in the bill it will be an injustice to some early builders of water power where it becomes necessary to construct reservoirs, and the amendment is also necessary for the protection of the United States in such reservoirs as the Government shall build. I think it is eminently wise and a necessary amendment to the bill.

Mr. RAKER. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has well said, there was some little question as to the verbiage, but the main object of this amendment was agreed upon by the subcommittee appointed after the committee concluded its work, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin. A number of us thought this object embodied in the bill, but if it is tentatively it is not specifically designated, and it should be provided as this amendment directs. So that not only the Government but the individual who has constructed a dam or project, municipal or otherwise, if its works are used by a subsequent licensee, no matter who it may be, should contribute to the expense that the subsequent works are benefited by virtue of the original work, and I therefore trust that the amendment will be adopted. It should be from every conceivable standpoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, now I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on the question of the irrigation amendment so as to include the questions propounded by me to the various persons who appeared before the committee when this matter was under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph (f), just for the purpose of asking a question. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what it means. This bill, as I understand it, was drawn by somebody in one of the departments. It is difficult to tell by the bill whether it is for the purpose of enabling or preventing the development of water power, and it puts a great many limitations and conditions in giving the commission power to do, I suppose, everything that the drafter could think of while he was writing it. Now, he adds:

> Such further conditions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as the commission may require.

What is the purpose of that?

Mr. SIMS. It means just what it says and just what ought to be in the bill. If we are going to put the administration in the hands of the commission they should have some administrative discretion lodged in them. It is certainly unobjectionable in every sense.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If that is the only answer the gentleman has I will remind him of the fact that about the only discretion given the commission in paragraph (e) the gentleman moved to strike out just now, and now he says they ought to have discretion——

Mr. SIMS. I did not move to strike out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman moved to strike out the first two lines of the paragraph which gave some discretion.

Mr. SIMS. In relation to the charge to be made.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And to provide they should not have any. Now, it does occur to me——

Mr. SIMS. I left them the discretion as to how much higher they might go.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It occurs to me that is going quite a ways to authorize this commission to put all the limitations that you have enumerated or evidently this man could think of——

Mr. SIMS. Not inconsistent with the law.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understand, but it does not permit them to prescribe any other conditions just so the bill did not forbid it.

Mr. SIMS. Not inconsistent with the law; it will have to be consistent.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Unless there is something in the bill which is inconsistent, they can add all the conditions you have enumerated, and if they can conjure up anything else that is not forbidden here they can put that on.

Mr. SIMS. My observation has been that when administrative officers are dealing with special interests they need about all the power they can get and even then they do not cope with the special interests very successfully; they will then often get ahead of them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In view of the fact that the chairman of the committee stated here on the floor of the House at the beginning of the debate that this was not a bill to enable people to develop water power for the purpose of making money out of it, I suppose this is a thoroughly consistent provision to leave in it. If anybody thought they could possibly make some money with all these limitations, the commission will be authorized to prescribe some further provisions to prevent it. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the next paragraph be numbered (g) and the next one (h), so as to correspond with the amendment already adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph (f) will be numbered (g) and (g) numbered (h).

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That whenever application is filed for a project hereunder involving navigable waters of the United States and the commission shall find upon investigation that the needs of navigation require the construction of a lock or locks or other navigation structures, and that such structures can not, consistent with a reasonable investment cost to the applicant, be provided in the manner specified in section 11, subsection (a) hereof, the commission may, either before or after taking action upon such application, cause a report upon such project to be prepared, with estimates of cost of the power development and of the navigation structures, and shall submit such report to Congress with such recommendations as it deems appropriate concerning the participation of the United States in the cost of construction of such navigation structures.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "either" and the words "or after," in line 23, page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 39, line 23, strike out the word "either" and the words "or after."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this section relates to dams and navigable waters where locks are required and can not be constructed by the licensee within the limits of a reasonable investment cost on the entire project. It provides that where such a condition exists the commission may, either before or after taking action upon the application, make a report upon the project to Congress, with the estimate of the cost of the contemplated locks. It seems to me quite apparent that if any report is to be made at all and that report is to be considered by Congress it ought to be made before and not after the report is made by the commission. The proposition is so self-evident as to not require argument, it seems to me, or any further discussion.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I call——

Mr. ANDERSON. I know what the gentleman is calling my attention to, and I apologize for striking out any amendment agreed to by the distinguished gentleman who prepared the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 40 it says:

And shall submit such report to Congress with such recommendations as it deems appropriate concerning the participation of the United States in the cost of construction of such navigation structures.

That means the participation of the United States in paying the bill?

Mr. SIMS. That is what I understand it has reference to. It might be an excessive cost that would be too great for the licensee to justly bear. I suppose that is the object and purpose of it.

Mr. WALSH. And are these the locks or structures that are required as conditions of the license as provided in section 11?

Mr. SIMS. I presume they are. I suppose they are included.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would not the language be clear if we struck out "participation," in line 3, and inserted "contribution," and struck out "in" and inserted "to"?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the licensee shall commence the construction of the project works within the time fixed in the license, shall thereafter in good faith and with due diligence prosecute such construction, and shall within the time fixed in the license complete and put into operation such part of the ultimate development as the commission shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market, and shall from time to time thereafter construct such portion of the balance of such development as the commission may direct, so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such development shall have been completed. The periods for the commencement and completion of construction may be extended by the commission when not incompatible with the public interests. In case the licensee shall not commence actual construction of the project works, or of any specified part thereof, within the time prescribed in the license or as extended by the commission, then, after due notice given, the license shall, as to such project works or part thereof, be terminated upon written order of the commission. In case the construction of the project works, or of any specified part thereof, have been begun but not completed within the time prescribed in the license, or as extended by the commission, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the commission, shall institute proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States for the district in which any part of the project is situated for the revocation of said license, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 26 hereof.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. WALSH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, we have just finished reading section 13. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SIMS. I mean to rise, if the gentleman has no amendment to offer.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I was going to suggest purely a clerical error on page 41, in line 3. The word "licensee" should be "license." It is the first word in line 3.

Mr. SIMS. I was going to say this, that if the gentleman does not object we will read section 14 and not offer any amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there a unanimous-consent request to change the word "licensee" to "license"?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That upon not less than two years' notice in writing from the commission the United States shall have the right, upon or after the expiration of any license, to take over and thereafter to maintain and operate any project or projects, as defined in section 3 hereof, and covered in whole or in part by the license, or the right to take over upon mutual agreement with the licensee all property owned and held by the licensee then valuable and serviceable in the development, transmission, or distribution of power and which is then dependent for its usefulness upon the continuance of the license, together with any lock or locks or other aids to navigation constructed at the expense of the licensee, upon the condition that before taking possession it shall pay the net investment of the licensee in the project or projects taken, plus such reasonable damages, if any, to property of the licensee valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth but not taken, as may be caused by the severance therefrom of property taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the commission. The net investment of the licensee in the project or projects so taken and the amount of such severance damages, if any, shall be determined by agreement between the commission and the licensee, and in case they can not agree, by proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any such property may be located: Provided, That such net investment shall not include or be affected by the value of any lands, rights of way, or other property of the United States licensed by the commission under this act, by the license, or by good will, going value, or prospective revenues: Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands, shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can agree on time for debate. In advance of that I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the amendment which I offered as to amortization, for the purpose of including in it this statement which I had printed and a calculation to show what it would be at different capitalization values.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. In the morning we will take up this net-investment amendment wherever it appears in the bill and debate it, and I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] if we could agree on the time for debate to-night, he to have one half of the time, to yield to whomsoever he desires, and myself the other half?

Mr. ESCH. I will say, Mr. Chairman, it would be probably more advisable to make arrangement as to time in the morning, because I see that most of the Members on this side of the committee are not present, and I do not know how much time they will require. I think we could come to a rapid agreement in the morning.

Mr. SIMS. Very well.

Mr. ESCH. But I would suggest that the chairman of the committee offer such amendments as he has, so that they can be printed in the RECORD and the House may have the benefit of them to-morrow.

Mr. SIMS. I want to offer one amendment, to strike out the definition.

Mr. ESCH. What amendments are to be offered to section 14?

Mr. FERRIS. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the section and insert the original paragraph.

Mr. SIMS. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] proposes to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not ask that it be read, but merely to have it printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD for the use of the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOREMUS. I have an amendment to section 14 which I offer for the information of the committee, to be printed in the RECORD. I would like to have it appear in the RECORD at this place.

Mr. FERRIS. I have offered mine, but it was not read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments offered will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Following are the amendments referred to:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERRIS: Page 41, line 10, strike out sections 14 and 15 and insert sections 14 and 15 of original bill, which read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That upon not less than two years' notice in writing from the commission the United States shall have the right, upon or after the expiration of any license, to take over and thereafter maintain and operate any project or projects, as defined in section 3 hereof, and covered in whole or in part by the license, or the right to take over upon mutual agreement with the licensee all property owned and held by the licensee then valuable and serviceable in the development, transmission, or distribution of power and which is then dependent for its usefulness upon the continuance of the license, together with any lock or locks or other aids to navigation constructed at the expense of the licensee, upon the condition that before taking possession it shall pay the fair value not to exceed actual cost of property taken, plus such reasonable severance damages, if any, as may be caused by the separation of said property from property valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth, but not taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the commission.

"The value of such property so taken shall be determined by agreement between the commission and the licensee, and in case they can not agree, by proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any of such property may be located: Provided, That such fair value shall not include or be affected by the value of any lands, rights of way, or other property of the United States licensed by the commission under this act, by the license, or by good will, going value, or prospective revenues: Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, land, or interest in lands shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the lessee.

"SEC. 15. That if the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the property of the licensee, or any part thereof, as provided in section 14 hereof, the commission is authorized to issue a new license to the original licensee upon such terms and conditions as may be authorized and required under the then existing laws and regulations, or to issue a new license under said terms and conditions to a new licensee, which licensee may cover any project or projects covered by the original license, and shall be issued on the condition that the new licensee shall, before taking possession of such project or projects, pay such amount for the property taken and assume such contracts as the United States is required to do in the matter specified in section 14 hereof."

Amendment offered by Mr. DOREMUS: Page 41, line 12, after the word "right," strike out "upon or after" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "during the continuance or upon."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MASON, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill S. 2493. It is a bill to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The report is No. 263. I will state when the bill is read the reason for the urgency of this measure.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the bill itself, but it hardly seems fair for the gentleman to ask that we pass a measure of this importance with just a mere handful of Members here.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is going to object, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Colorado the first thing in the morning.

Mr. WALSH. That is all right. I will object with that understanding.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Very well.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12835) to provide further for the national security and defense by authorizing the President to control rental charges in certain areas and to amend subsection (b) of section 1 of the act approved May 16, 1918, entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 768), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. KITCHEN introduced a bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BORLAND introduced a bill (H. R. 12864) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by requiring the use of an automatic electric cab signal and train-stopping device by common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 12865) granting an increase of pension to Mattie Hawk; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 12866) granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Beck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12867) granting a pension to Ruth Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 12868) granting a pension to William B. Kimbrel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 12869) granting an increase of pension to Richard S. Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Federal Guards' Relief Association, urging the passage of a bill providing increased pay for the Federal guards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of citizens of Lockwood, Mo., asking for prohibition during the period of the war and demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of citizens of Greene County, Ohio, for a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, in order to relieve those who object on conscientious grounds to the oath prescribed by law for officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), memorial of the National Investors' Protective League, urging opposition to the Gore amendment to the food-stimulation bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also (by request), resolution passed by the joint annual conventions of the Young People's Alliance, the Sunday School Board, and the Woman's Missionary Society of the Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Association, urging complete prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRODBECK: Petition of 61 members of the Kreutz Creek Reformed Church of Hellam, Pa., favoring war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 4, 1918.

Rev. Hugh T. Stevenson, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, Thou in whom we live, move, and have our being, we draw near unto Thee at this hour to thank Thee for the manifold mercies of the past and to ask that Thou wouldst give unto us of Thy Holy Spirit, so that the meditations of our hearts and the deliberations of the Senate and the performance of every duty might be for Thy honor and for Thy glory. Wilt Thou watch over all associated with this body and in authority and in carrying on the work of the Government. Be with our forces on land and sea and air. Continue to direct and lead, and grant, indeed, that we might have that spirit of righteousness that exalteth a nation, that we might not only make the world safe for democracy but by the spirituality of our life make democracy safe for the world. We ask it in the name of the great Master, teacher of us all. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Penobscot, Me., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the American Baptist Publication Society, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented petitions of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Kensington, and Chevy Chase, all in the State of Maryland, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL (H. DOC. NO. 1267).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with amendments House concurrent resolution No. 51, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The resolution refers to the question of printing the pending tariff bill for the use of the Senate and of the House. The House is extremely anxious that the concurrent resolution be passed to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The first amendment was, in line 2, to strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-seven"; in lines 11 and 12, to strike out the words "as a Senate document"; and in line 12, at the end of the line, to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "2,000 for the Committee on Finance."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 27,000 copies of H. R. 12863, entitled "A bill to provide revenue, and for other purposes," together with the report numbered 767 upon the same, as a House document, 2,000 copies to go to the document room of the House of Representatives, 21,750 copies to the folding room of the House of Representatives, and 1,250 copies to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that there be printed 10,000 copies for use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4910) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse to permit the exportation of any work of art purporting to be a gift made by an individual or organization to a foreign nation or municipality, unless by consent of the Secretary of State; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 4911) granting a pension to William Farley; and

A bill (S. 4912) granting an increase of pension to John McMahon; to the Committee on Pensions.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 11945.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is not here and I do not want to take any advantage of his absence, so I feel that I ought to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	New	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Penrose	Thomas
Culberson	Kendrick	Phelan	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Vardaman
Curtis	Knox	Poindexter	Walsh
Dillingham	Lenroot	Pomerene	Warren
Fall	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
France	McCumber	Shafroth	Wilfley
Gore	McKellar	Sheppard
Guion	McNary	Sherman
Hale	Martin	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained on important business.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to perfect the amendment by having inserted in it a sentence which I send to the desk. It will be the third sentence in the amendment. I should like to have the entire amendment read with the sentence inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That the sum of $150,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used for the temporary relief of farmers in the drought-stricken section of the country engaged in the production of staple agricultural products, including live stock suitable for human food.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance out of said sum to banks situated in the drought-stricken section of the country, and which have loaned to farmers engaged in the production of staple agricultural products money at a rate of interest not in excess of the prevailing legal rate and take as security therefor United States bonds, commonly known as liberty bonds, or other securities which may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, an amount not exceeding the amount of such bonds or securities at a rate of interest to be fixed by said Secretary, taking the obligation of the bank for the payment of such advances in addition to the securities held by such bank.

The Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, make advances out of said fund to any State or county government for the relief of farmers engaged in the production of staple agricultural products whenever the authorities of such State and county governments are authorized to enter into a valid legal contract for the repayment of such advances.

All such advances shall be made payable on or before November 1, 1919, and when collected shall be covered into the Treasury and become a part of the general fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary and proper rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section and shall report to Congress at its regular annual session in December, 1919, as to his action in pursuance hereof.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate more than a few minutes on this amendment. I am perfectly aware that it is an exceptional sort of an amendment. It is a sort of an amendment that I have never been able to persuade myself to offer in other years, although frequently importuned to do so. It is exceptional because it is intended to meet an exceptional situation, and only an exceptional situation could justify the offering of a proposition of this kind. Everybody realizes that we are doing a good many exceptional and extraordinary things in these extraordinary times. Of course, we did in other times make an appropriation to meet the distressing situation resulting from the Mount Pelee disaster, and from the eruption of Mount Vesuvius I believe we appropriated money for the relief of Italian sufferers.

This is to meet a distressing situation existing in our own country; and while inspired by sympathy to help others in other lands we ought perhaps to be equally generous toward our own people when the occasion and the circumstances justify and demand it.

Now, we are also making advances and rendering assistance to a great many industrial, commercial, and transportation enterprises in this country. I believe that one great system of railroad has received from the War Finance Corporation assistance amounting to $40,000,000. Other enterprises and other plants are being constructed, the money or capital being, I think, entirely advanced by the Government, security being taken for its repayment. These are all exceptional occasions on the part of the Government. They could only be justified by exceptional circumstances, but these exceptional circumstances, I assume, render them not only advisable but render them necessary. Of course, it is not very easy to temporize or to palter with a necessity.

The first point I will make is that a distressing situation actually exists. I do not think it is necessary to prove that fact; it is known to so many Senators from so many independent sources.

I have here a document to which I called the attention of the Senate a few days ago. It is the bulletin of the Federal Reserve Board issued in December last. It contains a report by Dr. Thompson, of the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture. It is a study made about one year ago as to the financial resources and financial needs of the drought-stricken section in the West. Even at that time—and this relates to the planting season in the fall of 1917 and the spring of 1918—even at that time the financial resources of the banks were insufficient to meet the financial requirements of the farmers in that section.

This report shows that in southwestern Kansas—I take the most extreme case—the banks were able to supply only 44 per cent of the financial requirements of the farmers. In my own State, the northwestern section, adjoining the section of Kansas just referred to, the local banks were able to supply only 49 per cent of the local requirements on the part of the farmers. In other localities it varied from 55 per cent up to, perhaps, 80 per cent, depending, of course, on the vicissitudes of the season and the severity of the drought. This report was made a year ago. The situation has been greatly aggravated since then. A third drought has been added to two preceding droughts. Nothing like it has ever occurred in that section of the country in the memory of men now living.

I send to the desk a telegram which I have just received from the president of the bankers' association of my State. I may say that two or three weeks ago the President set aside out of the $100,000,000 emergency fund $5,000,000 to relieve certain extreme and aggravated cases, I presume with a view to tiding over the situation until Congress could meet and could enact legislation that would afford substantial relief.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question? He has just stated that the President set aside $5,000,000 for relief?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. For relief in what respect, may I ask?

Mr. GORE. That particular fund was set aside to enable farmers to purchase seed wheat for the seeding of their lands this current seeding time, and it is limited to the sections where they have experienced two droughts in succession. I may say the rules and regulations, according to my advices from the banks, render it almost impossible for the farmers to really qualify and obtain the benefit of the fund.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to say that that fund also applied to rye—to wheat and rye.

Mr. GORE. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; it is reported and recommended by a majority of the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The committee was polled?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The matter was not considered by the committee in committee session?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; it was not. As the Senator knows, this bill was reported before the recess.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It purports to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, and so forth, to do certain things. Has the Secretary of Agriculture recommended it?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; he has not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has it been estimated for by any department?

Mr. GORE. It has not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make a point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for. This is a general appropriation bill, and it is a violation of the rule of the Senate which provides that no amendment shall be proposed to a general appropriation bill that has not been estimated for by some department of the Government.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say on that point of order that in the absence of the Vice President, while this bill was under consideration the so-called prohibition amendment was offered to the bill, and the Chair held the amendment out of order. The Senate voted that the amendment was in order. Of course, the discussion on that point of order took a wide range. One of the special points relied upon by the advocates of the amendment was that the pending bill was not a "general appropriation bill," which is the language of the rule. They made the point that there are 14 regular supply bills, 14 general appropriation bills, and that this bill did not come within that category, and upon an appeal the Chair was overruled.

I assume that the Senate by that vote determined that the pending bill was not a general appropriation bill. Their decision must have rested upon one of two facts: Either that the pending bill was not a general appropriation bill within the contemplation of the rule, or else that the prohibition amendment was not general legislation. I can not think it possible that the decision rested upon the latter point; I can not think that the Senate voted that the prohibition amendment was not general legislation, for it answers every point in the definition of general legislation. Not only that but it did not provide for the appropriation of one single dollar. It certainly was not an appropriation; it was not an item of an appropriation bill; it did not undertake to take out of the Treasury one single dollar. Therefore the action of the Senate, it seems to me, can only be reconciled with reason—and I am not sure that there is any obligation requiring such a reconciliation—upon the theory that the Senate voted that this, not being one of the regular 14 supply bills, was not a general appropriation bill within the contemplation of the rule. If that be the Chair's interpretation of the Senate's vote on the subject, of course, this bill is eligible to amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had not hitherto heard the claim made that the general appropriation bills were limited to 14 or to any other mystic or magic number. I had always supposed that the Agricultural appropriation bill, being the regular annual appropriation supply bill for a regular standing department of the Government, and an extremely important and large one, was a general appropriation bill, if there was any such thing as a general appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Just a moment.

Mr. GORE. But the Senator from Connecticut is in error. This is not the regular Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But it is in aid of the regular Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; but it makes provision for special activities.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It supplements the general Agricultural appropriation bill and is in aid of it just as much as an urgent deficiency bill is in aid of a general deficiency bill.

However that may be, Mr. President, whatever the Senate may have voted as to the character of this bill when it was considering the so-called prohibition amendment, I do not think will lie very heavily upon the consciences of Senators in construing the point of order as to this amendment. When the Senate considers prohibition it does some queer things; and I sometimes think certain Senators are suffering under temporary aberration, stimulated by the forces outside of this Chamber, whatever they may be. But, Mr. President, when it comes to a $150,000,000 amendment which has not been estimated for nor recommended by the department of which it purports to be in aid, if there is any doubt about the character of the bill, I hope it will be resolved in favor of economy and in favor of the claim that this is a general appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What has the Senator from Connecticut to say about the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma that a majority of the committee reported this amendment? That is an exception to the rule, which in part reads:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

The Senator from Oklahoma has announced that this amendment has been so reported.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am not prepared definitely and finally to express an opinion upon the question whether the signing by an individual Senator of his name on the back of a bill or an amendment and obtaining in that way enough signatures to make a majority of the committee comes within the rule of the Senate that a bill must be approved by a committee. There was no committee consideration whatever of this amendment. Some Senator says that he has a proposed amendment and he takes it around from one individual Senator to another and those who desire to do so sign their names to it. I do not think that that is what is intended by the Senate rule that there shall be a recommendation by a committee as such, for the committee has never met to consider the subject. I know, however, that that has been done by sufferance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is exactly the situation: If this were a matter of first impression with the Chair the Chair would decide that the pending bill was a general appropriation bill, as the President pro tempore of the Senate decided it to be. There was, however, an appeal taken from the opinion of the President pro tempore that it was a general appropriation bill, and the President pro tempore was overruled.

Not pretending to be a great lawyer, but pretending to know something about legal principles, the Chair will state that the Senate, unless it will reverse itself now on appeal from the present occupant of the Chair, has held that this is not a general appropriation bill. The amendment, therefore, is in order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe I sent to the desk a telegram with the request that it be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary reads as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., September 3, 1918.

Senator GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Few days ago Gov. Williams called conference at Oklahoma City and appointed committee of five to confer with Federal reserve bank, Kansas City, concerning Federal deposits for drought-stricken section of Oklahoma. Gov. Miller, Federal reserve bank, has sent strong telegram to Secretary McAdoo urging deposit $5,000,000 in banks in 27 counties western Oklahoma. Gov. Williams will wire President and Secretary McAdoo. Banks have loaned farmers to the limit of their resources and have, in addition, borrowed and rediscounted through all available sources trying aid farmers. Farmers must have money to buy feed or will be compelled to sell work horses and milch cows and leave farms. Government deposited $5,000,000 with Texas banks. Urge Secretary McAdoo to make deposit of $5,000,000 in banks of 27 Oklahoma drought-stricken counties under same conditions and regulations. Situation serious and acute. Immediate action necessary for relief, in order to keep farmers on farm and raise crop next year.

GUY C. ROBERTSON,
President Oklahoma Bankers' Association.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma, in charge of the bill, whether a bill was not recently passed carrying an appropriation of many millions of dollars for the purchase of seed wheat and other seed grains for farmers?

Mr. GORE. There is an item carrying $6,000,000 altogether in the pending bill, but no such item has been passed.

Mr. THOMAS. My impression was that we had acted upon it in some other bill.

Mr. GORE. No, sir; the item is in the pending bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Then the Agricultural Department has recommended and made estimates with regard to that subject, and has recommended the appropriation of $6,000,000 therefor?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; but I may say that that estimate was made before last October.

Mr. THOMAS. Now the Senator from Oklahoma proposes to add to that $150,000,000?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I do. But I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I intend to reduce the amount, for some Senators seem to level their objections rather to the amount than to the policy, and I want to obviate that objection so far as I can.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall object to the policy, for I think it is a very bad one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator if an additional $5,000,000 for seed wheat has not been set aside out of the $100,000,000 appropriation which was made last year giving, with the appropriation already in this bill, something like $11,000,000?

Mr. GORE. About $11,000,000; yes, sir; $5,000,000 being set aside by the President, but I do not imagine that anybody concludes that that was intended or was supposed to be a sufficient amount. It was made three or four weeks ago during the recess of Congress, and I suppose was intended to be made use of pending the reassembling of Congress. So far as its adequacy is concerned, of course, it does not begin to meet the situation. I suppose that Congress would not be justified, perhaps, in meeting all exactions resulting from this drought. The State council of defense of Texas, however, a few days since adopted resolutions requesting Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 to be used in Texas alone, and it was upon that request that I based the amount contained in this amendment, assuming that Texas would probably represent a third of the drought-stricken area, although I think that is rather a conservative estimate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Secretary of Agriculture had not recommended this appropriation?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that the estimates for the regular Agricultural appropriation bill were submitted, of course, under the law, prior to October 15 of last year. The estimates upon which the pending bill is based were submitted early this spring, and of course this item was not included in the estimates, for this amendment arose out of the drought which began about the middle of July.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, my information may not be correct, but I am informed that the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as the Food Administration and other departments of the Government, including perhaps the Federal Reserve Board, have been considering the subject of relief to the farmers in the drought-stricken districts, and I should like to know from the Senator if it would not be wise for the Agricultural Committee to get information from the Food Administration, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Federal reserve banks, and the Finance Corporation, which is authorized to come to the relief of banks in local communities, as to the conditions, as to how much aid is going to be needed, what can be furnished by the banks, and what can be furnished by the Government, so that we may know just how much the Government ought to appropriate. I am not making any suggestion against relief being afforded.

Mr. GORE. I took this matter up with the authorities in the Department of Agriculture and requested them to submit to me an estimate as to the aggregate amount that would be desirable. They were not in a situation to do so. The only figures they could furnish are embodied in this bulletin [exhibiting], which I have already submitted to the Senate. I made the point in conference with them that these figures were all given in percentages, and that, while they indicated that in a certain section of Kansas the banks could supply only 44 per cent of the capital required by the farmers, they made no indication as to the aggregate amount; but they were not at that time able to furnish any information as to the aggregate amount, and they have submitted no estimate since that time. I was obliged, therefore, to rely upon some other method of arriving at a conclusion. Familiar to some extent with the widespread character of the drought and with its severity and being aware of the fact that the Texas Council of Defense requested $50,000,000, I was obliged to make what will seem to Senators, of course, as a crude sort of a guess, but I was not able to obtain any official data on the subject, although I exhausted, so far as I know the possibility of doing so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether the Finance Corporation is considering the subject of relief to the banks?

Mr. GORE. The Finance Corporation is lending and extending relief, I know certainly, to live-stock producers and is handling the fund set aside by the President through the local land banks. In my State, for instance, the bank is situated at Wichita, Kans., and in the Senator's State, I assume, at St. Paul. They are handling the fund set aside by the President, the $5,000,000 to which I have already referred, through those instrumentalities.

Mr. KELLOGG. But Congress appropriated $500,000,000 for the Federal Finance Corporation and authorized it to sell its bonds. Could not the Federal Finance Corporation extend relief to the farmers of Texas and the Southwest?

Mr. GORE. I assume that it could extend it to certain classes of farmers, particularly to the cattlemen and those who can furnish security measuring up to the standard set by that organization. If the Senator heard the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] on yesterday he will see the infirmity and inadequacy of the existing plan to meet the situation.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the present amendment requires as security United States bonds or other obligations.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. And we can authorize the Finance Corporation to extend this relief if any additional appropriation is necessary.

Mr. GORE. I assume that that could be done; that is a matter of method; but I do not know anything in the nature of things that recommends that as a superior plan to this, although it may be. However, the telegram from the president of the Bankers' Association of my State, which I have just had read, is in line with the provisions of this amendment.

As suggested yesterday by the Senator from New Mexico, a cattleman who wants to borrow twenty-five or fifty or a hundred thousand dollars can afford to make a trip to Dallas, Tex., or to Kansas City, Mo., in order to finance his enterprise. That is not possible for men who are unable to buy feed to feed the three or four head of stock that they must carry over for next year's crop; they can not afford to make a trip to Dallas or to Kansas City.

I do not know any reason why the farmers in the drought section should not be assisted if we are to assist other enterprises in this country. According to my information, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has received assistance to the amount of $40,000,000. I assume it needed it; I assume that the advance was well justified, and I do not complain. I will feel obliged to complain, however, if governmental assistance is to be limited to enterprises of that character. The production of live stock, the production of wheat, the production of grain are quite as essential as is the maintenance of the facilities for the transportation of those products when they have once been produced.

I ask that the letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture from Oklahoma be read. I am trying to demonstrate to Senators the gravity of this situation; I believe that many of them do not appreciate it. I am very willing to change or to abandon this plan and to adopt any other plan that promises results. I ought to say, in this connection, that I have always been very conservative about extending aid on the part of the Government to any class of our people. There is objection to that policy.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand the Senator's amendment—which I have very hurriedly read just this moment—as proposing anything except a loan to banks for the benefit of farmers.

Mr. GORE. That is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's amendment appropriates this money and puts it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GORE. No, sir; the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not so read it.

Mr. GORE. I have modified the amendment in that way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I probably have the original amendment, then.

Mr. GORE. I felt the force of the objection that was urged.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator puts the money in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. And authorizes him to loan it from the Treasury Department?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire of the Senator why he does not simply content himself with authorizing the Finance Corporation's board to loan to banks that have made allowaces to farmers upon collaterals upon certain specific conditions, making those conditions slightly different from the conditions which obtain in regard to other characters of loans?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that may be the way out. That may be a wiser amendment than the one I have proposed; and I certainly shall not insist upon this and hazard any other proposition which might promise relief.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me suggest to the Senator that the Finance Corporation act provides very elaborate and very efficient machinery to enable that board to investigate and ascertain the sufficiency of security.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. It supplies that board with an abundance of money to meet this purpose and also the other purposes which are contemplated in the act. Now, I can not see any reason why we should establish another loaning agency of the Government and put that burden upon the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department is not engaged in loaning money. That is not one of its functions. It has no machinery for the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of security offered, and I wish to throw out that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of the Senator's comment, and it may be the best method of procedure. I may say that the very elaborateness of the machinery of the War Finance Corporation was perhaps the controlling reason which constrained me to vest this authority in the Secretary of the Treasury. I was afraid that that machinery would not be adapted to this particular sort of work. This is a very simple procedure. The amendment is not compulsory. The Secretary of the Treasury would not have to advance one single cent to a single bank in the drought-stricken region.

Mr. SIMMONS. But does not the Senator, if he will permit me, realize that we are going to have a very great demand upon all the money that we have in the Treasury?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. And does he not realize the fact that we have provided a method by which the Finance Corporation can secure money without putting its hands into the Treasury?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. And ought not that to be considered in connection with this loan if it is to be made at all?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from Utah a few days ago in regard to introducing a confusion into the existing system constrained me to strike out "the Secretary of Agriculture" in the present amendment and to substitute "the Secretary of the Treasury." The Secretary of the Treasury, being at the head of our entire fiscal arrangement and financial administration, ought to have a sort of supervision over all governmental activities in regard to finance. I thought this would make a system, and not destroy a system. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit that money in various banking institutions throughout the country. This is all the pending amendment proposes to do. Substantially all it undertakes to do is to select as depositories banks which have made advances to farmers in the drought-stricken region, and to make further advances to them, because the banks have exhausted their resources; their loanable funds have been exhausted; and even where the farmers have security many of them can not make these advances. It was to provide them with funds that this amendment was introduced. I shall not object, and I shall ask before I conclude to substitute "the War Finance Corporation" for "the Secretary of the Treasury." I feel the force of those comments that we ought not to introduce confusion into our system; that it ought to be a system and not a mere medley.

I now ask to have the marked portion of the letter of the commissioner of agriculture of Oklahoma read to the Senate; and I am not going to tax the patience of the Senate more than a few minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The people of this State are in a worse condition than I have ever known them to be. Cattle are going to market on account of the drought, but I can see no way to prevent this with prairie hay selling at $18 wholesale, alfalfa $28 wholesale, and cottonseed meal at $50 per ton. There is absolutely no pasture worth anything; little forage feeds anywhere in the State, and what there is scattered around in spots. The only solution that I can figure out is to market everything that is marketable.

Mr. GORE. Now I ask that the marked section of the letter from Mr. Young be read. He is a prominent citizen of southwestern Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

We had no wheat or oats, and now it develops that we will have no feed and no cotton. This is something that never happened before in Oklahoma. The farmers will either have to have public aid or will have to leave the country. It is almost a public calamity. I traveled through 10 counties in Texas last week in an automobile and find the same conditions existing there. A party in Eastman County told me there were a hundred counties in Texas in this condition. You could see prairie schooners all along the way. People are simply having to leave the country.

Mr. GORE. Now, there is a short letter from a banker in that section which I will ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

FIRST BANK OF ROOSEVELT,
Roosevelt, Okla., August 15, 1918.

Senator GORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Beg to submit you the following information:
1. Our customers owe us $75,000 more than they have deposits.
2. They owe us $27,000 on the third liberty loan.
3. On account of the drought we have no feed, and the cotton is the poorest in 17 years.

Mr. GORE. The country has been open to settlement only 17 years, I will say.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, as follows:

With these conditions we asked to be relieved from participating in the fourth liberty loan.

Yours, very truly,

HARVEY EDMUNDSON, Cashier.

Mr. GORE. I ought to say, in justification of this bank and other banks in that vicinity—I have had a great many letters of the same sort—that while the Government divided into three the installments on the last liberty loan, the banks in that section divided them into four and carried the fourth installment for the purchasers; and that has occasioned the embarrassment referred to.

I shall not multiply letters upon this subject. My mail is crowded with them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not been able to follow the discussion all of the morning, and perhaps the Senator has dwelt upon it; but this suggestion has occurred to me: As I understand the plan proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma in his amendment, it is that these funds may be loaned to the banks, the Government taking as collateral therefor these bonds?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. Then the bank will make its own loans to its customers?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. The Government takes the obligation of the bank as well.

Mr. POMERENE. The Government takes the obligation of the bank, so I understood. Would not these banks, by exercising the rediscount privileges which are given to them by the Federal reserve bank, be able to get the money necessary to accommodate these several communities?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say, in answer to the Senator, that that suggested itself to me; but this is an emergency, and it occurred to me that to vest a larger discretion in the Secretary for making these advances to the banks and passing judgment on the security would be justified under the circumstances. Of course, the rules and regulations of the Federal reserve bank are pretty well standardized.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can understand why our duty should be one thing if there were only one way open to us. I confess that the Senator's statement has appealed to me a good deal; but if we have now the necessary machinery by which these banks can get the funds to loan to their several communities, I do not quite understand why we should adopt some other plan. If it were demonstrated that the banks can not rediscount their paper, and can not in that way get the necessary funds through the Federal Reserve System, then I should look with more favor upon the proposition of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. GORE. Just one moment. Mr. President, I will say frankly that my assumption was that the Secretary of the Treasury under the pending amendment could be more liberal and could adopt more liberal rules and regulations in respect to making these advances to the banks than the standardized rules and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board. But for that assumption, the Senator's argument would, of course, be unanswerable. But we are throwing out a sort of life line, a life preserver; and the situation justifies a little more generosity and liberality, I may say, than a system like the Federal reserve bank, where the securities are the basis of circulation, and where every possible precaution, and even more than that, ought to be taken, and is justified.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it may be of some assistance to the Senators, and has been suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, to have me state at this time the purpose of the amendment which I intend to offer.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Several days ago I introduced a bill which would deal with this matter in very much the way, if not directly the way, that the Senator from Ohio has in mind. Under the existing War Finance Corporation act the banks have a right to take their paper which comes from farmers and stockmen and secure advances upon that paper from the War Finance Corporation; but in order to do that, if the bank seeks to obtain 100 per cent from the War Finance Corporation, it must put up additional collateral to the extent of 33 per cent. The bill which I introduced, and which I purpose to offer here as an amendment to this bill, is really an amendment to the War Finance Corporation act. The amendment simply says:

Except in the case of an advance secured by a loan for agricultural purposes or a loan based on live stock, having in either case a maturity of not exceeding 12 months.

The amendment provides that in the case of such paper, where it is used by the bank to obtain loans from the War Finance Corporation, the bank may obtain 100 per cent advance upon such paper without putting up the additional 33 per cent collateral. This suggestion has had very mature consideration by members of the War Finance Corporation Board and various people who are connected with the live-stock and farming industries of the country. At the present time, under section 9 of the War Finance Corporation act, the War Finance Corporation is making loans directly to farmers and cattlemen. It has established places of business at Kansas City and Dallas, as suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma, and under section 9 of the bill is making loans directly to the farmers and the stockmen, but the machinery is exceedingly cumbersome. The present situation results in an absolute discrimination against the banks that are carrying these loans. In other words, if a farmer goes to the War Finance Corporation directly, he can secure 100 per cent loan upon his paper. Of course, there is security behind the face value of his paper; but if he takes the same paper to a bank and the bank indorses the paper and then takes it to the War Finance Corporation, the bank must, in addition, put up 33 per cent of other collateral. The amendment which I intend to propose later is simply to meet that very extraordinary and unusual situation. If this is done, then the banks of the country that are carrying large amounts of such paper can go with it to the War Finance Corporation and get relief. Of course, the War Finance Corporation has a perfect right to investigate the security and require other security, but this amendment simply gives to the War Finance Corporation the power to make these advances.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator for his suggestion on that point, and I wish to say that I am very heartily in favor of the adoption of his bill as an amendment to the pending bill. It will undoubtedly bring a large measure of relief and will do a great deal to ease up the situation in the drought-stricken country. My belief is that the pending amendment would meet a situation which his, perhaps, will not meet upon that point.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator whether he does not think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico would be much more favorable to the farmers than the amendment originally proposed by himself? I understand that the Senator has abandoned his original amendment and offered another, but the original amendment shows what was in the Senator's mind as the best method of relieving the present situation. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico would be more beneficial to the farmers than the original amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. The Senator's original amendment was to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary of Agriculture—I believe he changed it to the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. To loan to banks that had loaned to farmers upon certain security to the extent of two-thirds of the security or collaterals that they had taken from the farmers.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; where the security was other than liberty bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Other than liberty bonds. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico—which I understand has been thought out very carefully by the War Finance Corporation and approved by it—they would be permitted to loan to banks up to the full amount, 100 per cent, of what the banks had loaned to the farmers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, right there may I interrupt? As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico applies only to cattle paper. Is that true?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought it applied to everything.
Mr. GORE. It applies to agriculture.
Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It applies to agriculture.
Mr. CURTIS. I did not hear the reading of it.
Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It applies to agricultural purposes or loans based on live stock.
Mr. CURTIS. It says "farm loans based on live stock," does it not?
Mr. SIMMONS. No, no.
Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Agricultural purposes or farm loans.
Mr. CURTIS. I see.
Mr. SIMMONS. He is distinguishing farm live stock from agriculture. I do not see much distinction myself, but that is the general proposition of this amendment, and it has the approval of the War Finance Corporation. It applies to all farmers.
Mr. GORE. Mr. President——
Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me just a minute, if he should insist upon his amendment providing for loans to be made in drought-stricken districts he will find all over the United States this year in nearly every State of the Union there are certain sections where they have suffered from prolonged drought, probably not general as in Oklahoma and Texas but in that particular section just as disastrous in many respects. If it is to pass at all, I suggest to the Senator that it ought to apply generally, so that every farmer who can bring himself within the intent of the act may get the benefit of it.
Mr. GORE. There is no doubt of the truth of the Senator's suggestion that droughts have been more prevalent this year than perhaps in any year of our history. The southeastern part of the country is also drought stricken in localities.
I omitted to say that I have a letter from the commissioner of agriculture in Kansas stating that the farmers in that State have suffered a loss of 5,000,000 bushels of wheat, 74,000,000 bushels of corn, and 16,000,000 of oats, as I remember the figures. The secretary of the board of agriculture for Missouri, a State usually exempt from drought, reports to me that the State has suffered a loss of $250,000,000.
My special point at this time has been to impress upon Senators the great extent of the drought and the unprecedented severity of the drought. It justifies a departure from established methods and from established principles. I think I depart from them with as much reluctance as any Member of the body.
The Senator's suggestion is correct as to the extent of the drought, and there can be no reason for extending assistance to the sufferers in one locality which would not justify it in another locality.
I ought to say to the Senate also that the drought began the latter part of July in a great area of the country. In my immediate section of the country it began before that time, and we suffered a loss of oats and wheat and even maize, and drought-resisting plants have dried up and have fallen down in the fields, and the reapers did not go into the fields. Trees in my own town 40 feet high are dying from this drought. I emphasize the situation in order to justify some sort of assistance.
Now, the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico is more favorable to the farmers than the original draft of this amendment is undoubtedly correct. The limitation of advancing two-thirds of the security was inserted by me on account of the established precedent in the Senate and in Congress. We always require a larger security than the amount of the advance, and it was out of deference to that custom, usually a wise custom, that I inserted that limitation when other securities than liberty bonds were provided for. I had a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury, however, and he was not only willing but rather insistent that the limitation should be removed, and, of course, with that authority I felt justified in making the alteration. That is the reason why the latter draft does not contain that limitation.
I appreciate the fact that we ought to confer with the departments with respect to the legislation, but, Mr. President, the Congress is a legislative body. A drought of unparalleled extent and severity is prevalent in this country. Distress and suffering to individuals will ensue if relief is not extended, and there will be a serious economic loss to the whole country in the paralysis of agricultural activities. It seemed to me that the Congress might upon its own initiative venture upon the experiment of legislating upon its own responsibility, animated by a sense of duty and justified by conditions and circumstances prevailing throughout the country. I do not feel that we ought always and on every occasion to receive inspiration from some other source before we venture to do our legislative duty.
Mr. President, I have in a desultory way undertaken to impress upon the Senate the need for legislation of this sort, and I think I sense the humor and temper of the Senate at this moment. If the Senator from New Mexico will offer his amendment I will withdraw the present amendment for that purpose. I am not dogmatic in insisting upon this proposition. It is the end and not the means that concerns me.
Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——
Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. POMERENE. I ask now for information. I am trying in a modest way to solve the situation if I can.
Mr. GORE. I appreciate the Senator's position.
Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator had in mind the provision of the farm-loan act bearing upon the subject of loans to farmers? The Senator will bear in mind that these banks may make loans to farmers to provide for the purchase of land for agricultural uses, to provide for the purchase of equipment, fertilizers, and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the mortgaged farm, the term "equipment" to be defined by the Federal Farm Loan Board. I am having an investigation made now. My understanding is that perhaps the Farm Loan Board has not as yet defined the word "equipment," but the Federal Farm Loan Board is given almost plenary power when it comes to the definition of this term, and if it should so define it as to embrace within the word "equipment" the purchase of seed, it seems to me that that would relieve the situation.
Mr. GORE. If I remember that act correctly, no loan is made for a less period than five years. I think that would disqualify it from meeting the present emergency.
Mr. POMERENE. However, at a very low rate of interest.
Mr. GORE. Yes; but I think it is not operating that way now. I had a letter yesterday indicating that the rates are being advanced to 7 per cent, and a letter this morning quoting a bulletin issued by one of the leading New York banks that money was worth 8 per cent to farmers. So the credit situation and the interest situation is not what it has been in other times. Of course, the rate of interest is necessarily advanced.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator from Oklahoma yielded the floor?
Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator how this is going to help relieve the farmer whose crop has been drought stricken? The farmer has borrowed some money of the local bank and put up a liberty bond as security for the loan. This amendment authorizes the War Finance Board to loan to that bank the money and take as security for the loan the liberty bond which the farmer put in the bank. The farmer is the man we want to help, I assume. The farmer can not get any more money out of the bank without putting up more collateral security.
Mr. GORE. Mr. President——
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. GORE. This is the situation: The banks have exhausted their loanable funds. Let us say A, B, and C have borrowed from the bank, and they have put up the security that they have, they have been accommodated; but D, E, and F have not been accommodated, because the bank is not in a situation to make the advance, even though they have the security. The object of this amendment was to supply the banks with additional funds, so as to accommodate the farmers, and they could proceed to make loans to other farmers who could furnish satisfactory security, and make it a sort of endless chain and keep the process going.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, if the farmer has the collateral, if he has more liberty bonds or other security which the bank would accept for the loan, he can get it at any bank. If his local bank has not any funds to loan, he can go to some other bank. I assume that most banks in the country will take liberty bonds as collateral security, and if certain banks have exhausted their loanable funds other banks have them.
Mr. GORE. I want to remind the Senator of a telegram which I have just received from a State bank in Oklahoma, suggesting that money be deposited in the banks in the drought-stricken region for this purpose.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt the banks would like to get the money.
Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.
Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think the Senator from Connecticut does not quite fully appreciate the situation in the western section of the country. His statement that if they can not get the money from one bank they can go to another will hardly meet the situation. That is true in ordinary eastern commercial paper, but in the West it is quite generally understood that only a bank with a full knowledge of local conditions and which is able to estimate local securities will make loans upon live stock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not at all discussing loans upon live stock. I was talking of loans upon collateral security to farmers.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to make this statement——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. The other day I had a letter signed by the bankers' association in one county in western Kansas where they have had a complete crop failure, in which they say it would be impossible for the banks in that county, no matter how much security was put up, to supply more than 50 per cent of the money needed, and the agricultural department of the State has made an estimate, and made the statement to the Committee on Agriculture, that in some 33 counties in Kansas the banks were unable to supply over 50 per cent of the money needed at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to one of the modifications which the Senator from Oklahoma has proposed to his amendment. I will not do it if the Senator has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. GORE. As I suggested a minute ago, it is the end and not the means that I am urgent about now, and with the authority of the chairman of the Finance Committee, who is in favor of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from New Mexico, and other expressions in favor of that sort of a policy, I feel not only justified but I feel obligated to withdraw this amendment and give that amendment an opportunity to be offered and adopted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am no sort of a man to discuss something that is not going to be before the Senate. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment now?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I gave notice that I would do so in case the Senator from New Mexico offered his amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then there is no amendment before the Senate at present on the subject?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; not until the Senator from New Mexico offers his amendment. If he does not, I will reoffer this amendment.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute before he begins?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Oklahoma has just stated to the Senate that I had expressed myself in favor of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico. That is true; I am inclined to favor that amendment; but I want to say that I do not think the amendment in its present form would accomplish all that the Senator from Oklahoma desires. I think that amendment can be amended, however, so as to accomplish his purpose.

What I mean to say is this: The amendment simply authorizes loans to be made up to 100 per cent of the amount loaned by the bank. So far that would be a great advantage to the farmers and the banks would loan to the farmers, but it seems to me in this situation it would be well to give these agricultural loans a little better terms as to time than is given under the present law or than would be given if the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico were passed. As I understand it, farm loans on farm paper could not probably be safely made for the short time that the War Finance Corporation Commission might be disposed to loan, and by extending the time of these loans, making a different base of credit than that now provided in the bill, probably every phase of this question would be met. I just throw out that suggestion to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state to the Senator from North Carolina that that very question was the one which suggested the only difficulty in regard to this amendment of mine. I hesitated about limiting it to 12-months paper, but it was thought by some that if we extended the time there might be some difficulty in passing the amendment in Congress. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that this limitation ought to be in it, and that we should leave it to the discretion of the bank and the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. For that reason, if the Senator from Montana will pardon me a little longer, it seems to me that instead of attaching this amendment to the pending bill, it would be better to send the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the appropriate committee and let them report it out. I understand it purports to be an amendment—that was its original form—to the War Finance Corporation act.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did introduce a bill two or three weeks ago, while the Senate was in semirecess, for the purpose of getting the matter expedited, believing it to be a matter which needed urgent and prompt attention, and that bill was referred to the Finance Committee. But the Finance Committee has had no meeting thus far, and the matter is of such an urgent nature I had thought it would not be unwise to put it upon this bill, so that it may give early relief to the situation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will pardon me, I hope the chairman of the Finance Committee will not insist upon this bill taking its regular course. On account of the prospective recess or adjournment of Congress, I doubt if it will be possible to secure the passage of a measure of this sort through both branches prior to such adjournment, and undoubtedly this relief measure ought to be vouchsafed now if it is to be given at all.

I will say to the chairman of the Finance Committee that I hope the amendment will be perfected when it is presented here in the Senate, and if not those in charge of it in conference will undoubtedly take counsel with the chairman of the Finance Committee and others in order to make it meet the situation and found it upon just principles.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not make any motion to that effect. I was simply throwing it out as a suggestion that it is possible the Senator from New Mexico can now modify the amendment so as to meet the situation and let it be considered in connection with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oklahoma has withdrawn his amendment for the purpose of allowing the Senator from New Mexico to offer his amendment. Will the Senator from New Mexico send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am perfectly willing to offer the amendment at this time, but the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has an amendment, and I think it advisable that the Senate should have before it his proposition, so that they may all be considered together. I would be glad to have the Senator from Montana recognized at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WALSH. It is quite agreeable to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico should now be presented to the Senate and read for information.

I desire, however, Mr. President, to show the Senate that, while it is a perfectly wise provision to make to meet the situation in part, it does not take care of it at all. Some further provision is imperatively necessary. To meet the situation, I have an amendment to propose myself, which I desire to submit for the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana desire to offer his amendment now?

Mr. WALSH. I will offer it in connection with what I have to say.

Mr. LODGE. Has the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the Senator from Montana been printed?

Mr. WALSH. It has not. I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts, in explanation of that condition of affairs, that I have been in consultation with the Department of Agriculture, with the Farm Loan Board, with the War Finance Corporation, as well as with the Food Administration on this subject. All of these various branches of the Government have had the matter under consideration, appreciating the gravity of the situation and the imperative necessity of legislation to meet it. Officials are now at work, in the Agricultural Department particularly, assembling the facts in the case for the information of the Senate; but the matter was precipitated here, and consequently I was obliged to express in my amendment only my own views—and, I must confess, rather crude views—as to what ought to be done in the present situation of affairs.

Mr. LODGE. I only asked my question because this is not only very important, but it is a very complicated subject. It is desired to give additional powers, in substance, as I understand, to the Finance Corporation, in order to reach this difficulty, but it is very hard to pass upon it if we do not have the amendment before us.

Mr. WALSH. I made that explanation in order that the Senator should understand why my amendment is not in print.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment could be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to send my copy of the amendment to the Senator from Massachusetts for his information.

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment be read for the information of Senators, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to ask that a little later on, but it might be done just as well now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed to be submitted by the Senator from Montana will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert:

The sum of $20,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated for the relief of farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States (west of the one hundredth meridian). The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by them, to loan from the fund by this section created, to farmers within such region to enable them to provide themselves with seed, fodder for animals, and supplies necessary to their subsistence, amounts not to exceed $500 to any one person. No advance shall be made under this act except to owners of lands or to a tenant, with the approval of his landlord, or to bona fide homestead claimants who propose to cultivate the lands occupied by them, nor in any amount in excess of $5 per acre of the lands to be seeded. Any advance so made shall be a lien upon the land to be seeded (prior and paramount to all other claims, secured or unsecured). In the case of advances to homestead claimants failure to repay the same when due or within such period thereafter as may be by the said Secretaries prescribed, shall make subject the entry of the delinquent to contest and cancellation and the land to entry by any applicant who shall tender the amount due.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana state where the one hundredth meridian comes upon the map?

Mr. WALSH. It cuts the State of Nebraska about in two and the State of South Dakota, also, would be cut nearly in the middle.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Nobody east of that meridian would get any benefit from this money?

Mr. WALSH. He would not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I recall the reading of the amendment, it seems to me there is no limit to the time for which the loan may run.

Mr. WALSH. There is none. The rules in reference to such matters are to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I may say, Mr. President, before I proceed, in answer to the inquiry addressed to me by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], that it had not occurred to me, and no one had suggested it, that there were any sections of the country east of the one hundredth meridian that were in the predicament that required Federal assistance. In view of the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], however, a few minutes ago, I should be disposed to take out that limitation from the amendment so that there should be nothing invidious in the provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. In order that some of us who were not present when the Senator from Montana introduced his amendment may understand his discussion of it, I ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. WALSH.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the essential difference between the amendment proposed by myself and the one offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] lies in this: That under his amendment the loans are to be made to the banks in the drought-stricken regions, while under the amendment proposed by me the loans are to be made directly to the farmers in the drought-stricken regions.

Mr. President, of the gravity of the situation and of the imperative necessity of legislating with reference to it, I am entirely satisfied that the Senate is convinced. So serious was it that upon the representation of various Senators, and Representatives as well, from the western sections of the country, the President of the United States, in order to grant relief so that fall seeding might go forward, set apart $5,000,000 from his $100,000,000 war fund, not for the purpose of relieving the situation generally, but simply for the purpose of granting relief to the farmers that they might procure seed for fall planting. In a large section of the western country the soil is prepared for the fall seeding of winter wheat and winter rye during the summer months, and the seeding must go forward during the month of August and not later than the 15th of September. In view of the recess of Congress, which was then running, it was found to be impossible, or at least impracticable, to get the necessary legislation and the essential appropriation from Congress to meet the situation. The President, persuaded of the gravity of the situation, set apart for the purpose the amount which has been referred to. That fund is now being distributed among those who desire to provide themselves with seed for fall planting, and it is being distributed through the Department of Agriculture and the Treasury Department.

Those departments have issued jointly a circular reciting the conditions and prescribing forms for applications and the terms upon which the loans shall be made. For the information of the Senate I send to the desk a copy of the circular showing the method of the distribution of the fund. I read from that circular, to indicate the necessity for the relief, the following brief paragraphs:

This circular is issued jointly by the Treasury Department and the Department of Agriculture, and will define the procedure relative to granting seed-grain loans to farmers in drought-stricken areas out of the appropriation for the national security and defense provided for under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1918, and placed at the disposal of said departments by the President of the United States under date of July 26, 1918, and from such other funds as may be appropriated or made available to said departments from time to time for the same purpose.

* * * * * * *

3. Seed-grain loans may be made to farmers in areas determined by the Department of Agriculture to have suffered two successive crop failures from severe drought or winter killing, and may be made to such individuals as may be found by the Department of Agriculture to have acreage fit for planting, and who, by reason of such crop failures, have exhausted their resources and are without commercial basis of credit. No loan will be made to any farmer who has unencumbered real or personal property sufficient to secure a loan of $300.

* * * * * * *

8. The primary object of farmers' seed-grain loans is not to stimulate the planting of an increased acreage of grain in the drought areas, or even necessarily to secure the planting of a normal acreage, but rather to assist in tiding the farmers over the period of the stress, to enable them to remain on their farms to plant such an acreage as may be determined to be wise under all the conditions, with a view to increase the food supply of the Nation and to add to the national security and defense. It is distinctly not intended to be used to stimulate the planting of wheat or any other grain where such planting is not wise from an agricultural point of view and where other activities are safer.

I send the circular to the desk and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

REGULATIONS RELATIVE TO FARMERS' SEED-GRAIN LOANS IN DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 2, 1918.

This circular is issued jointly by the Treasury Department and the Department of Agriculture, and will define the procedure relative to granting seed-grain loans to farmers in drought-stricken areas out of the appropriation for the national security and defense provided for under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1918, and placed at the disposal of said departments by the President of the United States under date of July 26, 1918, and from such other funds as may be appropriated or made available to said departments from time to time for the same purpose:

1. The Federal land banks, upon being designated as financial agents of the United States for that purpose, are authorized to make and collect when due seed-grain loans out of the funds above described, pursuant to these regulations. Their proceedings will be under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and said board is authorized to instruct said banks in all matters in connection with said loans, subject to these regulations.

2. The Federal land banks, designated as stated above, may in turn designate local banks, or other agencies, to represent them in the taking of applications, the delivery of the certificates of approval, and the receipt, transmission, and recordation of documents. Neither the Federal land banks nor any agency acting under them shall be entitled to compensation for services rendered under these regulations.

3. Seed-grain loans may be made to farmers in areas determined by the Department of Agriculture to have suffered two successive crop failures from severe drought or winter killing, and may be made to such individuals as may be found by the Department of Agriculture to have acreage fit for planting, and who by reason of such crop failures have exhausted their resources and are without commercial basis of credit. No loan will be made to any farmer who has unencumbered real or personal property sufficient to secure a loan of $300.

4. No seed-grain loan will be made to any applicant in excess of $300, nor in an amount greater than $3 per acre. Applicants must agree to use seed and methods approved by the Department of Agriculture.

5. Applications for seed-grain loans shall be made on the official form of application, of which a copy is hereto attached, and shall be verified by the applicant under oath. The application shall describe the particular acreage to be planted, not in excess of 100 acres. Such applications will be investigated by the Department of Agriculture through such agencies as it may determine, and the approval or disapproval of the application will be certified by its authorized representatives to the Federal land bank of the district upon the forms provided for that purpose on the official application blank. Approval may be for a less acreage than that applied for. The Federal land bank of the district will then certify its approval or disapproval upon the form contained on the application blank and, if it approve, it will issue to the applicant its certificate of approval in the form attached to these regulations.

6. The amount approved for loan pursuant to these regulations will be paid by the proper Federal land bank to the applicant, or on his written order, upon receipt by such Federal land bank of the following documents:

(a) Certificate of planting, signed by an authorized representative of the Department of Agriculture, that a number of acres sufficient under these regulations to warrant a loan in the approved amount have been properly planted with proper seed. Such certificate shall be in the form attached to these regulations. The names and signatures of such authorized representatives will be filed with the several Federal land banks by the Department of Agriculture.

(b) Promissory note, duly executed by the applicant, for the amount of the loan, payable to the proper Federal land bank as financial agent of the United States on October 1, 1919, in the Wichita and Houston districts, and on November 1, 1919, in the St. Paul and Spokane districts, as the case may be, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and in the form attached to these regulations.

(c) Guaranty fund agreement, duly executed and acknowledged by the applicant, providing, among other things, that if the crop mortgaged as hereinafter provided, amounts to an average yield of 7 bushels per acre or more, the applicant will contribute to a guaranty fund, at maturity of the above-mentioned note, 15 cents per acre morigaged (not exceeding 100 acres) for each bushel per acre by which the average yield exceeds 6 bushels per acre, provided that the total of such contribution shall not exceed 75 cents per acre. Such guaranty fund agreement shall be in the form attached to these regulations.

(d) Chattel mortgage upon the crop planted on the land described in the certificate of planting, in favor of the proper Federal land bank as financial agent of the United States, duly executed by the applicant in such manner as to entitle it to recordation, and securing payment of the above-mentioned note and the due performance of the obligations of the applicant under such guaranty fund agreement, according to the terms thereof, and containing a provision authorizing such Federal land bank, in the event that the applicant fails at the proper time to harvest or thrash the crop mortgaged, to enter upon the premises and harvest or thrash the same, as the case may be, and to sell the crop and to satisfy the lien of said mortgage and expenses incurred thereunder from the proceeds of the crop. Such chattel mortgage will be prepared under the direction of the law department of the Federal land bank of the district, and shall be recorded in the proper office under the State laws applicable. In case such laws require that the original mortgage shall remain in the office in which the same shall be filed, the Federal land bank may make the loan without requiring that the original be lodged with it, provided that it shall receive in lieu thereof such certificate of the recording officer as shall be sufficient in the opinion of its law department to assure the bank that the original has been duly executed, delivered, and recorded in proper form.

7. Actual expenses of the several Federal land banks when shown by sworn vouchers to have been necessarily incurred for stationery, telegraphing, printing, or postage will be allowed and paid, upon approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, out of the fund for farmers' seed-grain loans hereinabove referred to. Agencies of the Federal land banks appointed under these regulations shall not be entitled to incur any expense chargeable against the United States or its financial agents.

8. The primary object of farmers' seed-grain loans is not to stimulate the planting of an increased acreage of grain in the drought areas, or even necessarily to secure the planting of a normal acreage, but rather to assist in tiding the farmers over the period of the stress, to enable them to remain on their farms to plant such an acreage as may be determined to be wise under all the conditions, with a view to increase the food supply of the Nation and to add to the national security and defense. It is distinctly not intended to be used to stimulate the planting of wheat or any other grain where such planting is not wise from an agricultural point of view and where other activities are safer.

9. The right is reserved to make further supplemental or amendatory regulations relative to farmers' seed-grain loans from time to time, or withdraw these regulations at any time.

APPLICATION FOR SEED GRAIN LOAN.

Dated ——— ——, 1918.

I hereby make application to the Federal land bank of ——— as financial agent of the United States for a loan of ——— ($——) upon ——— acres to be planted to ——— (kind of grain) upon the following-described land, situated in ——— County, State of ———.

(Here insert description of land.)

Such loan is to be made from the fund set apart for the aid of farmers in drought-stricken areas by the President of the United States, out of the appropriation for the national security and defense provided for under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1918, or from such other funds as may be appropriated or made available from time to time for the same purpose.

If this application should be granted, the above-mentioned amount is to be advanced upon delivery to the above-named Federal land bank of ———.

(1) Certificate of planting in the form prescribed in the circular mentioned below, duly executed by an authorized representative of the Department of Agriculture;

(2) Promissory note in the form prescribed in the circular mentioned below, duly executed by the undersigned, for the amount of such advance, payable to the above-named Federal land bank, as financial agent of the United States, on ———, 1919, and bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum;

(3) Guaranty-fund agreement, duly executed and acknowledged by the undersigned, in form and in the terms prescribed in a circular issued jointly by the Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of Agriculture; such agreement shall provide, among other things, that if the crop mortgaged, as stated below, amounts to an average yield of 7 bushels per acre or more, the undersigned will contribute to a guaranty fund 15 cents per acre mortgaged for each bushel per acre by which the average yield exceeds 6 bushels per acre, provided that the total of such contribution shall not exceed 75 cents per acre; and

(4) Chattel mortgage, duly executed by the undersigned in such manner as to entitle it to recordation, upon the crops planted on the land described above, to secure the payment of the above-mentioned note and the due performance of the obligations of the undersigned under such guaranty-fund agreement. Such chattel mortgage shall be in form approved by counsel for the above-named Federal land bank.

I am ——— years old. —— married, and have ——— children.

I own ——— acres of land, which are mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ——— horses and mules, valued at $———, which are mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ——— cattle, valued at $———, which are mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ——— hogs, valued at $———, which are mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ——— sheep, valued at $———, which are mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ——— farming equipment, valued at $———, which is mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I own ———, which is mortgaged for $——— to ——— ———.

I planted ——— acres of ——— in 1916, from which I harvested ——— bushels in 1917.

I planted ——— acres of ——— in 1917, from which I harvested ——— bushels in 1918.

I hereby certify that I have ——— acres under cultivation which I desire to plant to fall ——— in 1918, but that by reason of crop failures in 1916 and 1917 and encumbrances on my real and personal property, I am unable to procure seed for planting the same, and that I have not borrowed and can not borrow money from any bank for the purpose of procuring seed for 1918 planting.

If this application should be granted, I agree to use such seed and methods of agriculture as may be approved by the Department of Agriculture, through its local representatives.

GUARANTY FUND AGREEMENT.

This agreement, made this —— day of ———, 1918, between ———, of ———, county of ———, State of ———, hereinafter called the borrower, party of the first part, and The Federal Land Bank of ———, as financial agent of the United States, hereinafter called the land bank, party of the second part,

Witnesseth:

Whereas the borrower has made application to the land bank under date of ———, 1918, pursuant to circular No. 1, dated August 2, 1918, issued jointly by the Treasury Department and the Department of Agriculture, for an advance from the fund set apart for the aid of farmers in drought-stricken areas by the President of the United States out of the appropriation for the national security and defense provided for under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1918, or from such other funds as may be appropriated or made available from time to time for the same purpose; and

Whereas pursuant to said application and simultaneously with the execution and delivery of this agreement the borrower has received an advance of $———, and has executed and delivered to the land bank his promissory note payable ——— 1, 1919, for the amount of such advance, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and a chattel mortgage as required by said circular, to secure the payment of said promissory note and the due performance of the obligations of the borrower under this agreement; and

Whereas the advance by the land bank to the borrower is made pursuant to a general plan outlined in said circular adopted for a public purpose by the United States in order to maintain food production by means of assistance to farmers in drought-stricken areas, and losses are likely to accrue to the United States and to the borrowers in the operation of said general plan by reason of local crop failures; and

Whereas it is to the public interest and to the interest of the borrowers who receive advances pursuant to said general plan that the risk of crop failures shall be distributed among such borrowers by establishing a guaranty fund to which every borrower whose crop mortgaged amounts to an average yield of 7 bushels per acre or more shall contribute:

Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the mutual agreements herein contained, the borrower and the land bank do agree as follows:

First. The borrower agrees to pay to the land bank, if the crop mortgaged by the borrower amounts to an average yield of 7 bushels per acre or more, as a contribution to said guaranty fund, fifteen (15) cents per acre mortgaged (not in excess of one hundred (100) acres) for each bushel per acre by which the average yield exceeds 6 bushels per acre: Provided, however, That the total of such payments shall not exceed seventy-five (75) cents per acre mortgaged. The sworn statement of the thrasherman who thrashes the borrower's crop shall be conclusive evidence of such average yield per acre mortgaged in the absence of fraud. The borrower agrees to make such payment to the land bank at the maturity of the note hereinbefore described.

Second. The land bank agrees that all payments made by the borrower under article first part of this agreement, and all similar payments made by borrowers receiving advances pursuant to said general plan, into said guaranty fund shall be administered by the Federal Farm Loan Board, as provided in this agreement. Said guaranty fund shall be applied by the Federal Farm Loan Board at such time or times after the maturity of the notes given by borrowers receiving advances under said general plan as it shall deem feasible, to the payment pro rata of all notes given by borrowers receiving advances under said general plan whose crops mortgaged prove failures, as defined below, with the interest thereon, and in case by reason of payments made by any such borrower against his note the pro rata share applicable thereto shall be more than sufficient to discharge the same and the interest thereon, the excess amount of such pro rata share shall be paid to such borrower; and any balance of such guaranty fund shall be applied pro rata to borrowers who shall have paid in full their respective contributions to said guaranty fund as provided in article 1 of this agreement, to the extent of their respective contributions. The crop mortgaged of any borrower under said general plan shall be deemed a failure within the meaning of this agreement if the average yield per acre does not amount to more than 5 bushels. The average yield per acre shall be determined, in the absence of fraud, by the sworn statement of the thrasherman thrashing the crop, or by the certificate of a representative of the Department of Agriculture who has examined the crop in question, or, in the absence of such evidence, by such other evidence as shall be deemed sufficient by the Federal Farm Loan Board or representative designated by it for that purpose.

Third. The obligations of the borrower under this agreement are several and independent and may be enforced by the land bank as financial agent of the United States without regard to the performance or nonperformance by any other borrower receiving advances pursuant to said general plan of his obligation under any similar agreement.

Fourth. Neither this agreement nor any interest therein, nor in the guaranty fund hereby established, is assignable.

In witness whereof, the borrower has executed this agreement under his hand and seal, and the land bank has caused this agreement to be duly executed the day and year first above written.

NOTE.—This acknowledgment may be taken before any officer authorized to take acknowledgments under the laws of the State where executed, or an officer of a national bank, or of a bank designated by the Federal land bank of the district to represent it in taking applications for farmers' seed-grain loans.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator two or three questions in order that I may understand his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. This amendment applies on its face only to those farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States west of the one hundredth meridian. The one hundredth meridian runs through about the center of my State and the center of South Dakota. Many of the failures and losses, so far as those two States are concerned, would lie east of that line, and I understand that a considerable portion of Oklahoma would also be east of the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, that matter was spoken of by me a few moments ago in answer to a suggestion made by the Senator from North Carolina. It did not occur to me at the time the amendment was drafted that there were any regions east of the one hundredth meridian that required relief.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the necessity of specifying any meridian at all? Would it not be sufficient to say "in the drought-stricken districts"? Why would it not be better to leave out any reference to a divisional line?

Mr. WALSH. In view of the situation disclosed, I shall myself ask that that limitation be eliminated, and I shall tender an appropriate amendment to accompany that suggestion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are one or two other questions that I should like to ask the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, if I may be allowed, I merely wish to confirm what the Senator from North Dakota has stated with regard to Oklahoma. I had already called privately to the attention of the Senator from Montana the fact that the drought-stricken region came east of the one hundredth meridian in Oklahoma, and he had expressed a willingness to make that change; so that that need not excite further discussion.

Mr. McCUMBER. The next question refers to the persons to whom this relief is to be afforded. The amendment says:

> To loan from the fund by this section created to farmers within such region to enable them to provide themselves with feed, fodder for animals, and supplies necessary to their subsistence.

Does that mean necessary for the subsistence of the animals or supplies necessary for the subsistence of the cattlemen or farmers?

Mr. WALSH. It scarcely refers to animals because provision is made for "fodder for animals," so that would cover subsistence for animals, and the words "their subsistence" would accordingly necessarily refer to the farmers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, the amendment goes further than merely furnishing them seed grain or means to sow and is to provide loans to help them out during the next year until they can get a crop.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; but it is not a general loan; the money can be loaned only for the specified purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but one of the specified purposes is the subsistence of the individual and, of course, of his family.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. That seems to me to be so broad that it is almost dangerous. I think that there is probably no State which has not produced a crop somewhere within its borders, and the State itself should be left to determine whether subsistence should be given to the individuals in a drought-stricken section. The Senator and I might differ upon that.

Mr. WALSH. I should be very glad to have any suggestions by way of amendment that may occur to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is another point in relation to which I wish to ask the Senator a question. The amendment provides:

> Any advance so made shall be a lien upon the land to be seeded prior and paramount to all other claims, secured or unsecured.

In the newly settled sections of the country—and those are the sections that are affected by the drought—there are very few farms which have not a mortgage on them and some of the mortgages may be three-fourths of the value of the land. A great deal of the land also is sold under crop contracts, and sold for all it is worth, nothing having been paid. As the amendment provides that the advance shall be a lien upon the land itself and prior and paramount to all other claims secured or unsecured, it would rather seem to me to indicate that that would mean farms which had mortgages and other liens upon them already secured, and not those that might be mortgaged in the future. Certainly it would impair the obligation of contracts if where a person has sold land under a crop contract for all it is worth the purchaser should be allowed to encumber the land to a greater extent than it was before, or if where the land is mortgaged the mortgagor should be compelled to pay off probably a prior lien which, added to the lien which is held by the mortgagee, would be in excess of the value of the land itself. May I have the Senator's opinion as to whether the amendment is intended to make the proposed loan prior to any loans, mortgages, or other liens upon the land?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, Mr. President; in the due course of my argument I was going to discuss the amendment and going to discuss that feature of it. It was intended to make the lien of the Government superior to any existing mortgage.

Mr. McCUMBER. Did I understand the Senator to say it was intended?

Mr. WALSH. It was intended—that is the plain meaning of the language of the amendment—that the lien of the Government for the repayment of the money loaned by it shall be superior to any existing mortgage.

Mr. McCUMBER. That certainly would be impairing the obligations of a contract, and, while we might have the power to do so, it would seem to me that the conditions hardly justify it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, that is a matter for argument. I suppose perhaps I had better divert from the course of my discussion to speak of the matter now adverted to by the Senator from North Dakota.

It was intended, as I say, that this obligation to repay the Government should be a lien upon the land superior and paramount to any other obligation, no matter when contracted. Of course, I was not unmindful of every suggestion in opposition to this plan implied in the inquiry addressed to me by the Senator from North Dakota. We are confronted, however, with a necessity, and the question presents itself as to what to do in order to meet it.

Mr. President, we all recognize the inadvisability of displacing these prior liens. Under all ordinary circumstances it would be entirely unjustifiable to do so. The question is, Are we justified in doing so at the present time?

I want to present to the Senate, in the first place, the situation with reference to the distribution of the $5,000,000 fund and how it was met with respect to that. That presented a comparatively simple problem. Under the rules and regulations, a copy of which has been introduced and will be made a part of the RECORD, no loan from this $5,000,000 fund is made to any farmer until he actually has the seed in the ground, and then the loan is made to him. Meanwhile, however, representatives of the two departments make an examination of the situation, and, if they believe that a loan would be warranted, they issue a certificate to the effect that after that man has his seed in the ground a loan will be made to him. With that certificate he is able to go to a local bank or some other money-loaning agency and secure the funds necessary to provide the seed that will go into the ground, and he has it in the ground within 30 days.

Thereupon he takes up, with the money loaned to him by the Government, the temporary loan that he was able to make at the bank and the situation is taken care of in that way. But, Mr. President, when you come to the spring seeding—and that is the important matter; that is the great big proposition; that is where the greatest losses have occurred—the spring seeding will not occur for a matter of six or eight months, possibly, in the future. That brings us to the consideration of the merits of the proposition embodied in my amendment as compared with that offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

He proposes to loan the money to the banks. That is impracticable for two reasons: In a large portion of the drought-stricken region along the Canadian border—and it is particularly acute there—it has occurred two years in succession. The banks of that region have been carrying the farmers for a period of two years. My State, throughout the greater portion of its area, has been blessed with reasonably good crops, and in some sections with especially bountiful crops; but along the whole northern third of the State the result has been so disastrous that I do not care to speak about it in detail. It is worse this year than it was last year; but it is no worse, for instance, than it is across the line in the Canadian Provinces. They have had two successive droughts in those sections, and the Dominion Government has come to their aid in a way that ought to be emulated by this great Government of ours with respect to its citizens who have gone out on these great plains for the purpose of providing the necessary food for the people of our country and of our allies and our brave soldiers abroad. The same conditions have occurred in the Republic of Argentina. That country has appropriated $13,000,000 in order to relieve the necessities of farmers in that country in a situation quite similar to that which confronts the farmers in the western portion of this country. So let me say that the banks have already loaned to the farmers as much as they care to loan. They have gone to the limit of their resources. They do not want to come to the Government nor to the Finance Corporation and borrow more money for the purpose of loaning out to farmers again. They are obliged to proceed with some degree of conservatism as well. Therefore the banks will not avail themselves of the provisions of an amendment such as that tendered by the Senator from Oklahoma, and to a limited extent only of provisions such as are embraced in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be adopted; but, as I have indicated to you, it does not touch one side of the problem and affords very little substantial relief, at least to the section of the country that I represent.

In the second place, not only is it true that the banks do not want to avail themselves of this, but the farmers have exhausted their credit with the banks and the banks will not loan the farmers any more money.

We are therefore confronted with this situation: What are we going to do in order that the great productive capacity of that country may be made use of in this emergency?

I should not like to come before the Congress of the United States and ask that $20,000,000 be appropriated and loaned to farmers without any kind of security that would assure the Government that the loans were to be returned. I think it would be eminently unwise from every point of view even to suggest an idea of that kind. Now, what are you going to do about it? I shall be very glad, indeed, to have any suggestion which the Senator from North Dakota can make looking toward securing the Government for the loans made, as a substitute for that proposed by the amendment offered by me.

Mr. OWEN rose.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, there is just one other means that has suggested itself to me, and that is the organization of credit associations, under which the Government would take the obligation of a credit association, by which each member of the association would either be bound absolutely for the entire amount or bound for a limited amount. Upon consideration of that plan with the Department of Agriculture, however, we have reached the conclusion that the time is too brief to work out that system, so that we are obliged to come back to the proposition of either loaning this money out to the farmers without any security whatever or making the lien a prior and paramount lien, displacing everything already existing against the property.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. The proposition offered by the Senator from Montana is a simple, direct, plain method of dealing with this matter. While in normal times we would not be justified, perhaps, in dealing with the farmer and lending him money merely because he had suffered from a drought or a series of droughts, in this time when the whole world is most seriously in need of food, I regard this as a justified war measure, and will support the proposal offered by the Senator from Montana for that reason.

I should like to say, though, that the farmer himself who receives the seed from the Government does give bond for his good faith in his own labor, which he puts in jeopardy. There may be another drought, the seed may be lost, and the farmer's labor may be lost. That is true; but I think when you make this loan a paramount lien you go as far as you can in the way of giving security, and if there be a jeopardy in raising food necessary to feed our own armies and to feed our allies who are fighting in the cause of liberty, the Government had better take it, in so far as the Government would take it, than not to have the effort made to raise the food necessary for the success of this war. For that reason I think the proposal made by the Senator is altogether justified, and I agree with him about the difficulty of administration in the case of the other proposals made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think this matter ought to be discussed with a few more Senators present, especially if we are going to vote on it to-day. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Kellogg	McCumber
Benet	France	Kendrick	McKellar
Borah	Guion	Kenyon	McNary
Brandegee	Hale	King	Nelson
Chamberlain	Henderson	Kirby	New
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	Knox	Norris
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Lenroot	Nugent
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Lodge	Overman

Penrose	Shafroth	Sterling	Walsh
Phelan	Sheppard	Sutherland	Warren
Poindexter	Sherman	Thomas	Wilfley
Pomerene	Simmons	Townsend	Wolcott
Ransdell	Smith, Ariz.	Trammell
Robinson	Smith, Md.	Vardaman

Mr. TOWNSEND. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is absent, is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the discussion had I ask leave to amend the amendment by striking out the words "west of the one-hundredth meridian," so that it will read:

The sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the relief of farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment, and it will be so modified.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in view of that amendment, I dare say that the appropriation ought to be increased somewhat in order to meet the situation. I will give the Senate the information that I have concerning the necessity for an appropriation of this size. In connection with the effort to secure the appropriation from the President's fund, Mr. Barnes, the president of the Grain Corporation, estimated on what I must confess was perhaps inadequate information, that it would require $30,000,000 to meet the situation. The Secretary of Agriculture was of the opinion that it would not require that amount. Five million dollars have already been appropriated from the President's fund, and I considered that $25,000,000 would meet the situation. I am inclined to think, however, after learning of the rather widespread area that is affected and particularly in view of the amendment that is now made, that perhaps it ought to be increased somewhat.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to state that when this matter was being considered by the Food Administration and by Mr. Barnes, I think that but a few of the States had been heard from. I know I attended several of the conferences and we spoke for about half a dozen States. There were a number of States that were not represented and the condition in which was not stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand the Senator from Montana, he limits the loan to be made to any individual to $500, and as I remember the reading, it is to cover seed wheat and other crops. Does the Senator think that is really enough? As I understand it, the seed wheat, for instance, would cost at least $2.20 a bushel, probably $2.50 a bushel, and it takes about a bushel and a quarter of wheat to sow an acre. Allowing for the seed wheat alone, if the farmer would sow only about 180 acres, and I think the wheat farms generally in this country are larger than that, it would not furnish even enough seed to sow the land, and taking other things, it seems to me it would cut the amount down for seed so that it would be very small.

I received a resolution adopted by a convention of farmers in Spokane who were considering the situation in several counties there, and they recommended a minimum of $800, and they stated that they have had special reference to the provisions in the bill providing for $300. They stated that that limit would not furnish any material relief, and I wondered whether the Senator had considered that feature of it in fixing the amount at $500.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that I have given very careful consideration to that subject. The rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund already provided limit the amount to $300 and to $3 per acre. There is very general complaint about the inadequacy of the total amount as well as of the amount per acre; but the figure of $5 is arrived at substantially in this way: It is contemplated that the seed itself will cost $2.50 a bushel. That leaves $2.50 more to provide for fodder for animals and subsistence. Of course that would make only $250, the acreage being limited to 100 acres. The purpose, of course, was to assist the small farmer, not the man who is carrying on farming operation on a very large scale and who would ordinarily be able to finance his own operations even in a stressful time. Accordingly, this limit of 100 acres was fixed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But is it not a fact that practically all the wheat farms comprise 160 acres anyway?

Mr. WALSH. As a rule, as a matter of course, the homestead is 160 acres, but the Senator knows that scarcely more than 100 acres of a 160-acre homestead would ever be cultivated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is probably true. The reason why I asked the question was because I knew the situation in the Senator's State to be probably even worse than in my State, covering a larger territory at any rate, and taking into account the conditions there it would, I think meet the conditions in my State.

Mr. WALSH. I think 100 acres at $5 per acre would measurably meet the conditions in my State, and, as the Senator suggests, I think that is perhaps representative.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I think the estimate of the Senator from Montana is about right. The ordinary farmer will not be apt to have more than 100 acres in wheat. He will have some land in oats, some in barley, some in rye, some in tobacco, and some in corn and other crops. I think there are few farmers, even those who have half a section of land, who are likely to have more than 100 acres, or at the outside 150 acres, in wheat. So I think the estimate of the Senator from Montana is decidedly correct. I agree with him, too, in the further point that the aim of this bill in this matter would be to help the small-size farmers. The big farmers who have thousands of acres, of course, ought to be able to help themselves, and we ought not to attempt to cover them by the pending bill. I think if you allow one of these small farmers aid to the extent of $500 he will have enough for seed wheat and to buy the other necessary things. It is in the interest of the farmer that we do not extend and encourage the loans to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, because there must come a pay day for the farmer, and it is a good plan to teach him economy by not making too liberal an appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have only a word or two to say in addition. I regret very much that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the watchdog of the Treasury, is not here. He inquired of the Senator from Oklahoma if provision had not already been made for seed for farmers by this bill or by some act already passed, and he was answered by the Senator from Oklahoma that provision was already made in another section of the bill. I regret very much the Senator from Colorado is not here, as I want to call attention to that. It reads as follows:

That of said sum $2,500,000——

Mr. THOMAS entered the Chamber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to state to the Senator that my colleague is now present.

Mr. WALSH. Thank you. I will say for the information of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] that the food provision in the pending bill is as follows:

That of said sum—

That is, the $4,000,000—

$2,500,000 is hereby made available to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture, if in his judgment the public interest requires it, to purchase seed wheat and to supply the same on credit to farmers in the Great Plains area west of the ninety-eighth meridian. In no case shall any such advance to any one farmer exceed $300, and in all cases the repayment of such advances shall be guaranteed by a State or national bank or secured by bonds of the United States commonly known as liberty bonds, or other obligations of the United States, or in part by both such guaranty and security.

Does not the Senator from Colorado think that that holds the word of promise to the ear and breaks it to the hope?

Let me ask the Senator if he thinks that Congress ought to be buying seed wheat for a farmer who has so much credit that he can go to a State or National bank and guarantee the obligation, and if he can he can borrow the money from the banks. Another farmer who is protected by this is the farmer who can put up liberty bonds as collateral. If he has the liberty bonds as collateral, he can go to any bank in the country and borrow money. So this provision, it seems to me, does an absurd thing.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator wants my opinion about the proposed legislation, I will be glad to give it. I am opposed to it in toto. If we have a class of farmers so destitute as to need the support of the Government or relief from the Government, I think the primary duty to supply them lies with the State. If in an emergency of this sort that is practically impossible and the difficulty lies in the fact that the farmer is destitute of seed grain for his crops, then I think instead of loaning money to that man the Government should supply him with the needed grain for seed purposes without asking him for his note, without limiting the amount of the loan in any way, and the Government should procure it and give it to him and see that he plants it. That is a benefaction in a way. It is desirable, of course, from other standpoints at this time when the need for food increase is so essential and so obvious.

But this amendment, Mr. President, is one designed to give to the farmers $25,000,000. That is what we are going to do if it passes. It is true provision is made that $500 shall be loaned and that certain securities shall be taken. I was rather surprised that the Senator from Montana should make the lien to be secured paramount to the other liens independent of the obligation of existing contracts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. But when these liens mature the farmers are going to petition Congress, the author of this legislation, for extensions. If they do not, then extensions will be offered by legislators in one House or the other, and after there have been several extensions of these claims the matter will be forgotten, they will lapse, and that will be the end of it. I do not think there is any doubt about that. If we begin this legislation, which now is applied to farmers, there is no reason why hereafter we shall not apply the same legislation and the same relief to all the other pursuits of man, and lend to the lawyers and the engineers and the mechanics and all other classes and conditions of men money upon security to tide them over their immediate difficulties, and then the political powers which they wield will take care of the balance.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I merely called the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the provision made in the bill already to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred. I understand perfectly well that the Senator is opposed to legislation of this kind. I was merely calling his attention to the fact that provision has not been made——

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator to ask me whether the provision as it existed was fair.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. THOMAS. I was trying to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. WALSH. I asked the Senator if he thought the provision made was adequate.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to tresspass upon the Senator's time, but I will address myself to the amendment hereafter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before I close I want to say a word with reference to the suggestion made by the Senator as to a gift. The Senator is mistaken about that. The farmers are asking for no gift and will not take any gift. I speak advisedly when I say that the Dominion of Canada made provision for just exactly such a condition four years ago, and the entire amount save about 10 per cent has already been returned to that government. The Senator's prediction, in the light of the experience of our neighboring country, will hardly be realized.

Now, I just want to say a word more, and that is in respect to the displacement of liens. Whether we have a right to displace the earlier liens or not is a question of more or less doubt. I am inclined to think that we have that right. The right to make the lien of taxes, either upon specific land or taxes generally, superior and paramount to existing liens and mortgages against real estate is thoroughly well settled. That depends upon the principle that the claims of the Crown must be paid in preference to all other obligations, and I am unable to distinguish in principle the claim of the Crown for taxes, its ordinary sources of revenue, and claims to be repaid for money loaned by the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator recognize in that right of the sovereignty of the State the necessity for its support, that it should make its tax liens superior to all other claims? Is there not a clear distinction between the claim of the State itself for a tax upon the particular land which is to support the State and which is made paramount, and which when the citizen takes a mortgage or a deed or anything else will be paramount to any claim of his, and a case in which the State or the Federal Government by statute creates a lien subsequent and declares that that lien shall be superior? Let us take the State law, for instance, of Montana or the State law of North Dakota. Those laws declare under the recording provisions that when a mortgage or other lien is duly recorded it shall be superior to any unrecorded lien or any lien that may be created in the future. Now, can the Government of the United States step in and vitiate that agreement between the State and its citizens relative to the filing of liens and say that the State law shall be set aside?

Go a step farther. Here is a case where the State has its tax lien upon the land, the law regarding tax sales provides for that, and the tax is for the support of the State itself. The law provides that that shall be superior to any other lien. When a person has bought the tax title and has paid to the State what the State claims, and has back of it the guaranty of the State that his claim shall be a first lien upon the land and will give him title, can the Federal Government step in and set that aside?

Let me call the Senator's attention to one or two other things.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. And the Senator can answer them all at once if he will allow me.

Mr. WALSH. I find it difficult to follow the Senator. I would rather answer his questions as he goes along. I dislike to try to answer an argument. I shall be very glad to give my views about the matter to the Senator and then he can make his argument in his own time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely wish to add two more instances. Most of the land in my State in the last few years has been sold and resold. It has been sold for the most part on crop contracts. It has been sold without $1 of payment in advance. It has been sold for all the land was worth. There is a clear breach of the obligation of that contract if we say that the Government can step in now and loan $500 more upon land that perhaps has been sold for $1,000 or $1,500, for all its value, and we will have a first lien upon it and immediately compel the man who sold to the purchaser to look after this extra $500.

Then, again, a great deal of it is sold and a mortgage taken for the full value of the land. Under this provision, as the Senator now has it, the mortgagee can create another indebtedness against the land which will make the total indebtedness so great that it vitiates the obligation of the contract.

Now, I am going to make a suggestion to the Senator, because I am in hearty sympathy with his amendment, and think it is superior to that which is offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. Ought the Government to take advantage of the private citizen in that way? It is a great government and it can stand a little loss even far better than the individual could stand it.

If the Senator will just amend that provision in which he would declare it to be a lien upon the land, and let it go at that, then it would stand according to its priority; and if you want double protection for the Government let us declare that it shall be a first lien upon any crop to be raised or upon which the loan was made. I think that would be no breach of an obligation, because if there is no crop raised the seller would get no benefit from it, and if it is necessary to furnish funds to raise the crop the seller will be benefited by it, allowing the lien to apply to the crop entirely and not compel lawsuits to be litigated between those who happen to have a first mortgage or a first deed or who have sold by virtue of a contract as to whether the purchaser could add a sum which would destroy the value of their crops.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it is quite obvious, of course, to those who have followed the Senator from North Dakota that his question or questions addressed to me involve both the question of the legality of the thing and the wisdom or policy of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Both.

Mr. WALSH. Both. Mr. President, so far as the legality of the matter is concerned, I say to the Senator from North Dakota that I think he is in error in two particulars. In the first place, the prior lien of the Government in the case of revenues does not extend only to those revenues necessary to the existence of the Government, but extends as well to any activities that the Government may undertake. For instance, it need not conduct educational institutions. It can exist as a matter of course without conducting educational institutions. It can exist without conducting works of internal improvement. It can exist without incurring the many expenditures that the Government undertakes. Yet the lien of the Government for the revenue, whatever purpose it is to be devoted to, can be made superior and paramount to everything else.

But, Mr. President, if we were confined only to those things that are essential to the existence of the Government, what objection is there to this provision? Our only power in the premises at all is the war power. We are doing this as a war measure; we are doing it because the food that we are endeavoring to have produced is essential to the successful prosecution of the war; in other words, to the very existence of our Government itself. This, then, becomes an investment that is made for the existence of the Government and the return is made for the existence of the Government. It stands upon at least as solid a footing as a tax to pay the salaries of the usual officers of the Government.

But, Mr. President, I do not desire to take issue with the Senator from North Dakota concerning the wisdom of it. I would not be at all averse to making the lien simply a lien upon the land and not upon the crops to be grown. The difficulty about that is that a very much larger measure of risk is undertaken by the Government than under the provision which I have proposed. I am very willing, however, to take the judgment of the Senate in respect to that. The urgency is great, the necessity for immediate relief is imperative, and I trust that the Senate will give its assent to the provision in substance at least.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the need of the Government is never so great with its immense power of taxation that it is compelled to void the obligation of contracts between private citizens or to destroy the law of a State itself. The exigency is not such that when the State of Montana has declared that an instrument filed, which you may call a mortgage or a trust deed, upon land shall be a first lien and a notice to all subsequent purchasers, the Government can come in and loan to the owner of the land a sum of money for seed or for any other purpose—for this is a matter of subsistence, as well—and make the second lien, the lien in favor of the Government, superior to the lien in favor of the individual. As between the two, the Government can afford the loss, if there is going to be a loss, far better than the individual, because the Government can recoup itself by a system of taxation. The individual has no such right.

While I believe we should protect the rights and interests of the Government and give it a lien, if necessary, I do say that to do so as proposed in this case would be a great injustice, even if it were legal, and I deny its legality. I deny that Congress has power to enact a law that will void the legislative enactments of a State with reference to the liens which it allows to be put upon land within that State; and I think, if I had time, I could find sufficient authority to sustain that contention. For instance, our own State long ago even held that a State law which made a personal-property tax a lien superior to a first mortgage was void, and that the State had no right, after a mortgage was once put on a piece of property, to declare that a personal-property tax which was levied upon the cattle of a farmer could be made a first lien upon the land, superior to a prior mortgage that had been recorded under the laws of the State. I would, therefore, suggest, both upon the legal ground and upon the ground of fairness, that the Senator from Montana modify his amendment in such a way as to provide for the loan being a lien upon the land—there is no objection to that—in the order of the filing, and a first lien upon the crop that is to be raised from the funds which are loaned.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am not inclined to take the narrow legal view of the question which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] takes. I think the fundamental principle that should be applied in this case is the principle that is applied in Admiralty cases. While a ship about to depart on a foreign voyage may be mortgaged, yet the supplies which are necessary for that ship in order to enable her to prosecute her voyage and the wages of the crew constitute a lien paramount to that of an existing mortgage. That priority of claim is based upon the theory that it is of the utmost importance, in order to protect the property, to save it, that the wages of the seamen and the claims of material men for supplies furnished in order that the ship may prosecute her voyage be first paid.

The farmers within the arid belt are poor; they are unable to buy seed. If the farm remains unseeded and uncultivated, it deteriorates in value. Take the case of crop contracts which are to be settled yearly by the payment of a certain proportion of the crops raised on the farm. If there is no crop raised, what benefit does the owner who has sold the farm on a crop contract derive? If no crop is raised, he gets nothing at all. Under these circumstances the furnishing of seed accomplishes this: It enables the farmer who has bought a farm to meet a crop contract, and to raise the grain from the proceeds of which he is to pay for the farm. Anyone knows that it is far better that a farm shall be cultivated and cropped than that it be left idle and abandoned, to grow up in weeds and thistles. So, it seems to me, furnishing seed in cases of such dire necessity within the arid belt is in principle similar to furnishing materal and supplies to a ship about to proceed on its voyage; and that to secure the payment for the furnishing of such seed there ought to be a prior lien to that of a mortgage. It is practically preserving and taking care of the property for the benefit of the mortgagee. I put the justification for such a lien upon that broad principle, the same principle, I repeat, that applies in Admiralty law, which is only another form of equity. Furnishing seed to enable the farms to be cultivated and carried on, as they could not be unless that were done, would really be preserving the property for the benefit of the mortgagee; and certainly the mortagee should be satisfied that for doing so the Government should have a lien prior to his mortgage.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the Chair). The Senator from Colorado has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that the lien for labor upon a ship is in the interest of the protection of the property itself. There is a vast difference between that and loaning a man for subsistence. This is not limited to crops. Under this proposed legislation, if a man has had hard luck, the Government can step in and loan him money to provide subsistence for himself and has family for the year, and that loan is made a superior lien to any indebtedness that he may owe to the man who sold him his farm and who may not have received one cent for it.

Now I submit that, as the great Government of the United States can protect itself by taxation from any possible loss, it ought not to take advantage of the individual and vitiate private contracts by declaring that the Government of the United States, because it sees fit to loan a man money outside of cropping—for this is not limited to cropping but is loaning it for any purpose of living—it shall have a superior lien upon the land.

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask the Senator from North Dakota a question: If a man can not get supplies with which to feed himself and supplies with which to feed his horses and mules, he can not cultivate his land. Supplies, therefore, are as much a necessity as is the seed for the land. If a farm is mortgaged, is it better for the mortgagee to have the land abandoned—to have a country of abandoned farms—to have on the land a farmer who can not support his family, who can not feed his horses and his mules than to have a lien placed upon it in order to furnish the seed, preserve the land, and enable the farmer to continue his operations?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but it would be a great deal better for the Government of the United States to take that chance, if there is a chance to be taken, than for the great Government of the United States to force upon the private individual any loss that might be sustained.

Mr. NELSON. I am not shedding any tears for the mortgagees in North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know the Senator is not shedding any tears for anyone. However, if the Senator himself were going to frame the law, I do not believe for a single moment that, as a lawyer and as a humanitarian, he would provide that the Government of the United States should vitiate a contract which an individual has made with some one else and compel him to stand the loss if there is any loss involved. The Government can go ahead and loan the money; it can loan with security or it can loan without security; but if the Government loans, let it at least take the chance that an individual would take. It ought to be willing to take a greater chance, because it can recoup itself by taxation, which the individual can not do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. As I understand the Senator from Colorado is likely to speak in opposition to the pending amendment, I have asked his indulgence that I might offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has hitherto suggested he would propose his amendment to the bill; it has been read for information, but has not yet been formally proposed.

Mr. WALSH. I understood it had been proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana now offers his amendment, which will be read.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me, after conferring with one or two Senators I ask further to modify my amendment, in order to abbreviate the discussion, by striking out the words "prior and paramount to all other claims, secured or unsecured," and to insert in lieu thereof "and on the crop grown."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. As proposed to be modified, the amendment would read:

any advance so made shall be a lien upon the land to be seeded and on the crop grown.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Montana now send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. WALSH. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. FALL. The amendment has been read. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I ask that the proviso to the amendment which I have just offered may also be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, which the Secretary will read.

Mr. NELSON. Before that is read, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Montana read as he has modified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Montana as he now presents it.

The SECRETARY. In the proper place in the bill, Mr. WALSH proposes to insert the following amendment:

The sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the relief of farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by them, to loan from the fund by this section created to farmers within such region, to enable them to provide themselves with seed, fodder for animals, and supplies necessary to their subsistence, amounts not to exceed $500 to any one person. No advance shall be made under this act except to owners of lands or to a tenant, with the approval of his landlord, or to bona fide homestead claimants, who propose to cultivate the lands occupied by them, nor in any amount in excess of $5 per acre of the lands to be seeded. Any advance so made shall be a lien upon the land to be seeded and on the crop to be grown. In the case of advances to homestead claimants, failure to repay the same when due or within such period thereafter as may be by the said Secretaries prescribed, shall make subject the entry of the delinquent to contest and cancellation and the land to entry by any applicant who shall tender the amount due.

To which Mr. FALL offers the following as a proviso:

Provided, That $2,000,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be deposited in the banks in the State of New Mexico, which may be designated by the Secretaries, to be loaned to the live-stock breeders of that State who are the possessors and actual users of permanent range and water ordinarily sufficient for the maintenance of the full number of live stock thereon; $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to assist said breeders in the present emergency caused by drought and scarcity of feed and pasture and high price of cottonseed cake and like feeds. Loans shall be made by such banks, upon approval by the Secretaries, in sums not to exceed in any case the net market value of the stock animals owned by the applicant, and the loan to run in no case for the period of more than one year and to bear 6 per cent per annum interest. The loan shall be secured by a mortgage or trust deed upon the live stock of the applicant, and such mortgage or trust deed shall contain the power-of-sale clause authorizing the Secretaries or the bank, under their direction, to sell such stock for the repayment of the loan. The Secretaries are hereby authorized to require that the proceeds of such loan shall be applied as they may direct: First, the discharging of prior incumbrances upon such live stock incurred during the year last preceding the date of the loan; second, to purchase necessary food for same; third, to provide additional pasture, care, and protection for same and for all or either of such purposes and for such other purposes as will in his judgment best serve to preserve breeding cattle, sheep, and goats in such State.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The amendment was drawn originally for another portion of another amendment and where the word "his" is used it should be "their," as it is intended to apply now to both of the Secretaries, and where the Secretary read "$5,000,000" it should be "$2,000,000," that being the amount intended to be deposited.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in response to a question asked by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] I attempted to give my reasons for opposing this measure. The Senator seemed to think that the answer which I made was out of proportion to the scope of the question which he asked, and I therefore yielded the floor.

Mr. President, this character of legislation, in my opinion, can not be defended as a war measure or for any other reason. It proposes to convert the United States into an eleemosynary institution and make its Treasury the source of remedy and benefit for all famines, whether they occur by reason of natural conditions or because of the indifference of the individual. I do not mean to say that this amendment as drawn goes so far, but it points the way that necessarily will lead to that result.

I think that this amendment ought to be entitled "An act to encourage the spread of drought over the United States," because, having attempted to limit the amendment to the western half of the United States, its author very readily strikes out the limitation when it is contended that there is equal need for its application east of that line.

Mr. Hoover has informed the people of the United States that the food situation is practically solved for the present; that, owing to the abundance of our crops and to the conservation of foodstuffs by the voluntary action of the people of the United States, no crisis in foodstuffs need be expected. I can not very well contrast the gloomy account of widespread drought, failure of crops, and the practical destruction of the well-being of large sections of the United States with this optimistic and most assuring statement of Mr. Hoover. Perhaps they may be reconciled; I do not pretend to say.

Mr. President, I am aware of the fact that locally drought conditions have occurred this year that are very serious in the immediate vicinity where they prevail. It may be that their effects have been so complete as to make it necessary that the people in those afflicted regions shall be assisted by such an amount of grains for seed purposes as may be necessary to enable them to cultivate their fields for the ensuing season. If that be so, I quite agree that in the present exigency it is the duty of the United States to come to their relief, provided their respective States fail or refuse to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I recall, the Agricultural appropriation bill passed a few weeks ago provided a large sum of money for the purpose of purchasing seed for farmers in those districts where drought or other causes had left them without resources to procure it.

Mr. THOMAS. My attention was called to the fact a few moments ago that the provision to which the Senator refers can be found in the pending bill, the objection of the Senator from Montana to it being that it requires first-class security, which will defeat its purpose, since those who ought to be benefited by it could easily secure everything for their needs by the use of such security elsewhere.

Mr. President, I have said that under existing conditions it might be, and probably is, the duty of the Government to come to the rescue of these people by furnishing them with such seed wheat and other seed grain as may be necessary, due to the drought. If this amendment were designed for that purpose I would be perfectly willing to support it, but solely because of the fact that we are at war, because the States are perhaps unable to grant this relief, and because a large crop is one of the essentials for the successful prosecution of the war. This amendment, however, proposes no such thing. It proposes to appropriate some $20,000,000 to be loaned in sums not to exceed $500 to people in the drought-stricken regions and to be used by them to secure sufficient seed grain for their purposes, the loan to become a lien upon the land and upon the crop.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] made, I think, the very sensible suggestion that, at present wheat prices, $500 would not secure sufficient seed to go very far. I believe that is right. I do not know what the seed wheat will cost the Government. Generally speaking, the Government pays more for these things than individuals, notwithstanding it is a quantity purchaser; but at $2 a bushel $500 would secure 250 bushels. I do not know very much about farming, but I imagine that 250 bushels of seed wheat would hardly be sufficient for more than 200 acres of land—something in that neighborhood. The farmers in the West, as a general thing, have holdings much in excess of 200 acres. A great many, of course, have farms of smaller dimensions; but, generally speaking, 250 bushels of wheat to the individual is, in my judgment, insufficient. How much better it would be for the Government to purchase the wheat, give it to these people, and let them sow it and raise crops accordingly.

It may be, Mr. President, that another drought will succeed the one that has just prevailed and which may still be prevailing. That will lead to the necessity for another loan, and for the same reasons, provided that we are still at war with Germany.

Mr. President, I said in answer to the Senator from Montana—and I wish to repeat the statement—that, in my judgment, not a dollar of this money will ever be paid back into the Treasury. We are simply going through the form of a loan. I do not question the statement of the Senator from Montana that a similar experiment has proven successful in Canada; but the laws of Canada are very different from those prevailing here, and I do not think the political influence of the voter extends quite so far. If we loan $20,000,000—and this will only be the first step—we will have a deficiency bill very shortly, one item of which, in all probability, will cover quite as much more if not a sum in excess of 100 per cent of the amount carried by this amendment, and which will be found necessary because of the exigency presented by the purposes for which this amendment is designed.

There is one great difficulty about a promissory note; it will mature at some time; it draws interest, and the time passes very quickly to the debtor who is obliged to meet the maturing paper with the accruing interest. Now, if that is at all difficult, since the Government has assumed the task of helping people out of their misfortune, how easy it will be, how natural it will be to apply to Congress for relief and how certainly will that relief be extended if it is asked for. We know by experience how these things go. The farmers all vote; they have what is called political influence; they can—as they are now organized quite extensively—get up a Nation-wide or a State-wide campaign and send identical telegrams to Members of Congress just as well as the labor unions can do so, or the American Bankers' Association, or the National Tariff Association, or the National Sugar Manufacturers' Association, or the Woman Suffrage Association, or the Cotton Association, or the other various combinations, all of which resort to that method of influencing Congress. We know by experience, Mr. President, what that means; but Uncle Sam is the creditor, so what is the difference?

That, however, to my mind, is not the most sinister feature of this proposed legislation. It establishes a precedent which other pursuits will necessarily take advantage of; and why should they not? It is true that the farmer is indispensable to our civilization; I grant you that he is more indispensable to it than any other class of people; but we have some other indispensable classes. They are engaged in manufacturing, in engineering, in the practice of the law, and I might mention a great many other occupations, for they are extremely numerous, which, with the exception of manufacturing, are languishing now, because of war conditions, and those who depend upon them for a livelihood find themselves in a drought of lack of opportunity. Now, why should not the Government of the United States, in an agricultural bill or in some other sort of a bill, provide for the making of loans to these people and for the taking of liens upon their holdings or their business, and by that means become a universal Father Bountiful, with the Treasury of the United States bearing the burden?

I see no difference—possibly because I am too obtuse to see it—between a farmer suffering from the necessities of life and needing governmental sustenance and a mechanic or an engineer. The difference is not in kind; it is only in degree. If the Goverment has become an eleemosynary institution, created for the purpose of filling its Treasury with taxes in order that it may relieve from suffering and from want and from embarrassment all of its citizens, why discriminate between the farmer and the rest of our population?

Mr. President, here is a bill, just introduced in the House of Representatives, consisting of 190 pages. It is entitled:

A bill to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

I have not had time to read it, but as far as I have gone it seems to me to be well designed to squeeze out all of the blood that can be found in individuals and corporations in this country, and by that process secure an annual revenue of eight thousand millions of dollars for the Government of the United States.

Unfortunately, I am a member of the Finance Committee. To-morrow we begin to hear from those who are going to be affected by this document—the taxpayers, the men who have to support the manifold activities of the Government of the United States and pay the expenses of this war. This bill is demanded by the inexorable financial conditions consequent upon this supreme crisis. It is not presented willingly. Those who have spent three months in its preparation have performed a most grudging and unwelcome task, knowing that whatever they may do they must encounter not only the opposition but the resentment of taxpayers. They have the right, I think, to insist that the money which we propose to take from them, if we can get it, shall be expended economically and properly in the prosecution of this war, something which we have not done and something which, if the past be any guide for the future, we will not do so long as individuals at home want a part of this money and can present sufficiently attractive schemes to secure it.

Mr. President, I do not mention this for the purpose of reflecting at all upon the author of this amendment, who, I know, believes in his heart of hearts that the money which his amendment carries is not only a war appropriation, but is one which is absolutely essential for the purpose mentioned therein, and I concede that the purpose is a laudable one, but do not let us hug to our souls the delusion that we are lending money to the farmers that we are going to get back. If the Senator will amend his amendment so as to provide for the outright purchase and delivery of seed wheat to the suffering farmers in the drought-stricken region I will support it. I know it will cost more than this twenty millions, but it will have subserved a purpose that I do not think can be subserved by the amendment itself, and in addition to that it will be absolutely free from the danger of becoming a precedent for the appropriation of money to other classes of our citizens suffering or claiming to be suffering similar misfortunes and needing, therefore, governmental interference.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico has offered an amendment which has nothing to do with crops in drought-stricken regions, which is designed to be applicable to the stock breeder and the stock raiser. Now, the stock breeder and the stock raiser in that section of the State of New Mexico which has suffered from this dry season have precisely the same right to ask the Government of the United States to come in and make up their deficiency, provide them with some new cows and some new calves and some new forage and some more land for them to graze upon, that the farmer has to ask the Government to let him have the rest of this money as a loan for the purpose of helping him out of his unfortunate situation. And, Mr. President, the people in the towns of New Mexico whose foodstuffs have been diminished by this drought, whose dependence upon the stock-raising interests of the immediate vicinity has been largely increased, whose cost of living has been magnified in consequence of this visitation of nature, have the same right to come to the Congress of the United States and ask for appropriations out of the National Treasury to tide them over until prices can be stabilized, until the money which we have loaned to the farmer to get his wheat may find its fruition in next year's crops, and until the new herd of calves that are to spring into existence from the beneficent use of these $2,000,000 may get old enough and fat enough to be crucified as beef steers.

I might go still further and be entirely within the range of perfect consistency in indicating the logical extent to which legislation of this kind can and will go as time shall pass.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have listened with a great deal of interest, as I always do, to the Senator from Colorado. The Senator stated that if this amendment should be amended so as to make this a donation rather than a loan, he would support it.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In order to avoid a dangerous experiment?

Mr. THOMAS. Among other things.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that there is less danger in setting a precedent of giving than there would be in loaning? Does not the Senator think that the people would be more inclined to come and ask for a straight-out gift than they would for a loan?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator, I think, misunderstands me. I contend that this is a gift anyhow, and with all due respect to the Senator I believe in making a gift directly, instead of making it under false pretenses.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thought the Senator did not mean that, because he said that if we would make it a gift he would vote for it, but that if we made it a loan he would vote against it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will vote for it if you make it a gift, because that is square from the shoulder, and everybody understands it. I will do it also because of the statements here made that in view of war conditions this seed wheat is absolutely necessary at present; and I am quite willing to recognize that exigency and provide that the Government shall itself provide the wheat for the purpose, whatever it may cost.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator that seed wheat is absolutely necessary; but while it does not apply at all to my section of the country and my constituents will not share in the benefactions, I do not think it would be exactly fair to the farmers who are asking for the loan to propose to give it to them, because they are not asking for a gift, and in my judgment they do not want a gift. I think it is a perfectly proper function of the Government in times of stress like the present to go to the assistance of a large element of the people whose labor and production is so vital to the salvation of the world at this particular time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not so sure that the people of Mississippi will not get part of this loan. The hundredth meridian has been obliterated, and I think the drought is going to spread over a great part of the East before all of the money shall have disappeared from the Treasury. As I said, I quite agree that there is an emergency in some places. I am not at all afraid of offending the farmers of my section by offering to give them seed wheat instead of loaning them money to buy it themselves, especially as I think I can explain to them that there is a distinction without a difference. In other words, let us do what the immediate emergency requires and do nothing else. That I am perfectly willing to do; that, I think, should be done; but let us do away with the ceremony of advancing money of this kind under the guise of a loan, and with the expectation that any part of it is to come back to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from New Mexico, but I see that he is not in the Chamber, the reason why his amendment is limited to the State of New Mexico. As I understand, the claim is made that similar conditions prevail in other States. If that be so, it would seem that if this legislation is wise or proper it ought to be broad enough to afford adequate relief to all sections instead of being restricted to but one State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it not a fact that the State of New Mexico has raised something like $750,000 to assist its ranchmen and stockmen, without any assistance from the Government?

Mr. FALL entered the Chamber.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from New Mexico is here now, and he can explain that better than I can.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from New Mexico, who has just entered the Chamber, will answer the question I just propounded. I was just inquiring why it was that the Senator from New Mexico, in the preparation of his amendment, limited its operations to his own State.

Mr. FALL. The amendment, as, of course, the Senator understands, is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, which is general in its operations. I explained at some length yesterday the conditions affecting the southwestern part of this country—that is, the western part of Texas, New Mexico, and particularly the southern portion of that State which we call the breeding range, and all or a portion of Arizona—those three States, or a portion of those three States. I limited the operation of my amendment to New Mexico simply because I thought I was peculiarly cognizant of the conditions existing there and of the relief necessary, and the other States are represented by their Senators here; and unless they think that the conditions are the same, or that the proposed relief which I ask by my amendment is the proper relief, of course I have no desire to force any such measure upon them.

In my State, however, in so far as furnishing seed and necessaries of this character to the farmers is concerned, we have, as the Senator knows, a very small farming area, comparatively speaking. We have a very large area of public domain. The Legislature of New Mexico immediately upon the declaration of war appropriated $750,000 for war work. Included in the program was the purchase of seed, and the assistance of the farmers needing the seed and needing other assistance, and propaganda, offering the farmer all inducements to raise additional crops of wheat, and particularly beans, food articles of this kind. The provisions of this bill would afford relief to any extent that further relief was needed; but the use of the money provided in these general appropriations being restricted to feedstuffs or to the production of feed and of fodder, it would be entirely inapplicable in reaching the conditions under which the stockmen of New Mexico are now suffering. For that reason I have offered this amendment, phrased as it is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has just submitted a number of arguments against the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, as well as the amendment thereto submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. Sufficient facts have not been presented, as I view the case, to enable the Senate to act intelligently upon the questions involved in these amendments. It may be that the situation is so extreme as to require Federal legislation, but I have not been sufficiently advised to enable me to act affirmatively upon this matter. I concede that it is necessary that the agricultural interests of our country be considered. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that those who till the soil and produce the things essential to life are perhaps the most important element in our community and in our national life. The farmers always have been and always will be vital to the maintenance and progress of a State. I have sometimes felt that the manufacturer and the capitalist have been the special favorites of Congress and that the agriculturist has been the victim of unjust and discriminatory legislation.

In this great struggle, in which our Nation is required to perform an important part, the prosperity of the agriculturist is more than ever necessary. We must have food not only for the people of this Nation but we must in part supply the requirements of our allies. Whatever, therefore, can legitimately be done to aid the cause of agriculture should be done. But, as I have stated, there is not sufficient data presented to enable the Senate—or, at any rate, it is not sufficient to enable me—to determine what legislation is necessary. If there are sections in the United States suffering from drought, and if there are farmers who are in want, certainly this bill is not sufficiently comprehensive to meet the situation. A measure already has been passed under which the Agricultural Department may make certain advances to the farmers to enable them to secure seed wheat. As I have understood the statement made by a number of the Senators, there are farmers who have lost their crops and are abandoning their entries and moving to other sections of the same or to adjoining States. This bill, as I understand, is designed primarily to afford relief to these persons. It is manifest that this measure will utterly fail to accomplish any satisfactory result. The small amount provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana would be of but little benefit in most instances. It would not permit a return to the abandoned farm and enable the farmer to rehabilitate his place, to maintain himself and his family and to procure the necessary seed for the coming year.

Mr. President, if there is any widespread disaster threatening the agriculturist, or if the farmers are confronted with ruin, then a broad and comprehensive plan should be provided that will reach the situation and afford suitable and adequate relief. The amendment under consideration utterly fails to accomplish that result.

The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is limited to the State of New Mexico. It provides for Federal relief for certain stock growers within that State. Such legislation is certainly local and in that sense discriminatory. If the stock growers of the United States need Federal help, then a suitable and comprehensive measure should be reported instead of a narrow and sectional one. It might be said in passing that, with the price of steers ranging around the $200 mark per head, there does not seem to be much need of giving bounties and bonuses to the producers of cattle. The high prices which other products command in the market will stimulate production more than appropriations, to be filtered out through departments, bureaus, and the hands of a horde of Federal employees.

Mr. President, war seems to breed the spirit of paternalism. Everywhere is found the cry for governmental support. Initiative is being destroyed, private capital in many parts of the country is being driven from legitimate fields of endeavor. Appeals are constantly made to the Federal Treasury for the support of almost every conceivable enterprise. Under the pretense that some enterprises contribute to the successful prosecution of the war, efforts are made to secure large appropriations. Much of the attention of Congress is devoted to appropriating money, and the aggregate of the amounts carried in the appropriation bills is so stupendous as to stagger the imagination of most of us. I have had occasion heretofore to challenge attention to the reckless and prodigal manner in which appropriations are made, but my experience is that it is easier to secure an appropriation than to pass almost any other form of legislation.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just called attention to the revenue bill reported to the House, which provides for the levy of more than $8,000,000,000 of taxes for the fiscal year of 1919. No revenue bill was ever introduced in any legislative body in the history of the world providing for an amount so enormous but that will perhaps prove to be less than one-third of the expenses of the Government for the fiscal year just mentioned. From the information conveyed to us from the various departments of the Government the expenses for the coming year will amount to approximately $25,000,000,000. It means that in addition to the enormous sum taken from the people by taxation double the amount will be demanded of the people in the form of loans. Where this vast sum is to come from many do not pause to inquire. It will be no easy task to obtain $8,000,000,000 in the form of taxes. The raising of this amount will bear oppressively not only upon business but upon all classes of people. The capacity of the people to pay taxes and subscribe for Government bonds is limited by the savings of the people. When we remember that immediately before the war the entire amount annually available for investment and for savings by all of the people of our country was approximately $5,000,000,000, and that from this sum all savings were yielded and all investments, improvements, and so forth, were met, the difficulty of raising $25,000,000,000 within a single year will then become apparent. This vast amount can only be produced from the earnings and savings of the people. Already there are evidences of financial disturbances in many sections of our country.

The war activities have brought prosperity, at least apparent prosperity, to a few sections of our country. In those sections in which shipyards have been established, munition plants have been built, and manufacturing plants are engaged in producing articles required by the Government in its war work there is an abundance of money. Business has been congested into a limited and narrow circle, and that has resulted in draining those sections of our land in which there are no war activities. The result is that in many States business is stagnant, money is difficult to obtain, and industrial conditions are far from satisfactory.

It is contended that farmers in some sections and stock raisers in New Mexico are in need of financial aid because their business has been unprofitable. Other sections and people in other industries and employments could with perhaps equal merit claim governmental support in their behalf. In many sections of our country industries have been destroyed by the war. Many industries which are alleged to be nonessential have been ruthlessly crushed by the great war machine. I am not complaining because war has disturbed our industrial conditions and has led to a curtailment of activity in many business circles. It is folly to insist that business shall continue as usual. The nonessential industries must yield. Many of them will perish. The resources of our land must be devoted to the winning of the war. It is impossible for many enterprises that were profitable before the war to continue during the progress of the war. There are, however, thousands and tens of thousands of individuals who have had their business greatly impaired or destroyed since our country entered into the war.

In every section there are thousands of individuals who are compelled to turn their attention to new channels and to engage in employment with which they were unfamiliar. The building trade is practically destroyed, and thousands of men who have given their lives to construction work and the erection of buildings, and so forth, are now confronted with ruin. There are many enterprises, the continuance of which is necessary, that have felt the effects of war and are threatened with destruction. It is impossible for the Government to supply the money to revive and maintain all of the enterprises and plants and business undertakings of the country. We shall have to bear with fortitude the vicissitudes resulting from the war. The Treasury of the United States can not meet all the demands which will be made upon it. Doubtless there have been and will be meritorious schemes proposed calling for Federal aid which have been and will be denied. Unquestionably there have been appropriations made which were not only not necessary but wholly devoid of merit, and I have no doubt but what others of like character will be made in the future. For myself, I shall attempt to conserve the financial strength of the Nation to enable it to prosecute this war and shall oppose appropriations which I do not regard as essential if not vital in this great crisis. As stated, the amendments under consideration are not supported by sufficient data to justify their adoption, and they are not comprehensive enough to give relief if relief is required. Therefore I shall feel constrained to vote against both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico has not offered an amendment to make up anybody's losses or to give anybody a cent out of the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise, nor has the Senator from Montana offered any such amendment, as I understand. We are not here as beggars; those of us from New Mexico are not. New Mexico has appropriated and expended as much money in war work as the State of Utah, or more. So much for that. The proposition is simply to do what we have done time and time again in one form or another. We are not even making donations to assist flood sufferers in this bill. We are simply providing money for the States the treasuries of which have been depleted by their contributions to the necessary war work and the treasuries of which have not received any relief by having war prosperity within their boundaries.

Something like three or four years ago, as I remember, a proposition was advanced here for the creation of a fund of $150,000,000 to assist the cotton farmers of the South. Finally, before congressional action was secured, I think, the agitation resulted in the deposit by the Treasury of the United States in the banks of the South of the full sum of $150,000,000, through which the people of that section of the country were able to tide over the hard times due to conditions over which they had no control, which were oppressing them, possibly, as the conditions over which the people of the drought-stricken country have no control now are oppressing them.

The products of these States are absolutely necessary. They are necessary for the winning of the war. The importance of preserving the basis for the rehabilitation of the cattle business, the stock business in this country, everyone should recognize. The whole world must be restocked with cattle and with other stock after this war is over. It is not necessary for me to dwell upon these necessities. The great breeding ranges are being absolutely depleted. What are you going to do about it? The States are unable to meet the conditions. The Senator, not denying that the conditions exist, not denying that some relief should be offered or received from some source, simply standing upon the theory that it is not the business of the United States to do it because it might set a precedent, would allow the cattle to die. Where he would secure the necessary breeding stock for furnishing the farms of the East and the great Middle West I have no idea. Possibly he has; but with what funds would they be secured finally? Shall they be allowed to die, and shall the people be compelled to walk out, as they are walking out of some portions of my State now, with all that they possess upon their backs, after they have expended three or four years of time and every dollar of money they had or were able to secure in the attempt to make a homestead to settle the great West? They are walking out of the State, and yet it is said that no relief should be granted. The rural banking system has failed them, for this reason: The Wichita Bank, for instance, has refused to loan money to the men who need it, because they need it. That is what it amounts to. In New Mexico they have established the rule that because of the drought they will not loan money upon patented lands. If it were not for the drought the owners of the patented lands would not need any money. This is our great benevolent Government and this is the operation in my State of the very thoughtfully considered and well-worked-out rural-credits banking system!

Is any relief to be extended to these people, or not? If so, what other proposition has the Senator to offer, in lieu of that submitted by the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. FALL. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kellogg	Norris	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Fall	King	Phelan	Townsend
France	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Gerry	Knox	Pomerene	Vardaman
Gore	Lenroot	Ransdell	Walsh
Gulon	Lodge	Shafroth	Watson
Hale	McCumber	Sheppard	Wilfley
Henderson	McKellar	Sherman	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names, and there is a quorum present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana. On the amendment to the amendment a viva voce vote was taken, and the Chair was in doubt. The Chair will again put the question.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May we have the amendment read as it is now presented to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. The sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the relief of farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by them, to loan from the fund by this section created to farmers within such region, to enable them to provide themselves with seed, fodder for animals, and supplies necessary to their subsistence, amounts not to exceed $500 to any one person. No advance shall be made under this act except to owners of lands or to a tenant, with the approval of his landlord, or to bona fide homestead claimants who propose to cultivate the lands occupied by them, nor in any amount in excess of $5 per acre of the lands to be seeded. Any advance so made shall be a lien upon the land to be seeded and on the crop to be grown thereon. In the case of advances to homestead claimants failure to repay the same when due, or within such period thereafter as may be by the said Secretaries prescribed, shall make subject the entry of the delinquent to contest and cancellation and the land to entry by any applicant who shall tender the amount due: Provided, That $2,000,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be deposited in the banks in the State of New Mexico, which may be designated by the Secretaries, to be loaned to the live-stock breeders of that State who are the possessors and actual users of permanent range and water ordinarily sufficient for the maintenance of the full number of live stock thereupon, to assist said breeders in the present emergency caused by drought and scarcity of feed and pasture and high price of cottonseed cake and like feeds. Loans shall be made by such banks, upon approval by the Secretaries, in sums not to exceed in any case the net market value of the stock animals owned by the applicant, and the loan to run in no case for the period of more than one year and to bear 6 per cent per annum interest. The loan shall be secured by a mortgage or trust deed upon the live stock of the applicant, and such mortgage or trust deed shall contain the power-of-sale clause authorizing the Secretaries, or the bank under their direction, to sell such stock for the repayment of the loan. The Secretaries are hereby authorized to require that the proceeds of such loan shall be applied as they may direct. First, the discharging of prior incumbrances upon such live stock incurred during the year last preceding the date of the loan. Second, to purchase necessary food for same. Third, to provide additional pasture, care, and protection for same, and for all or either of such purposes and for such other purposes as will in their judgment best serve to preserve breeding cattle, sheep, and goats in such State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] which I transfer to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I desire to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD].

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I am paired with him during his absence and therefore withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote on this question.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] which I transfer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and will allow that announcement to stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] which I will transfer to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and let this announcement stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). In the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. GOFF] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on important business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Chamberlain	Kendrick	Pomerene	Vardaman
Curtis	Kirby	Ransdell	Walsh
Fall	McCumber	Shafroth	Wilfley
France	Norris	Sheppard	Wolcott
Henderson	Nugent	Sterling
Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Trammell

NAYS—31.

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Benet	Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Kenyon	New	Smoot
Brandegee	King	Owen	Sutherland
Calder	Knox	Penrose	Thomas
Gerry	Lenroot	Phelan	Townsend
Guion	Lodge	Pittman	Watson
Hale	McKellar	Simmons

NOT VOTING—41.

Baird	Gore	McNary	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Gronna	Myers	Swanson

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 13 add the following:

SEC. 5. That the proviso to paragraph 2, section 7, of the act approved April 5, 1918, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That every such advance shall be secured in the manner described in the preceding part of this section and (except in the case of an advance secured by a loan for agricultural purposes or a loan based on live stock) in addition thereto by collateral security, to be furnished by the bank, banker, or trust company of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of a value at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the corporation) equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the corporation. The corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment can be very easily explained. Under section 7 of the War Finance Corporation act it is provided that banks which have made loans to farmers and stockmen or those engaged in industries of the prosecution of the war may obtain advances from the War Finance Corporation to the extent of 75 per cent of the collateral which the borrower from the bank may put up. Then the proviso to section 7 is that the bank may obtain 100 per cent provided the bank puts up other collateral equal to 33 per cent of the loan which the bank has made to its customer. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the bank to obtain 100 per cent from the War Finance Corporation without putting up 33 per cent additional collateral; that is, upon loans made to farmers and live-stock men for agricultural purposes and live-stock purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to understand the Senator. My understanding is that he proposes to make no changes in the present law with respect to any loan that may be made by the War Finance Corporation except those that are made in the interests of agriculture and live stock.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is entirely accurate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The only change is that they may loan to the bank 100 per cent of the amount which the banks have loaned to the farmers without the bank having to put up this extra 33 per cent collateral.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is the sole purpose of the amendment which I offer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the bill that the Senator introduced and referred to the Finance Committee?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is changed in the form of an amendment, except I will say to the Senator that before offering it as an amendment to this bill I modified it in one particular. At the suggestion of some Senators who have given the matter a good deal of thought, I eliminated the production in the bill which I formerly introduced so as to make no reference to the time of the loan, and to leave that in the discretion of the War Finance Corporation. The War Finance Corporation under existing legislation may make the loan for from one year to five years.

Mr. SMOOT. As I read the bill when the Senator introduced it, I was rather impressed with the wisdom of the proposed legislation, but I have not gone into the details of it, I will say to the Senator, and I thought perhaps the Finance Committee ought to pass upon such legislation rather than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course, I was of the same mind when I introduced the bill, because I directed its reference to the Finance Committee, and it was referred during the semirecess of the Senate with the idea that it would be ready for action as soon as a majority of the Senate returned to Washington. But the Finance Committee has not met to consider the bill, and the situation is of such an urgent character that I have put it in as an amendment to the pending bill if the Senate feels that it should be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides for loans for agricultural purposes. I understood a member of the War Finance Corporation to say that this legislation was wanted in order that the corporation might loan to live-stock men direct. Would not the Senator be satisfied if it applied only to loans made upon live stock and not include agricultural purposes? I do not want to go into a discussion of the reasons why, but I do know that that was the main reason why the legislation was asked for, and I think it ought to be confined to that, and not for agricultural purposes. If the Senator will modify his amendment, I shall have no objection to it. Agricultural purposes could be construed to cover most anything.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I sought to get sufficient recommendation from the Treasury Department upon the measure, but for some reason it has not come to the Finance Committee. However, I saw in an evening paper a couple of days ago a statement that this measure had received the approval of the Treasury Department, and I have been privately informed that it does meet the approval of the Treasury Department. I can state from my personal knowledge that it meets with the appropal of some—I may say all—of the members of the War Finance Corporation Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that it meets with their approval as far as loans based upon agricultural purposes are concerned?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. How far will that go, I ask the Senator; and what does it mean? I ask that question because of the fact that the Farm Loan Board is to-day loaning money upon agricultural land, for buildings upon the land, the purchase of machinery, and for many other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The difficulty is that the Farm Loan Board can not make a loan for less than five years, and this is to cover loans where they do not want to encumber their property for a period of five years or more, and it is to enable the War Finance Corporation to take care of the banks.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that that is the five years' provision in the farm-loan act to which the Senator refers, but would it not simplify matters very greatly and would it not benefit the farmers if that provision in the law were modified so as to permit the loan for one year or longer? If the Senator will permit me further, since this discussion came up I called attention to that provision of the farm-loan act which defines the purposes for which the board may make loans, and among them the purchase of the land, the payment of existing debt, the making of improvements, and so forth, and the purchase of implements. Then, Congress provided also that the Federal Farm Loan Board would have full power to determine what was to be included in the term "implements." I have since the noon hour made inquiry at the Farm Loan Board. I find that while they have defined implements in a general way as including farming implements, tools, and so forth, yet, as matter of practice, when an application is made for a loan the applicant is obliged to state the purposes for which he wants the money, and if, as a matter of fact, included among the items is the item of seed it is allowed and the loan is made, and it is only a question when the amount of seed would seem to be out of all proportion to the quantity of land. It seems to me that if we were to amend that law, so as to permit a loan to be made by the Farm Loan Board for one year or longer, it would relieve very many of the farmers who are now in distress.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in reply to the statement of the Senator from Ohio I should like to make this suggestion: The farm-loan act contemplates a long-term loan upon real estate, and we organized farm-loan associations, where people come together and enter into a joint responsibility. It is intended to cover a very much more permanent class of credit than that contemplated by this amendment. The farm-loan act requires a man to put a mortgage upon his farm in order to obtain a little money to seed the land, even though he might have a large number of live stock on which he could give a chattel mortgage, or might have other kinds of collateral security. He may have Liberty bonds or other collateral which he puts up to the bank. It seems to me that the agricultural provision should be retained, because the banks are carrying such paper now. They have been advancing money to the farmers, and the farmers have used a good deal of it in buying Liberty bonds. The banks are carrying these loans.

I should like to make this further statement in order that Senators may understand the importance of this amendment. Under section 9 of the War Finance Corporation act, which enables the War Finance Corporation to make loans direct under exceptional circumstances, it has established agencies at Kansas City, Mo., and at Dallas, Tex., for the purpose of making loans directly to the stockmen and, I think, to the farmers as well. In making such loans the War Finance Corporation advances 100 per cent of the paper. Of course the property, the margin of security, is still behind the paper, but the corporation loans 100 per cent of the paper. If the same farmer or the same stockman takes that paper to a bank and the bank indorses it, and goes to the War Finance Corporation with it, it can only get 75 per cent, unless it is willing to put up 33 per cent additional collateral. In that case it may get 100 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is this: If there is a farmer, we will say in Utah or in any other State, owning 10 head of steers, and their value is $100 apiece, or the value of the 10 is $1,000, under this amendment the farmer could borrow $1,000 on those steers.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I know that is not what the Senator stated, but it is exactly what could be done.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No, Mr. President, I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I will explain it to the Senator, and I think he will then understand that that is exactly what this amendment means, and what it was intended for.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, let me explain it. Under section 7 of the War Finance Corporation act the man who owns 10 steers worth $100 apiece may go to a bank and, if he could borrow from the bank $1,000 on the 10 steers, the bank could only borrow $750 from the War Finance Corporation, or 75 per cent of the face value of the note. Under this amendment, if a bank holds a note for $1,000, secured by those 10 steers, the bank can apply to the War Finance Corporation and can secure $1,000, or the full face value. I am quite sure that the Senator from New Mexico will agree that that can be done under the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Such a thing can be done, but it is not the intention that it shall be done, and the chances are ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent that it never will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says, then that the corporation may require 5 per cent or 10 per cent or 15 per cent security above the face value of the note instead of 25 per cent, as is required under existing law. I wish to say to the Senator that I know that the object of this legislation is to allow the banks to receive from the War Finance Corporation every dollar that they loan to the cattleman, for the banks in the western part of the country have not the capital or security to put up 33⅓ per cent more than they receive from the War Finance Corporattion on the amounts required by their customers. Their whole capital stock would be consumed in a little while, as well as their security.

I am not objecting to this, but I want the Senate to know what it means. Of course, I do not believe that the War Finance Corporation will advance money to a bank whose credit they think is not sufficient, over and above the security they hold, to make the loan a good one; I think they will take good care to see as to that; but I want the Senate to know just what the amendment means; and the amendment is exactly as I have stated it to be.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am inclined to believe that if Senators desire to ascertain what the amendment means, I shall have to explain it to them, for I do not see the meaning of it at all as does the Senator from Utah. The case stated by the Senator from Utah is possible under this amendment, but it is not the purpose of the amendment, and such will not be its result.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask whether or not his amendment provides for agricultural products other than live stock?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The legislation applies to all agricultural purposes, including the live-stock industry.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is what I desired to know.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me—and I should particularly like the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—this amendment does not specify the amount that shall be loaned in any case. The War Finance Corporation is not required to loan 100 per cent in any case.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is not required to take any class of security in any case. Under the provisions of the amendment, if it shall be adopted, the War Finance Corporation can require additional security any time it desires to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the banks?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From the banks; in advance of making the loan or at any time afterwards.

The case stated by the Senator from Utah is not founded upon any business experience in the West or anywhere else. Not a bank in the West loans 100 per cent upon the value of the property which is taken as security. If a man owned 10 steers worth $1,000, and he wanted to get a loan from a bank, he would not expect that bank to loan him $1,000; and I do not know of any bank in the West or anywhere else that would do so. The banks all require a reasonable and safe margin, or, at any rate, a margin which they think is reasonable or safe, or they would not make the loan. So under this provision the bank would make the loan on the 10 steers, but the probabilities are that it would not loan over $600 or $700 on the steers. There would be plenty of margin there.

When the bank gets the paper which is secured in that way, it indorses the paper, becomes security for the payment of the money, and then goes to the War Finance Corporation and gets 100 per cent, or the face value of the paper; but back of that paper is not only the security which the farmer or the stockman has but the indorsement of the bank as well.

Moreover, Mr. President, there is nothing in this amendment or in this act, if the amendment be adopted, which will require the War Finance Corporation to make any of these loans. It simply proposes to confer the power to loan the 100 per cent without requiring 33 per cent additional security.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As I understand, Mr. President, it proposes to give the banks the opportunity to extend a favor to the farmer if they so desire; that is all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And if the bank is willing to indorse the paper which it has, and if the War Finance Corporation is satisfied with the safety or with the business solvency of the bank and the physical property behind the paper, then the War Finance Corporation is authorized, under the bill as it will be amended, to advance 100 per cent to that bank.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Whereas now it could not advance more than 75 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. At the present time it could not advance over 75 per cent.

The urgency of the situation has been made perfectly clear to the Senate. It seems to me that this renders the business of the War Finance Corporation perfectly safe; that it leaves it upon a safe foundation. I sincerely hope that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from New Mexico and mine do not in any way conflict, with this single exception: The Senator from New Mexico thinks that the War Finance Corporation will not lend 100 per cent on such notes, while I think they will. I think that is the object of the legislation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from Utah will excuse me——

Mr. SMOOT. I know there is nothing in the amendment which compels it to do so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator will allow me, I expect the War Finance Corporation to loan 100 per cent of the face value of the farmer's note.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I expect the bank to have enough business talent in it to require that behind the note there shall be more than 100 per cent of value.

Mr. SMOOT. That question I have not discussed, Mr. President, for I am quite sure that no bank would loan to a farmer or to anybody else unless it thought at least that it had ample security to insure the payment of the note. What I said was that under the present law the War Finance Corporation can only advance 75 per cent of the face value of a note indorsed by a bank. That is the present law, but when this proposed law passes it will authorize the War Finance Corporation to advance 100 per cent on the face value of the note when indorsed by a bank.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is to this amendment, and I wanted Senators to understand just exactly what it meant. That is, as I am quite sure, what it means; and that is the intention of the amendment and the intention of those who are asking for the legislation. Their object is that the War Finance Corporation shall advance 100 per cent to the bank, so as not to take the bank's security which they are holding for other purposes, but taking, it may be said, the credit of the bank to help the local bank to loan the money to the stock grower or to the farmer. That is what this proposed legislation means.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is quite right in his recent statement, and I am thankful to him for referring to the good which will result from this proposed legislation; but I do not want any Senator to get the impression that loans will be made upon the full value of the assets behind them, for that is not the intention, and it is not the belief of those of us who have been interested in preparing this amendment that that should be done. We expect the banks to go on in the usual way in making their loans, with the usual margin of security behind them; that then the bank shall put its indorsement upon the paper, and that we shall give to the War Finance Corporation permission to advance 100 per cent on the paper if upon its investigation it deems that the security behind it is ample. That is all there is to it. The banks of the country need this relief; and I, therefore, sincerely trust that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment prposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the pending bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator yield to me to present a proposed amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present an amendment to the pending bill on which I will ask for a separate vote when the bill reaches the Senate. In the meantime I should like to have the amendment printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am about to offer as an amendment to the pending bill a bill which was passed by the Senate almost unanimously some weeks ago, known as House bill 9248, and entitled "An act to prevent extortions and to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;" in other words, it is the rent-profiteering bill.

Senators are familiar with the very unpleasant situation that exists with respect to that bill as between the two Houses. I do not care to discuss the merits of the measure; I would not even presume to offer it now as an amendment to the pending bill if it were not for the fact that when it was before the Senate it received the almost unanimous approval of the Senate. It represents the work of the Senate District Committee, and with very slight exceptions it represents the unanimous approval of that committee. The amendment as presented is the bill as it passed the Senate some weeks ago, beginning on page 8, at line 9, and ending on page 21, line 8, inclusive. There are 19 sections in it. I do not ask to have it read, unless the Senate so desires.

The amendment offered by Mr. POMERENE is as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"That by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, and for the successful prosecution of the war, to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia for and during the period hereinafter set forth, and the President, through the Rent Administration, is authorized to make and promulgate such rules, regulations, and orders, not inconsistent herewith, as are essential effectively to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or bring within the scope of this act properties wherein, during the period of its limitations, the character of the same has been changed or converted from dwelling to business use.

"SEC. 2. That the rent for real estate within the District of Columbia shall not be in excess of the following rates herein provided for:

"(a) The rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which real estate was let on October 1, 1917, or (b) if not rented on that date, the rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which it was thus last let before that date, or (c) if real estate was not rented on or prior to October 1, 1917, then it may be rented for an amount equal to 7 per cent net on a valuation equal to the assessed valuation of said property for taxation plus 50 per cent thereof. Said rents above prescribed shall be the standard rents for said several classes of property, and prima facie shall be reasonable rents therefor. Elevator and other service as furnished on said date shall continue.

"SEC. 3. (a) That where the landlord or lessor incurs expenditures on the improvement or structural alteration of such real estate (not including expenditures for decoration or repairs), an increase of rent at the rate of not exceeding 7 per cent per annum on the amount so expended shall not be deemed to be an increase of rent for the purposes of this act.

"(b) Any transfer to a tenant of any burden or liability previously borne by the landlord or lessor shall be treated as an alteration of rent, and where, as a result of such transfer, the terms on which such real estate is held are, on the whole, less favorable to the tenant than the previous terms, the rent shall be deemed to be increased, whether or not the sum periodically payable by way of rent charge is increased; and any increase of rent as a result of any transfer to a landlord or lessor of any burden or liability previously borne by the tenant, where, as the result of such transfer, the terms on which such real estate is held are, on the whole, more favorable to the tenant than the previous terms, shall be deemed not to be an increase of rent for the purposes of this act.

"(c) Wherever any increase of rent is by this act permitted, no such increase shall be due or recoverable until 30 days after the landlord or lessor has served upon the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to make said increase, accompanied by (1) a statement of the improvements or alterations effected and their cost, where the increase is on account of such expenditures; or by (2) a statement showing particulars of the increased amount charged, where the increase of rent is on account of such increase in rates.

"The landlord or lessor and lessee may make contracts or leases for daily, weekly, monthly, or yearly rental of real estate so as to net the landloard or lessor not exceeding 7 per cent per annum for the use or occupancy thereof on the value of the property as fixed by its assessment for taxation. Such value for the purposes of this act shall be one and one-half times said assessment so long as the present basis for taxation continues, but if such basis is changed the value for the purposes of this act shall be changed accordingly, so that the rent shall in such case not exceed 7 per cent per annum on the actual value of the property.

"SEC. 4. That no person shall in consideration of a grant, renewal, or continuance of any contract or lease require or receive the payment of any fee, fine, premium, bonus, or other consideration in addition to the rental stipulated in said grant, renewal, or continuance.

"SEC. 5. That no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate, now or hereafter held or acquired by oral agreement or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate, or as it may be modified under the provisions of this act, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law, or, the lease having expired, that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord for the occupation either by himself or his wife, children, or dependents while in the employ of or officially connected with any branch of the Government, or has been disposed of to a bona fide purchaser for his own occupancy: and where such order has been made, but not executed before the passage of this act, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this act had been in operation at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this act; and all remedies, at law or in equity, of the lessor based on any provision in any oral or written agreement or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold are hereby suspended while this act shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this act: Provided, That any tenant who, in the opinion of the rent administrator, is charging exorbitant rents in subletting the premises, or any part thereof occupied by him, either furnished or unfurnished, shall be deemed an undesirable tenant within the meaning of this section, and shall be liable to forfeiture of his lease.

"SEC. 6. That if the rent of real estate as herein permitted shall not equal 7 per cent per annum net on the valuation thereof as herein determined, then upon application by the landlord it may be increased by the rent administrator so as not to exceed said amount.

"In fixing rents of real estate there shall be taken into account the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance actually incurred, and of insurance, and of light, heat, water, and elevator and other service where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation and nonoccupancy. Rents in excess of the rates herein provided are hereby declared to be against public policy and void, and if accrued or paid after the passage of this act such excess may be recovered by the lessee, his assigns or legal representatives, if action shall be begun therefor within six months after the expiration of his tenure.

"In the case of hotels or apartment houses, or of rooms or apartments in hotels or apartment houses, which have not been rented to tenants or guests on or before October 1, 1917, the rates shall be fixed by the rent administrator at the same prices, as nearly as may be, as are permitted to be charged for similar accommodations by hotels or apartment houses of the same character similarly situated in the District of Columbia. Apartment houses which have been or may be converted into single rooms or suites, furnished by or for the owner or lessee, and rented for transient occupation, shall be classed as hotels and be subject to all the ordinances, rules, regulations, and laws of the District of Columbia relating to hotels.

"SEC. 7. That when the real estate is rented furnished, the rent administrator shall authorize a fair and reasonable rental for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate, not exceeding 30 per cent of the value of such furniture, and shall be subject to the approval of the rent administrator.

"In cases where a joint charge is made for the use of real estate, furnished or unfurnished, and for food, meals, or board, the rent administrator shall ascertain what part of said joint charge should properly be made for the use of said real estate, and it shall not be in excess of the rates herein authorized. In no case shall the furnishing of food to lessee or lessees be included in the lease, but such agreements shall be separate and apart from any agreement for the rent of real estate.

"SEC. 8. That landlords and managers of hotels, apartment houses, and boarding houses, and others letting rooms or apartments, furnished or unfurnished, shall keep conspicuously posted in said hotels, apartment houses and boarding houses, rooms or apartments, cards to be furnished by the rent administrator showing the rates authorized or approved by the rent administrator for the said rooms or apartments, and said cards shall recite that said rates are so authorized or approved by the rent administrator.

"SEC. 9. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a rent administrator to be confirmed by the Senate, who shall be a resident of the District of Columbia and a citizen of the United States, and who is not engaged, directly or indirectly, in the business of buying, selling, leasing, or renting real estate in the District of Columbia. He shall have full power and authority, and it shall be his duty, under the direction of the President, and subject to the provisions of this act, and the rules and regulations herein authorized, to fix, revise, and change, upon his own motion, or upon the application of any person or party in interest, including mortgagees, the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupancy of any real estate in the District of Columbia now or hereafter to be rented, leased, sublet, transferred by assignment of lease or contract, or with respect to which a tendency may be created or extended, or by any new lease or contract. Any and all orders or findings of the rent administrator fixing or revising and changing rents shall be final and shall take effect as of the date of the application filed with the rent administrator: Provided, That any person or party in interest, including mortgagees, may, within five days, prosecute an appeal from any such orders or findings of the administrator to the real estate board of equalization and review of the District of Columbia, which, for the purposes of this act, is hereby created the board of rent appeals, under and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be made by the President governing such appeals, and said board is hereby authorized to confirm or modify the said orders and findings of the rent administrator in any way the facts may justify not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations governing appeals herein provided for. The orders and findings of the rent administrator shall continue in full force and effect until such appeal shall be decided by the board of rent appeals, which decision shall be final: Provided further, That if the landlord or lessor be not satisfied with the orders, findings, or decisions of the board of rent appeals, he shall have the right to begin suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the tenant for such modification of said orders, findings, or decisions, or for such further sum as he may deem himself entitled to, and if said tenant be not satisfied with said orders, findings, or decisions, or if he shall claim that the rent paid by him has been excessive, he shall have the right to begin suit in said court against the landlord or lessor for such modification of said orders, findings, or decisions, or for such excess rent, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to hear and determine all such controversies, and said orders, findings, and decisions shall be prima facie evidence of the correctness and reasonableness thereof and of the rent charges so fixed and of the facts therein contained.

"Before fixing, revising, or changing the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupancy of any real estate, five days' notice of the motion or application made for that purpose shall be served personally upon the parties in interest, or by leaving copies of said notice at their usual place of residence within the District, and if residing out of the District, by mailing a copy of said notice by registered letter to the person receiving the rent at his last known place of business, and if his place of business be not known, then by posting a copy of said notice in the office of the rent administrator.

"SEC. 10. That all persons letting real estate shall be required to keep books of account, open at all times to the inspection of the rent administrator or his authorized agents, showing the rents charged and paid, including the names of the tenants or renters, and also an itemized statement of the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance, insurance, light, heat, water, and elevator or other service, where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation or nonoccupancy. No item shall be considered by the rent administrator in fixing the rent of property which does not appear in such account.

"SEC. 11. That the said rent administrator and the board of rent appeals are hereby empowered to summon witness and require the production of books, papers, and accounts, and to administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses so summoned, and take testimony respecting the matters covered by this act.

"SEC. 12. That any person who shall knowingly receive rents on real estate in excess of those permitted by the terms of this act or who shall knowingly by any sale or transfer or by any act or subterfuge evade or attempt to evade its provisions shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

"SEC. 13. That any vacant house or building not occupied by the owner or a tenant, or the representative of the owner or tenant, for a period of three months immediately preceding the passage of this act, or for a period of five months after the passage of this act, may be commandeered by the President of the United States for the period of the war and six months thereafter, and used for war or Government purposes, the rentals and conditions of tenancy to be fixed by the rent administrator in his discretion, subject to appeal to the board of rent appeals and to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as provided in section 9 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That the rent administrator shall receive a salary of $4,000 per year, and he is authorized to employ one assistant at a salary not to exceed $2,500 per year; two field men at salaries not to exceed $1,800 per year each; and two clerks or stenographers at salaries not to exceed $1,200 per year each, provided said assistants and clerks shall be necessary for the proper administration of his office.

"SEC. 15. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act for any reason shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 16. (a) That the term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms or suites of rooms, and every improvement and structure whatsoever, and every person and part thereof situated and being in the District of Columbia, and any and all estates or rights therein or thereto.

"(b) The expressions 'landlord,' 'lessor,' or 'tenant' include any person from time to time deriving title under the original landlord, lessor, or tenant.

"(c) The words 'person' or 'party' when used in this act shall be construed to include individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, corporations, societies, or bodies corporate.

"(d) The words importing the masculine gender shall be held to include other genders, and the words importing the singular number shall include the plural number, or vice versa.

"SEC. 17. That this act shall remain in force for one year after a proclamation of peace shall have been made by the President of the United States.

"SEC. 18. That to relieve, as far as possible, the congestion in the District of Columbia because of war activities, any commission, bureau, or any subordinate parts thereof, or other governmental agencies, not reasonably necessary to be located or continued within the District of Columbia shall be removed and transferred by order of the President to such convenient place as he may designate.

"SEC. 19. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, one half of said sum to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that if this amendment should be adopted it will necessitate this bill going to conference and involve a very great delay in its final enactment?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think so; if I did I would not offer it for that reason.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken for the reason that this proposed legislation to be effective must go into operation before the 1st day of October, and the rent-paying public, which constitute some 80 per cent of the people of the city of Washington, are interested in having it go into effect if at all by that time. I feel very sure that the conference committee, certainly the members of the committee on the part of the Senate, will recognize that fact in their actions in the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I agree that we are justly entitled under the circumstances in adding to this bill the amendment which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] proposes. Ordinarily I would oppose it as strongly as possible, but conditions in the District are getting simply deplorable, and, unless Congress takes some action before the 1st day of October to meet the rent situation, they are going to be more deplorable.

I know that this amendment is offered in perfect good faith and that it is not intended to embarrass the ultimate passage of the pending bill in the least. I think probably the bill will have to go to conference, whether this amendment is added to it or not. The Senate has added quite a number of amendments to it which will very likely necessitate a conference. The important amendment we have put on in the Senate I am satisfied will be concurred in by the other body before the bill goes to conference, and will not be in conference to delay its passage.

The situation between the two Houses seems to be such that there is not any hope of legislation along the line of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio unless we can do something of this kind. I believe it is well to have this proposition submitted to a committee of conference of both Houses who can not be charged with bias for or against the Senate bill, except that the conferees of the Senate, of course, might feel bound by the action of the Senate in the adoption of this amendment. So, I am hopeful, Mr. President, if this amendment is put on the bill, that long before the 1st of October we will have legislation, not only along the line of the amendments which have already been put on the bill by the Senate, but along the line of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Feeling this way, I consider that I am justified in giving my support to the proposal to add this amendment to the bill.

I am satisfied that if it should develop in conference that there would be an indefinite delay of the pending bill by reason of this amendment, the Senate conferees would then feel justified in receding from the amendment and bringing in an agreement; but that any other body of the Congress, under the conditions that are confronting the people of the District of Columbia and the employees who must be brought in here in order to carry on the war business of the Government, would prolong the consideration of this measure unnecessarily I can hardly conceive. I believe that we will get legislation of a reasonably satisfactory character along the line of this amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, I do not think for a moment that the amendment was offered with any idea of delaying the final passage of the pending measure, but has the Senator considered the probability that the House upon the conclusion of the revenue bill will not have a quorum here until well into October?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the House, having pending before it important legislation of this kind affecting the District, which is confronted with an intolerable condition, can not maintain a quorum in order to pass it, it is a sorry reflection upon Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. I only had in mind the current report in the papers of their taking a recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that Members are very anxious to get away, but I can not believe that anybody there will consent to a recess on the lines of a gentleman's agreement such as we have had heretofore until this legislation is disposed of.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, as bearing upon the conditions in the District, which I think require immediate legislation, I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read a letter which I received last night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., September 3, 1918.
